Since Jan. 1 a second reduction in wages has been announced by several operators in the lumber industry. Recently the McCormick Lumber Company of Washington announced a wage cut of $1.00 per day, following close upon a previous reduction in wages of 25 per cent. This second slash would bring the wage for common labor down to $2.60 per day. The loggers however, are not accepting these conditions kindly, and at McCormick the entire woods crew have walked out. Further labor troubles are expected to follow if the wage slashing policy of the lumber interests continues.

The National Association of Wheat Growers at Chicago recently decided to adopt a co-operative plan of selling their product in an effort to save approximately 55 cents a bushel through the elimination of the middleman. This action was taken at the final meeting of the executive board. The growers plan to establish central receiving stations in each State where the farmers may send their wheat and obtain a receipt for it. From these stations the wheat will be sold direct to the millers. Stations for receiving wheat also will be established at all large seaports to handle export trade, it was said.

Strike-breakers have been employed by the Great Western Power Company in Alameda and Contra Costa Counties in an effort to break the strike of line and power men. There are no mechanics among the strike-breakers; they are mostly boys and broken-down men forced by hunger to accept the first job offered. The Great Western barn in Oakland is being used to feed and house the strike-breakers. Following a minor disturbance at Martinez in which two strike-breakers were slightly injured, a platoon squad was detailed to strike duty by Oakland police officials. The trouble at Martinez was brought about by a strike-breaker who, without provocation, fired a gun at a committee of peaceable [illegible]. One of the strikers was arrested. At the Feather River construction camps of the Great Western Company, Brotherhood men went "over the hill" on snow shoes in answer to the strike call, the [illegible] being snowed in.

INFORMATION WANTED

Fred Klein, who left New Orleans on the S. S. "Lake Ferona" in March, 1920, is inquired for by his father, L. Klein. Address, care the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, 543 Bienville Street, New Orleans, La. Charles Thoresen, Agent.

The Burden of Proof Is on Our State Officials

The wealth of the State belongs to the people of the State. It is ours to give. It is ours to withhold.

State officials demand $81,000,000 of our money in the next two years.

This is $33,000,000 more than was authorized by the 1919 budget.

It is $15,000,000 more than the 1919 budget, plus all the money the people at the November elections authorized the administration to spend.

We are now told that the people must give this money to the administration or prove that the administration does not need it.

A Fair Proposition

Let us be reasonable. The people's money belongs to the people. It does not belong to the State office holders. Our present revenues are sufficient to cover a budget equal to that of 1919-21 with its war-time prices and $18,000,000 in additional expenditures for schools, dependent children and bond interest.

If State officials want more than this, if they are asking us to support State Boards that Governor Stephens admits should be abolished, and if they are asking us to spend money on other useless functions, we are entitled to know it.

Our Double Tax Burden

Already our per capita payment for State government each year, according to the U. S. Census Bureau report (1919) is	$11.24
The average per capita payment for State government throughout the United States (1919) is	6.05
The excess per capita cost for every Californian is	$ 5.19

This is 89 per cent. above the average State government cost, and now we are asked to load on our backs an additional $15,000,000.

Who Gets this Money?

We are told that the school teachers will get this money, but this is not true. They are already provided for in the amounts voted by the people at the November elections. We are told this money is for dependent children and bond interest, but this is not true. These sums we have already authorized. We are told that the people must prove that this additional money is not needed, but this is not true. The burden of proof is on the State office holders who are now asking $81,000,000 of the people's money to spend in the next two years.

These are the facts:

No revenue deficit exists. No ad valorem tax is needed.

Ask your legislator to demand that the State live within its income.

"The power to tax is the power to destroy"

Domestic and Naval

Creation of a separate bureau of aeronautics in the Navy Department, to control all aviation, is proposed in an amendment to the naval appropriation bill recently offered in the Senate.

The Boston four-masted schooner "Horace E. Munroe," bound in ballast from Lisbon to Jacksonville, Fla., has been abandoned at sea in a sinking condition. Captain John Hall and the crew of thirteen men were rescued and landed at Gibraltar.

Following return of the Pacific naval fleet from Southern American waters, one hundred and twenty warships and auxiliaries will be mobilized at San Diego. The greater part of this great fleet will remain in the vicinity of Southern California and engage in spring battle practice until departure of the battleships and destroyers for the South Seas and Australia, which is scheduled for July.

With the arrival at New York from Havana, of the steamship "Munamor," news was received of the blowing up at sea of the four-masted schooner "Charles G. Endicott" by a floating mine, and of the escpae from death of the ten members of the crew. The explosion occurred northwest of Cape Maysi, Cuba, according to Captain J. I. Cook of the "Endicott." The crew sailed from the scene of the wreck in small boats, arriving late the next day at Antilla.

Battleships won the World War, and will win future wars, in the opinion of Admiral von Tirpitz, at one time head of the German fleet and Minister of the Navy during the critical struggle. He reaffirmed his faith in above-water craft during an interview, and declared that, strangely enough, owing to the peculiarities of the war, the submarine had been given greater importance than was warranted by the facts. England, Japan and the United States recognized the fact, he said, that in the world struggle for supremacy outside of Europe land forces would be secondary. He asserted such a struggle must necessarily be one of sea supremacy, but added that the sort of maritime forces to be constructed in the light of the experiences of the latest war, was a great open question.

According to recent Washington reports, proposals to relieve the starving thousands in China have been made. A mercy fleet of Shipping Board vessels manned by volunteer crews of American naval reservists and carrying stores of grain donated by American farmers and hauled to the Pacific Coast by volunteer railway employes, would soon set sail across the Pacific under plans outlined to Secretary Daniels by a committee headed by Carl Vrooman, former Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. Vrooman said the grain already had been donated by farmers in the West and that members of the railway brotherhoods had offered to give their services without pay to haul it to the west coast. The naval [illegible] about the proposal and arranged for an immediate conference with Shipping Board [illegible] about getting the [illegible]. He told the [illegible] he felt certain there would be no difficulty in getting enough naval [illegible] to volunteer for the trip without pay or contingent on [illegible] granting the pay [illegible] the men to be provided with transportation, quarters and food by the navy.

News from Abroad

According to late information from Paris the director of public assistance states that the total population of France diminished 4,000,000 during the war. The official made a plea for expenditure on children because that outlay preserved indispensable vital forces.

A great increase in the numbers of unemployed is reported from Scandinavia. Outbound vessels are leaving the various ports in ballast. German competition is becoming a serious problem in these countries, and several industries are closing down or only working part time.

General conditions in Australia are reported favorable. Congestion at the ports is much improved, although further strikes are considered possible. Emigration and immigration are both normal, and the general labor situation is quiet. There are, however, some serious strikes among the coasting seamen, and a threatened strike in the coal industry. Fall of general prices and cost of living continues gradually.

A condition of unemployment exists in Belgium, and construction is inactive. The extension of steel workers' houses is planned to include Liege and Charleroi. The lack of requirement for space results in the outward tonnage exceeding demand, and sixty ships are reported idle at Antwerp. Emigration is increasing, due to the transit traffic from eastern European countries. Decreases in wages have occurred, and a general lowering is expected. Many strikes are reported to be in evidence.

In a recent report from Amsterdam, it is learned that a daily aeroplane service for mail and passengers will be established between Amsterdam and Paris to begin April 1, 1921. French, Dutch, and Belgian machines are to be used and Brussels will be the the one intermediate stopping place according to present arrangements. It is proposed to resume the service between Amsterdam and London, and Amsterdam, Berlin, and Copenhagen on March 1, 1921.

Industries of Finland are awakening to new life in a number of branches. During the season now ended, 500,000 standards (990,000,000 board feet) of timber was exported from Finland. England received 220,000 standards and the Netherlands 60,000 standards, the rest went mainly to Belgium, France, Spain, Denmark, and Germany. The prices were very good, although the general fall in prices during the last few months also made itself felt on the timber market. Prospects for the coming season are satisfactory.

According to a report from Consul Frank W. Mahin, the preliminary arrangements are completed for constructing another extensive shipyard in Amsterdam, covering 62 acres, to be located near the Amsterdam entrance of the North Sea Canal. It will include all the latest machinery and devices for shipbuilding and repairing, and will be able to deal with ships of at least 25,000 tons. In addition, the Netherlands Shipbuilding Company, with extensive works in Amsterdam, is enlarging its construction and repairing plant. On completion of these extensions, Amsterdam will have facilities for building and repairing ships equal in size, wtih few exceptions, to the largest now afloat.

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

ALASKA FISHING REGULATIONS

Official Orders Close Certain Waters to Commercial Operations

General Regulations

By virtue of the authority vested in the Secretary of Commerce by the act approved June 26, 1906, the following regulations are hereby promulgated:

1. During the inspection of the salmon fisheries by the agents and representatives of this Department they shall have at all times free and unobstructed access to all canneries, salteries, and other fishing establishments and to all hatcherics.

2. All persons, companies, or corporations owning, operating, or using any stake net, set net, trap net, pound net, or fish wheel for taking salmon or other fishes shall cause to be placed in a conspicuous place on said trap net, pound net, stake net, set net, or fish wheel the name of the person, company, or corporation owning, operating, or using same, together with a distinctive number, letter, or name which shall identify each particular stake net, set net, trap net, pound net, or fish wheel, said lettering and numbering to consist of black figures and letters, not less than 6 inches in length, painted on white ground.

3. All persons, companies, or corporations engaged in canning salmon shall forward to the Bureau of Fisheries, Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., three copies of each and every different can label which it is designed to place upon the canned product.

4. The curing and preserving of the so-called belly of salmon, which results in the waste of a large proportion of the edible part of the fish, is a wanton waste within the meaning of section 8 of the act of June 26, 1906, and those who engage in this practice will be reported for prosecution as provided for in the act.

Regulations Governing Fishing in the Waters of the Afognak Reservation

A proclamation by the President of the United States, promulgated December 24, 1892, created the Afognak Forest and Fish Culture Reserve, which is now a part of the Chugach National Forest. The proclamation states that—

There is hereby reserved from occupation and sale, and set apart as a public reservation, including use for fish-culture stations, said Afognak Island, Alaska, and its adjacent bays and rocks and territorial waters, including among others the Sea Lion Rocks, and Sea Otter Island: Provided, That this proclamation shall not be so construed as to deprive any bona fide inhabitant of said island of any valid right he may possess under the treaty for the cession of the Russian possessions in North America to the United States, concluded at Washington on the thirtieth day of March, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

Warning is hereby expressly given to all persons not to enter upon, or to occupy, the tract or tracts of land or waters reserved by this proclamation, or to fish in, or use any of the waters herein described or mentioned.

Sections 3 and 7 of "An Act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor," approved February 14, 1903, as amended by the act of March 4, 1913, transfer the supervision and control of the salmon fisheries of Alaska to the Department of Commerce.

In the exercise of the authority derived from these sources the following regulations governing the reserved waters herein defined are hereby established and promulgated:

1. No person or persons other than the native Aleuts or other aborigines who are now bona fide residents of Afognak, Spruce, Whale, Dry, and Raspberry Islands, Alaska, will be permitted to fish in the reserved waters. White men married to native women will be granted the same privileges as the natives.

2. Licenses for fishing will be granted to the said natives upon application to the Secretary of Commerce or such representative of the Department of Commerce as may from time to time be designated by the Secretary.

3. The kinds and amounts of apparatus to be used, the places where and the manner in which it may be operated, and the time when it may be employed will be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and will be subject to changes or modifications from time to time at his discretion.

Regulations Governing Fishing in the Waters of the Aleutian Islands Reservation

By Executive order of March 3, 1913, the Aleutian Islands Reservation consisting of "all islands of the Aleutian chain, Alaska, including Unimak and Sannak Islands on the east, and extending to and including Attu Island on the west," was created and set apart for various purposes, including the encouragement and development of the fisheries.

This reservation was placed under the joint jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce and the Department of Agriculture, and among the matters committed exclusively to the Department of Commerce was jurisdiction over the fisheries. Joint regulations for the administration of the reservation were promulgated February 28, 1914, by the two departments concerned. These regulations are still in effect.

In respect to the fisheries it is provided that—

Anyone desiring to enter the reservation for the purpose of fishing, . . . or engaging in commercial fishing, salmon canning, salmon salting, or otherwise curing or utilizing fish or other aquatic products, . . . must first obtain a permit to do so.

Application for permission to engage in fishing or fishery operations should give full information on the following points: Name and permanent address of the person or company desiring the permit; character of business proposed, whether fishing, canning, salting, or otherwise curing fish or other aquatic products; character and extent of proposed plant and its location; method and extent of the fishing proposed, place or places where fishing is to be carried on, and when active operations are to begin.

Yes Bay Reservation

An Executive order of February 1, 1906, is as follows:

It is hereby ordered that the hereinafter described land and water areas in the District of Alaska be, and they are hereby, reserved and set apart as a site for a salmon hatchery, subject to the possessory rights of the natives and of persons claiming title through the Russian Government, also subject to the rights of natives to take fish from the waters and fuel from the forests included in the limits of the reservation hereby established, to wit:

Yes Lake (otherwise known as Lake McDonald) and its catchment basin, its outlet, and a strip of land one-eighth of a mile wide along each shore thereof; Yes Bay, Back Bay, and a strip of land one-eighth of a mile wide along the shores thereof and a strip of land one-eighth of a mile wide on each side of the old Indian trail.

Annette Island Fishery Reserve

On April 28, 1916, the President issued a proclamation creating the Annette Island Fishery Reserve. The proclamation provides that—

The waters within three thousand feet from the shore lines at mean low tide of Annette Island, Ham Island, Walker Island, Lewis Island, Spire Island, Hemlock Island, and adjacent rocks and islets, . . . also the bays of said islands, rocks, and islets, are hereby reserved for the benefit of the Metlakatlans and such other Alaskan natives as have joined them or may join them in residence on these islands, to be used by them under the general fisheries laws and regulations of the United States as administered by the Secretary of Commerce.

Closing Orders

By virtue of the authority vested in the Secretary of Commerce by the act approved June 26, 1906, the following closing orders have been promulgated and are still effective:

1. Yukon River. (Order promulgated Dec. 14, 1918.)

A hearing having been given at Seattle, Wash., November 20, 1918, after due notice in accordance with law, for the purpose of determining the advisability of establishing a salmon-breeding reserve of certain waters in Alaska, and all persons having had full opportunity to be heard, it is hereby ordered, by virtue of the authority vested in me by section 6 of "An Act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska," approved June 26, 1906, that until further notice all fishing for salmon or other fishing in the prosecution of which salmon are taken or injured, in the Yukon River and all tributary waters, and in all waters of its delta to and including the area 500 yards outside each mouth or slough of the delta at mean high tide, be and is hereby made subject to the following limitations and prohibitions in addition to the general restrictions already applicable by virtue of existing laws and regulations:

1. That in 1919, and in each year thereafter unless otherwise ordered in the manner prescribed by law, not to exceed 30,000 cases (48 one-pound cans per case, or the equivalent thereof) of canned salmon, 1,000 barrels (200 pounds net weight each) of pickled or hard-salted salmon, and 200 tierces (800 pounds net weight each) of mild-cured salmon, of all species, shall be prepared for commercial purposes or export; these quantities to be apportioned, after a conference with the local representative of the Bureau of Fisheries, as equitably as practicable among the persons or companies with established plants. Promptly at the end of each calendar week each individual or company shall submit a statement to the said representative of the Bureau of Fisheries showing the number of cases, barrels, and tierces of salmon thus prepared to date, and shall submit also a record of the number of salmon of each species taken daily.

2. That no salmon to be prepared by canning, pickling, or mild curing for shipment from Alaska shall be caught above the junction of the Clear River with the Yukon River near Andreafski.

3. That commercial fishing in the waters of the Yukon delta shall be limited to Kwikluak Pass, commonly known as the south mouth or channel.

4. That the use of traps or pound nets in the Yukon River and its delta is prohibited.

5. That no gill net, seine, or other net used in the Yukon River and its delta shall exceed 700 feet in length.

6. That all commercial fishing, except for local requirements, is prohibited after August 31 of each year.

This order becomes effective January 1, 1919.

2. Copper River. (Order Promulgated Dec. 20, 1918.)

A hearing having been given at Seattle, Wash., November 22, 1918, after due notice in accordance with law, for the purpose of determining the advisability of amending the order of December 29, 1917, effective January 1, 1918, establishing a salmon-breeding reserve and limiting fishing in the Copper River, Alaska, its delta and its tributary waters, and all persons having had full opportunity to be heard, it is hereby ordered, by virtue of the authority vested in me by section 6 of "An Act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska," approved June 26, 1906, that until further notice all fishing for salmon or other fishing in the prosecution of which salmon are taken or injured, in the Copper River and its delta and all tributary waters, Alaska, be and is hereby made subject to the following limitations and prohibitions in addition to the general restrictions already applicable by virtue of existing laws and regulations:

1. Commercial fishing is prohibited in waters of the Copper River delta from 6 a. m. on January 1, to 6 a. m. on June 10 of each year, and in the waters of Miles Lake and Abercrombie Canyon from 6 a. m. on January 1 to 6 a. m. on June 15 of each year.

2. Commercial fishing in the waters of the delta shall be limited to set nets and drift gill nets. No such net shall exceed 800 feet in length. The lateral distance interval between all set nets in the waters of the delta herein referred to shall be not less than 600 feet.

3. All fishing is prohibited from the head of the delta to the foot of Miles Lake at all times.

4. All fishing in Miles Lake shall be limited to set nets. No such net shall exceed 800 feet in length, and only one such net shall be extended out from shore from one location; no offshore nets will be permitted in the lake. Throughout the fishing season the shore of the lake shall be considered as it was on June 15. The lateral distance interval between all nets in Miles Lake shall be not less than 600 feet. No fishing will be permitted along the west and north shores of Miles Lake from the north end of mile 49 bridge to the north end of Miles Glacier, nor along the islands and sand bars between the bridge and the head of the lake.

5. Fishing in Abercrombie Canyon shall be restricted to the use of dip nets operated by hand, such nets not to exceed 16 inches in greatest diameter. No fishing will be permitted at any point on the east side of the canyon or river above the head of the lake.

6. No fishing will be permitted at any time in the waters of the Copper River above Abercrombie Canyon, or in any of the waters tributary thereto, except in the case of local residents who may take limited numbers of salmon for domestic use: Provided, That such fishing shall at no time be upon the spawning grounds of any salmon.

7. No net shall be placed in any other than substantially a straight line.

8. For the purposes of this order, the delta of the Copper River shall be regarded as including all waters south of an east and west line passing through mile 7 on the Copper River & Northwestern Railway at present established, and south of a line 500 yards off the mouth of each slough and outlet of the Copper River bordering with Alaganik Slough on the west and ending with Eyak Slough on the east, including Pete Dahl, Walhalla, Gus Stevenson, Little King Salmon, Castle, Storey, Big King Salmon (or Copper River proper), Eyak, Alaganik, and all streams draining between the mouth of each slough will be regarded as at the edge of the grass banks at the line of mean high tide.

9. The lower end of Miles Lake shall be considered as at the bridge of the Copper River & Northwestern Railway at mile 49. The head of Miles Lake shall be considered as at the point where the river enters the lake, this point to be as indicated by notices posted by duly authorized representatives of the Bureau of Fisheries.

10. Abercrombie Canyon shall be considered as extending from the head of Miles Lake to Tunnel Point on the Copper River & Northwestern Railway.

11. For the purposes of this order the following definitions are adopted: "Stake net," a gill net attached or affixed to piles or stakes. "Set net," an anchored gill net, one end of which may if desirable be fastened to a stake or other object on shore.

This order becomes effective January 1, 1919, and supersedes the order of December 29, 1917.

3. Waters of Southeastern Alaska; Waters Between Cape Spencer and Cape Newenham, Including Bering and Copper Rivers; Kuskokwim River; and Yukon River. (Order Promulgated Dec. 18, 1920.)

Hearings having been given, after due notice in accordance with law, for the purpose of determining the advisability of limiting or prohibiting fishing in certain waters in Alaska, and to amend or modify certain existing regulations, and all persons having had full opportunity to be heard, it is hereby ordered, by virtue of the authority vested in me by section 6 of "An Act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska," approved June 26, 1906, that until further notice all fishing for salmon, or other fishing in the prosecution of which salmon are taken or injured, in all hereinafter-described waters of Alaska be and is hereby made subject to the folowing limitations and prohibitions in addition to the general restrictions already applicable by virtue of existing laws and regulations.

1. Waters east of the longitude of Cape Spencer:

(a) All fishing is prohibited in all salmon streams and their tributaries and lakes.

(b) All fishing, except with purse seines and drift gill nets, is prohibited within 500 yards of the mouths of all salmon streams.

(c) All fishing with purse seines and drift gill nets is prohibited within 200 yards of the mouths of all salmon streams, and all fishing with purse seines and drift gill nets as well as with all other apparatus is prohibited within 500 yards of the mouths of Chilkat River, Chilkoot River, Anan Creek, Hetta Creek, Sockeye Creek, and Naha Stream.

2. All fishing is prohibited in all salmon streams, their tributaries and lakes, and within 500 yards of the mouths of such streams, flowing into the Pacific Ocean or Bering Sea between Cape Spencer and Cape Newenham, except as follows:

(a) Fishing is permitted in Copper River and its tributaries in accordance with the terms of the order promulgated December 20, 1918, which order is continued in full force until September 1, 1921, upon which date said order of December 20, 1918, becomes of no further force or effect, and on and after September 1, 1921, and until further notice, all fishing for salmon, or other fishing in the prosecution of which salmon are taken or injured, in the Copper River, its tributaries and lakes, and within 500 yards of each mouth of the Copper River, is prohibited.

(b) Fishing is permitted at Karluk beyond the zone 100 yards outside the mouth of Karluk River where it breaks through Karluk Spit into Shelikof Strait.

3. On and after September 1, 1921, all fishing is prohibited in the Kuskokwim River, its tributaries and lakes, and within 500 yards of the mouth of the Kuskokwim for other than local use in Alaska.

4. Fishing is permitted in the Yukon River and its tributaries in accordance with the terms of the order promulgated December 14, 1918, which order is continued in full force until September 1, 1921, on which date said order of December 14, 1918, becomes of no further force or effect, and on and after September 1, 1921, and until further notice, all fishing for salmon, or other fishing in the prosecution of which salmon are taken or injured, in the Yukon River, its tributaries and lakes, and within 500 yards of each mouth of the Yukon, is prohibited for other than local use in Alaska.

5. The driving of salmon downstream and the causing of salmon to go outside the protected area at the mouth of any salmon stream are expressly prohibited.

6. The order does not apply to persons taking salmon with rod, hand line, or spear for their personal or family use and not for sale or barter.

7. The waters of the Afognak Reservation are covered by presidential proclamation of December 24, 1892, and the regulations promulgated by authority thereof are not modified or affected by the order but remain in full force.

8. All previous orders of the Secretary of Commerce imposing limitations or prohibitions upon fishing in the waters covered by this order, except as hereinbefore indicated, are hereby superseded.

9. This order becomes effective January 1, 1921.

J. W. ALEXANDER,
Secretary of Commerce.

TO HONOR ERICSSON

Congress has authorized erection of a monument in honor of the great inventor, Captain John Ericsson, to be placed next to that of Abraham Lincoln in Washington, D. C.

The achievements of the American Navy has always been a pride to the American people. Americans of Swedish descent feel proud that one of their own countrymen is the inventor of the propeller, of the Monitor, of cannons, etc. He was intrusted to build the first modern screw-propelled cruiser, the "Princeton," for the United States Navy. This inventive genius was also able to render his adopted country and its navy a most valuable service in the battle of Hampton Roads, when the "Monitor" defeated the "Merrimac," saved the American navy and turned defeat into victory.

The United States Congress and Government have never forgotten John Ericsson's great service to the United States. John Ericsson was on several occasions officially honored and after his death the United States Government sent his remains home to Sweden—which country he never had a chance to visit from the time he became a citizen of the United States in 1845. He died in New York 1889.

In order to fittingly celebrate the fifty-ninth anniversary of the battle of Hampton Roads, the Swedish American Patriotic League of California have decided to give a public entertainment and ball at the Civic Auditorium, San Francisco, on Wednesday evening, March 9, 1921.

The affair should be of special interest to seafarers.

PANAMA CANAL SERVICES

Official Panama Canal reports state that miscellaneous repairs were made at Cristobal and Balboa shops and dry docks on 120 vessels and craft during December; 79 at Cristobal, and 41 at Balboa. Of these, 15 were dry-docked; 8 at Cristobal, and 7 at Balboa. Bunker coal in the amount of 42,675 tons, was supplied to 128 commercial vessels; 38,746 tons to 113 vessels at Cristobal; and 3,929 tons to 15 vessels at Balboa. Seven commercial vessels were supplied with a total of 19,649 barrels of fuel oil at Cristobal. Water, to the amount of 15,772,165 gallons, was supplied to 292 vessels, 12,173,665 gallons to 200 vessels at Cristobal, and 3,598,500 gallons to 92 vessels at Balboa. Sales of commissary supplies to commercial ships, other than those of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line, aggregated $77,701.07, including $4,791.91 for laundry service; these sales were made to 168 vessels at Cristobal in the amount of $52,837.22; and to 119 vessels at Balboa in the amount of $24,863.85. Receipts for tug and launch service totaled $34,144.15, of which $19,330.75 were earned at Cristobal, and $14,813.90 at Balboa. Fees for pilotage totaled $12,635, of which $9,221 was earned at Cristobal, and $3,414 at Balboa.

Money Corrupts Education

In a statement signed by Peter J. Brady, chairman of the Educational Committee of the New York State Federation of Labor, John D. Rockefeller's recent gift of $70,000,000 to the General Education Board is denounced as an attempt to control education of the masses.

Of the $70,000,000, $50,000,000 is to assist colleges and universities increase teachers' salaries and the remainder is to be devoted to the improvement of medical education.

The statement includes excerpts from the report of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, which declares that the Rockefeller fortune was acquired through "withholding of workers' wages," violation of law, cunning and disorder.

"However, apart from the taint which besmirches such wealth," says the trade unionist, "organized labor objects vehemently to its distribution to educational institutions. Intelligent public opinion, especially with reference to the distribution of wealth, whether argued from the standpoint of labor or of capital, will always be influenced by instructions given in secondary and higher institutions of learning.

"Such institutions should be forums of unprejudiced discussion and study under the guidance of faculties freed from the influence of any special interest and especially from the control of those who might seek to stimulate class consciousness by means of insidious propaganda inimical to the best interests of the majority of the people.

"Organized labor is of the opinion that subsidies such as those granted by the General Education Board, even though unaccompanied by written specific conditions or reservations, cannot but undermine to a degree democratic independence in higher educational institutions."

Teachers Command Attention

The publicity department of the American Federation of Teachers, affiliated to the American Federation of Labor, has forced the reactionary National Education Association to make a show of interest in the teachers' welfare.

"Point by point the N. E. A. leaders have taken over the principles of the American Federation of Teachers," it is stated. "They are keen enough to understand that those principles would win the sympathy and probably the allegiance of classroom teachers. They dread the loss of power and prestige which was sure to affect the N. E. A. as soon as the majority of classroom teachers went over to the A. F. T. After several generations of futility and inaction, they have in the past three years become singularly devoted to the ideas of democracy and initiative among teachers, better pay and better teaching conditions, and a greater voice in educational councils and in the N. E. A. itself. They have swallowed practically the whole teacher program of the A. F. T. and are preaching A. F. T. doctrines with unction and force.

"The N. E. A. machine of school administrators has exercised two kinds of coercion; it has coerced or strongly influenced teachers into its own organization; it has coerced or strongly impelled teachers out of the A. F. T. Everywhere throughout the United States the strongest pressure, that of public opinion, has been trained upon the A. F. T. As a result of the lectures delivered by N. E. A. officers on tour the air is full of misconceptions of the type of organization and the aims and achievements of the American Federation of Teachers."

Favors U. S. Coal Mines

The Nebraska House of Representatives has declared in favor of nationalizing the coal industry.

Coal is mined under such varying conditions that it has been found that fixing prices, either by the Government or by market conditions, does injustice in many cases, say the lawmakers. If the price is fixed high enough for the mines having the highest cost of production, the profit to the mines having a lower cost of production is too great, and if the price is fixed by the cost of production at the mines where production is cheapest, the market price is too low for the other mines, resulting either in shutting down the mine or reducing the price of labor.

"The war situation," the resolutions declare, "made it clear that justice to the coal miner and to the coal consumer could be obtained only by nationalizing the mines, thereby enabling the Government to direct the production of coal at the places where it could be produced at the greatest advantage to society as a whole and marketed under uniform conditions, both as to price and to coal miners' wages."

Favors Direct Action

The Market Barometer, one of the many publications issued by financial interests in New York City, expresses editorial sympathy with the direct action policy of railroad managers who would scrap the Railway Labor Board because it insists that hearings shall be held before working conditions are changed. Vice-President Atterbury of the Pennsylvania Railroad claimed that if hearings were held the roads would be bankrupt before a decision was reached.

The Market Barometer says the Railway Labor Board membership are political appointees "of mediocre ability, with no technical training for the task," and that Mr. Atterbury and his associates have "full knowledge of the financial necessities and present conditions of all the roads."

In another section of the Market Barometer, same issue, the editorial position is overlooked and interviews are printed by railroad officials who contradict Atterbury's alarm.

World's Workers

The number of unemployed in Switzerland rose this week from 113,000 to 123,000. Many watch factories and textile industries have closed.

A large mass meeting of unemployed recently met at Calgary, Alberta, where strong resolutions were passed, demanding resumption of trade with Russia.

Civil servants of Austria have made demands upon officials of the government which is causing great alarm, and in the event of the threatened strike taking effect it is believed the whole country will be thrown into a state of chaos.

The School Board of New Westminster, B. C., recently declared vacant the positions of 76 school teachers who struck after refusal of their demands for salary increases. The teachers failed to appear in accordance with an ultimatum issued by the School Board.

A department called Home Office for Social Political Co-operation (Indenrigsministeriets Afdeling for Social-politisk Samarbejde) has been established under the office of Home Affairs in Denmark. This office is to undertake all matters arising in relation with workers of Denmark and the International Labor Organization of the League of Nations.

At a recent trade-union congress at London, England, which was called for the purpose of meeting the unemployment situation, the delegates followed out the executive committee's recommendations. It is stated that adherents of the policy of direct action went into the meeting prepared to make strong demands for a general strike, but were unable to muster enough strength.

Legislation prohibiting emigration of Filipino laborers from the Philippine Islands has been proposed to protect the island's labor supply. Should the Philippine Legislature enact such a law, the thousands of Filipino laborers sent to Hawaii every year to work on the sugar plantations would be prohibited from emigrating. The Bureau of Labor statistics say about 10,000 laborers have gone from the Philippines to Hawaii annually for several years.

The German Federation of Trade Unions, in a manifesto, declares that "slavery, which has been abolished in Africa, is thus to be introduced into Europe." "The German people," the statement concludes, "is not prepared to perish for the benefit of international capitalists. Hatred and exasperation will eat into the hearts even of those who all their lives have fought for an international understanding. Workers of the world, it is your turn to speak!"

The Canadian Brotherhood of Railroad Employes objects to having its charter revoked by the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada and has asked for an interview with officials of the congress. The brotherhood is a dual organization and the congress has been attempting for two years to have it adjust differences with the recognized Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, affiliated with the A. F. of L. The dualists favor the Canadian national idea that employers are exploiting.

Painless Parker

and His Methods

By Painless Parker

I USE every method I can find to improve everything I do. If there is a new way to make dentistry better, I adopt it. I employ every kind of advertising to make the E. R. Parker System in Dentistry known, and thus get more and more people to have their teeth cared for. I don't believe in hiding behind the door, but do believe in coming out and inviting people in.

It is a great privilege to be a dentist, for he can prevent and relieve more sickness than a physician. To remain silent when you are able to do good is almost wicked.

The public is entitled to know what its citizens can do, and I am glad to tell the masses that I can supply them with fine dentistry at prices they can afford to pay.

Pacific Coast Marine

The power schooner "Golden State" has arrived at San Francisco from Kodiak with 230,000 codfish for the Union Codfish Company.

Lumber rates from the north to the Orient have been cut to $10 by the Shipping Board to compete with a recent rate established by the Japanese lines.

Advices received by the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce state that the bark "C. D. Bryant" has put into Balboa leaking badly. The "C. D. Bryant" was bound for San Francisco from Callao.

The Admiral Line has been appointed Pacific Coast agent of the Munson Line, which operates a fleet of Shipping Board steamships from New York to Cuba. This line also operates to Brazil, Uruguay and Argentine ports. Reservations can be made for transportation, passenger and freight, at the Admiral Line offices.

The U. S. Hydrographic office has sent out wireless messages warning ships plying between this coast and the Orient to be on the lookout for a waterlogged Japanese fishing boat, sighted by the steamer "Nile" at a point 400 miles west of the Hawaiian Islands on February 12. The boat had no crew aboard, and is regarded as a danger to navigation.

G. W. Luce, freight traffic manager of the Southern Pacific Company, has announced that, effective February 26, the rate on import shipments of copra to Cincinnati would be reduced from $1.13½ to $1, and on vegetable oil from $1.20 to $1.05. The reduced rates will apply via the Southern Pacific to New Orleans and Southern Railway, also via the East, St. Louis and Louisville and Nashville Railroads.

A reduction of $3 per ton in coal at both bunker stations of the Panama Canal was announced in advices received at San Francisco recently from Governor Harding of the Panama Canal. The announcement states that the price of coal supplied to steamships at the canal will become effective March 1. The new prices will make coal $15 per ton at Cristobal and $17 per ton at Balboa.

A cosy corner on the mud flats at Southampton Bay awaits the steamer "Mandarin," 14,500 tons, which is due to arrive at San Francisco from Shanghai some time within a month. The "Mandarin" was built in Chinese shipyards for the Shipping Board under war-time contract. There are several other steamers building under the same agreement that will follow the "Mandarin" to Southampton Bay.

The "Wenatchee," which is due to arrive at Seattle some time in April, is a 535 of the same class as the "Golden State" and the "Hawkeye State." She will be operated on the northern route to the Orient by the Pacific Steamship Company. Reports from the East, where the "Wenatchee" is rapidly nearing completion, are to the effect that she will cost close to eight and a half million dollars, the most money that has been put into a passenger vessel by this country in its history.

Only five hours will be allowed for the turnaround of the turbine liners "Yale" and "Harvard," in order to make their operation between San Francisco and Los Angeles profitable, according to a statement by General Manager A. J. Frey at San Pedro. In this time, 500 passengers and 800 tons of freight must be discharged, the vessel cleaned and provisioned and the new passengers and freight taken on board. The "Yale" will be ready the last week in April and the "Harvard" two weeks later.

Port Admiral John Wallace of the Pilots' Association has announced that the pilotboats "Adventuress" and "Gracie S." will soon have wireless telephones aboard. A similar instrument will be installed in the pilot's office. Wireless phones have long been needed on the pilot boats, according to Captain Wallace, as ships are forced to lie outside in many instances because of faulty communication especially on foggy mornings. With the wireless telephones at their service, the office can be kept advised constantly of the needs of the incoming ships.

Shipping men of San Francisco will combine with those of the East in an attempt to have officers of the Navy taken out of positions of responsibility in the Shipping Board. It is the opinion of the operators of steamship lines that if the Shipping Board is to continue to function it should do so without Army or Navy officers in positions of responsibility. The Harding administration will be asked to make this change through the association of steamship operators of the United States, according to reports from the East.

After a trip around from Antwerp on which she brought nearly a full cargo, the motorship "George Washington," which is being overhauled at the Union Iron Works, has succeeded in contracting for a return cargo which will fill her holds to within 500 tons of their capacity. Local shipping men are thinking of searching her for the lucky horseshoe. It was learned recently that the "George Washington" will carry 7000 tons of barley from Astoria and San Francisco to Leith, besides 500 tons of flour, Portland to Christiania, and 1000 tons of coffee to Norwegian ports from La Libertad, La Union and Acajutla, Central America.

As a direct result of the scientific conference in Honolulu last summer, the waters between and about the Hawaiian Islands are to be thoroughly surveyed by the United States hydrographic office, according to mail advices from Honolulu. Governor Charles McCarthy, in announcing that the Federal Government would undertake the work as soon as a part of the expense money is guaranteed by the territorial government, recommended to the Legislature that $25,000 be appropriated for the purpose. Representations in behalf of the islands were made before the director of the hydrographic office at Washington by Dr. Herbert E. Gregory, chairman of the Pan-Pacific conference, to whom an appeal was made during the sessions. The vital need of the charting of the island waters was urged on the ground of the expanding trade on the Pacific passing through Hawaii.

Australian and New Zealand wool is being rushed to the United States in an effort to get it into the country before the 45 cents per hundred pounds tariff proposed by Representative Joseph P. Fordney goes into effect. The Eastern market has two years' supply of wool on hand, according to figures published recently, and the market is being held up for the protection of the American wool growers. The Fordney bill is another protective measure. Whether it will pass or not is not certain, but the foreign wool interests are releasing vast quantities which have been held in the hope of a higher market. The first big shipment to arrive at San Francisco came in on the "Tahiti." She brought 5000 bales. Other ships which are rushing wool to the United States are the "Waikawa," 16,000 bales; the "Waihemo," 5000 bales; the "West Mahwah," 10,000 bales. Several others are also said to be bringing Australian and New Zealand wool. Montana wool of last fall's clips, which was held in Montana warehouses in the expectation of an increase in the price, is begging for buyers at 10 cents a pound. The American firms will be forced to part with their products at a loss, if they are to move it at all, according to the opinion of clothing and wool men.

Scientists on the non-magnetic observation ship "Carnegie," which arrived at San Francisco recently after making exhaustive observations in the Pacific and Indian Oceans, state that the Royal Company Islands (noted on many maps and projections as being situated in the Great Southern Ocean, formerly the Antarctic, at a point south of Australia) cannot be located. The scientists state there is a doubt that the islands ever existed. "The islands, if there were such, were discovered seventy years ago by a British mariner and subsequently included in maps and projections," said H. R. Grummann of Lincoln, Neb., one of three observers on the "Carnegie." The "Carnegie" sailed directly over the location and could not find a trace of land, although a sharp lookout was kept. It is the belief of those on the "Carnegie" that the mariner mistook some of the high table ice for the islands, as they declare that the sub-Antarctic region is continually storm covered. They state the clouds are thick and the days dark. Errors in degrees were found in the Indian Ocean, some being several minutes difference from past observations, Grummann said.

Delayed fully a month by adverse weather conditions, the annual movement of Hawaiian sugar to San Francisco is now thoroughly under way, and all tonnage of the Matson Navigation Company has been made ready for the season. This year's crop, according to estimates, will be 575,000 tons. This is about the same as the 1920 crop, and as the Matson Line has relinquished some of the Shipping Board vessels which were operated during the rush last year, all the available bottoms will be kept going at full speed. The "Enterprise," known as the "Hilo ferry," was not seriously damaged in its collision with a ferryboat while sliding off the ways recently, and, completely overhauled, she will go back on schedule March 5. The finishing touches on the "Manulani" and "Manukai," the handsome new 14,000-ton freighters, are being expedited at the Moore shipyards in an effort to have them in commission within a few weeks. In addition to its own eight vessels not including the two uncompleted steamers, the Matson Line will employ six Shipping Board carriers in the sugar trade this spring. They are the "535" liner "Hawkeye State" and the freighters "Hollywood," "Lake Gebbart," "West Keene," "West Nilus" and "Eastern Guide." The aggregate tonnage to be operated in this service will thus total 150,000 tons deadweight.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 2, 1921.

A. F. OF L. TAKES ACTION

Among the many principles set forth by representatives of National and International Unions, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, which recently met at Washington, D. C., are the following:

Restoration of exemption from, or the repeal of all anti-combination or so-called conspiracy laws, and the people are called to rally to our imperiled American institutions.

Employers are warned that labor not only insists on maintaining the present standards of wages and working conditions, but is determined to continue the struggle for further improvements.

Other recommendations included:

Repeal by the States of all industrial court laws, and all restrictive and coercive laws, including the notorious open port law of Texas.

Prohibition of immigration for not less than two years.

Removal of the power of courts to declare unconstitutional laws enacted by Congress.

Investigation by Congress of the activities of private detective agencies in the field of industrial relations.

Election of judges.

Restoration of an adequate federal employment service.

The declaration also urged upon workers the absolute necessity of resisting all efforts to destroy trades unions, whether by the false pretense of the "open shop" or the usurped authority of courts, through writs of injunction or otherwise. The workers are summoned to continue efforts towards increased consuming power, raise the standards, and improve the condition of life and work.

In view of the impetus that has been given to the anti-labor drive and the determined nature of the opposition to collective bargaining immediate action is imperative. Vigorous steps must be taken to combat the aggressions of reactionary employers, especially as to attempted reductions in wages, impairment of working conditions, or lengthening the hours of labor, and provisions must be made for immediate improvements upon present standards.

COMING HOME TO ROOST

According to press reports, Capt. W. J. Peterson, late chief of Oakland's police force, and at present general manager for waterfront employers, has announced that the Longshoremen's Association (blue book men) of San Francisco, have requested their employers to reduce the daily wage.

Even the most skeptical must admit the employers are "going some" when they are able to bring about such idiotic actions. There was a time in the not far distant past, when employment of strikebreakers or unorganized longshoremen called for considerable expense and strenuous effort upon the part of the employers.

Now, however, a different policy has been pursued. All that seems necessary is the pouring of blandishments into the ears of the simple, after they have been inveigled by a few "glass-arm" boys into the formation of a bosses social club, then the employer patiently awaits the time when the victims will meekly beseech a cut in their daily wage.

The development of this situation must be balm to such choice spirits as Doyle, McNulty and their faithfully adherents who have stuck to the craft of the old Riggers and Stevedores in dark days of adversity. These men have peered through the clouds and realize there is clear sailing beyond. The old trade union will come back, and those who have taken ventures into treacherous waters will seek the haven of safety again. We can not help congratulating Doyle and company upon their well sustained belief that "tomorrow is also a day."

ORGANIZE

If we were not fully cognizant of the fact that shipowners in all parts of the world are imbued with the same desires for subjugation of their employes, such revelations as contained in the Marine Caterer would elucidate the situation. It matters not in what continent, or under what flag, we always confront the same greed, the same ruthlessness, and the same inhuman treatment.

The shipowner is generally the most arrogant employer, filled with inordinate desire to degrade and shackle seamen in the interest of dividends. Therefore necessity for powerful and compact resistance to oppression becomes a more urgent necessity. The tendency of vessel-owning interests to make their aggressions world wide, impels us to complete the most effective internatiaonal defense through organization and affiliation.

Members desiring to become more fully acquainted with Russian labor, and world conditions will receive a liberal education by attending the mass meeting on March 24, 1921, at the Civic Auditorium, San Francisco. The meeting has been called for the purpose of agitating for resumption of trade relations with Russia. Jim Fisher of Seattle and Ed. Nolan of the Machinists' Union of San Francisco will be speakers.

NECESSARY LEGISLATION

A bill to instantly remove from office, fine and imprison any officer or agent of the government, from the Attorney-General down, who unlawfully violates the rights of free speech, free press and assemblage guaranteed by the Constitution to citizens and persons lawfully within our borders, was introduced in the United States Senate on February 26 by Senator Borah of Idaho. In addition, if any person is arrested or brutally treated, or literature or personal effects seized, or his house or office searched without proper warrant, he can recover personal damages, and the fine cannot be less than $500.

In a Senate speech Borah declared that the "evidence of arbitrary and lawless acts of public officers (meaning Palmer and his agents) is at hand and overwhelming. . . . The situation demands permanent treatment."

Judson King, Executive Secretary of the National Popular Government League, Washington, which last year fought the sedition bills and published the famous "Report" of the "Twelve Lawyers" exposing Palmer, has announced that the League will lead a nation-wide fight for the enactment of the bill by the next Congress. He said: "The time has come for constructive action and for an end to be put to official lawlessness. We urge the assistance of every organization and every man and woman in America who believes that the people's fundamental rights should be preserved."

The bill has the backing of eminent attorneys who assisted Senator Borah in the drafting of the bill. Among them are Hon. Alfred Bettman of Cincinnati, former Assistant Attorney-General during the war; Prof. Z. Chafee, Jr., Harvard University Law School, author of a new book, "Freedom of Speech," and a distinguished authority on deportation law and the law protecting civil liberties; Lawrence G. Brooks, Boston, special attorney for the U. S. Railroad Labor Board; Frank P. Walsh, New York and Washington, former joint chairman of the War Labor Board, and Jackson H. Ralston, Washington, able constitutional lawyer, and Prof. Edwin M. Borchard of Yale University Law School.

Editor SEAMEN'S JOURNAL:

The press continues to announce probable cuts in the wages of men who go down to the sea in ships, etc.

It has been frequently stated and proved that the wages paid to the crews of American ships is an infinitesimally small item compared to the "other operating expenses," especially those applying to the "highly inflated" salaries of Presidents, Vice-Presidents, Directors, Marine Superintendents, Port Captains, Port Engineers, Port Stewards, and many other superfluous "sinecures" including "Chairmen of Boards, Dierctors of this, that and the other, Legal Bureaus, Adjusters," etc., etc.

Such state of affairs, being an irrefutable fact, may I not (with apologies to Sheitch—May—I—Not") ask, at this "psychological moment," what is the reason that this sudden and unfair retrenchment should be burdened on to the shoulders of the "men that go down to the sea in ships," instead of beginning the "Hooverizing," with the highly and excessively paid "chair-warming" tax-eaters.

Several months ago, Chairman Benson of the U. S. S. B., issued a letter, stating that it was against all the "traditions of the sea," for seamen to ask for overtime for work that they are required to do, outside of the working hours enacted by Act of Congress. I have since wondered if he meant to convey by his "traditions of the sea," that we should revert back to the days of Paul Jones, Buck Morgan, or Jack Barry, or worse still, to the days of "blackbirding," and "palm-oil trading" on the West Coasts of Africa, when our chief mode of exchange was looking-glasses, colored beads, pieces of leather, virgin rum, gaudy calicoes, and other savage-soothing and savage-hypnotizing articles.

JAY TEE ELL.

The JOURNAL is pleased to publish the following poetical expressions from Frank X. Sparks, a member of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, New Orleans branch.

THE SAILOR'S LIFE

I am only a young American boy,
Called a "common sailor" too,
I have longed to do some traveling
Across the ocean blue.

A seaman is not the "ne'er do well"
Many good folks may think;
But our standards are high as any man,
And we do not always drink.

When I first sought this hardy life,
And made a deep sea trip,
I was taught the sailor's motto,
"Never give up the ship."

A sailor's life to me seems good,
Quite different from the rest.
We can make our chosen calling
A peer of the very best.

A captain was not always such,
But a sailor of the sea;
He holystoned and polished brass,
The same as you and me.

We hold the power to show you,
That courage, hope and skill,
Will land us at the very top,
A master's berth to fill.

Wherefore only respect the skipper,
There is no reason why;
For he was once a deck hand,
Even as you and I.

These rhymes you must not forget,
But always bear in mind;
That the calling of a sailorman,
Is as good as you can find.

The Japanese Exclusion League reports that California's determined campaign for the collection of an "emergency educational fund" to combat Japanese propaganda throughout the Eastern States has changed the Eastern national viewpoint on California's exclusion laws.

In Washington, Senators Hiram Johnson, James D. Phelan and Senator-elect Samuel M. Shortridge, are watching the interests of California and the West in connection with the Japanese situation until the Western exclusion leaders arrive on the scene.

DUTY AND RESPONSIBILITY

By Andrew Furuseth

It should be thoroughly understood that the initial work of this plan should have for its purpose the improvement of seamanship, skill, and efficiency of the members of the union who have had some substantial service on board ship and who have attained the positions of able seamen, firemen, and oilers, cooks, etc., with a view of later so developing the system as to fit the needs of the beginners in the calling. The development in this respect will undoubtedly be very rapid once the plan is in operation.

In order that the executive board may be enabled to put into effect such plan the affiliated unions shall immediately be called upon to furnish the sum of $15,000, each district union to pay into such fund an amount proportionate to its treasury. The money thus contributed shall be placed in an account separate from the general fund of the union and shall be used exclusively for the purpose of carrying out the plans herein outlined. — (Unanimous action, Philadelphia Convention.)

Comrades:

You are either now voting, or you are preparing to vote upon this particular action of the convention. Of course, you will be discussing it amongst yourselves on board of the vessels, in the reading rooms, or wherever you happen to meet, and I can hear some of you say, "more dreams," "more assumption that the employers will understand and appreciate," "more fudge." I wish I could have the opportunity of answering those, or similar expressions, verbally in your reading rooms, or in your meetings. Since that is not possible I have only one way in which I can address you. "More dreams." Yes, more dreams, but what have we been doing all these years except to dream and then do our best to make the dreams come true. The number of you who used the expression "dreams," "fool dreams," in the struggle to make the seamen as free as other men, was legion. You could not believe that members of Congress and Senators of the United States could be willing to listen to petitions in boots, or otherwise, from men who had no power to reward or punish. Of course, you must admit that you were wrong then. Is it not reasonable that you may be wrong now? It is dreamers and dreams that have woven the fabric bright and dark of civilization as we know it. It was the dreamers and their dreams which gradually reconquered for the toiler so much of human equality and of equal opportunity as we now possess. If we could not dream life would be unbearable, but dreaming without trying to make the dreams a reality belongs not in the practical world but in the asylum.

Will the employers understand? I do not know. I do not know what may move their thoughts, but I know that some of them will, because they are human, and if some of them will, more of them may when they understand. If we had reasoned upon the lines suggested by you we should never have done anything. "Fudge." No, stern reality. Is it not a fact that you make a trip, come back, and regardless of whether you are efficient or inefficient, regardless of whether you do your work properly or do it not at all, you are paid off, sent ashore to eat up what you earned on the trip while somebody else is doing the work that you should be doing on the vessel while she is in harbor. This intermittent employment makes it practically impossible for you to save anything. You may send a few dollars to your mother, or to your sister at the end of the trip,

Now that the workers of America have gone in for industrial reconstruction in earnest, as good a slogan for them as any would be the one heard in the late Victory Loan drive, "Sure, we'll finish the job."

The union label organizes the purchasing power upon lines of fair conditions of labor, as against those conditions that destroy the health and morality of the producer and endanger the well being of the purchaser.

It is hardly necessary to say that abolishing an evil and suppressing the complaint about it are entirely different, and, in fact, antithetical, propositions.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

SEAMEN'S WAGES THREATENED

At an "important meeting" of the American Shipowners' Association, held in New York on February 8, it was unanimously decided to reduce seamen's wages, eliminate overtime, and discontinue all agreements and collective negotiations with the Seamen's Unions of the Atlantic and Gulf after May 1, 1921.

The organized seamen on the Atlantic and Gulf coast are not at all surprised by this announcement. As a matter of fact, it has long been foreshadowed in the public utterances of spokesmen for the shipowners, and strongly suggested in editorials of the commercialized press.

Ever since the present period of depression set in, and ships began to go out of commission, the American Shipowners' Association has pursued an arrogant attitude toward their employees.

In the present wave of business depression, and commercial stagnation, they seem to visualize the hope of acquiring all government owned ships on their own terms, and compel American Seamen to work for serf wages.

Impudent Demands of Shipowners

Speaking at a recent luncheon on topics relevant to the Merchant Marine, Mr. W. Averel Harriman, head of the American Ship and Commerce Corporation, and president of the Hawaiian-American Line, demanded the immediate withdrawal of all Shipping Board ships from competition with his concerns.

The American Shipowners' Association, however, at the meeting above referred to, not only proposes a substantial reduction in all seamen's wages, but also modestly demands the immediate withdrawal of all Shipping Board vessels from all trades, coastwise and foreign, and their entire sale to private owners at a uniform rate of $100 per ton,—take 'em now, pay when we get ready.

We are not taking up the subject of seamen's wages just now, we'll cross the bridge when we come to it. But it strikes us the American shipowners are biting off more than they can chew. The frankness of their demands is only equaled by the palpable inconsistency of their present attitude towards the government, people, and seamen alike.

In one breath the organized shipowners plead their inability to run the ships they now have successfully, and in the next they demand the immediate allocation of all government owned ships for their own special benefit.

In the same resolution they demand an increase in salaries for inspectors, clerks and chairwarmers paid by the government, and a 20 per cent. reduction in seamen's wages paid by themselves out of excess profits extracted from the American consumers of imported goods.

They are brutally frank, to say the least. But so was the Kaiser. Everybody knows what became of him.

American Interests Menaced

As seamen we respectfully submit that the American Merchant Marine is the pride and property of the American people, and that we, as well as the shipowners, are the servants and appointees of the people, duly charged with the operation, maintenance and defense of that Merchant Marine against all the world. A great national responsibility, therefore, devolves upon us all to do our part.

For sixty years prior to the European war the American shipowners had built few ships, trained no seamen or made any effort to encourage American commerce or seamanship.

The stern actualities of the world war awakened the American people to a knowledge of their own helplessness in the great struggle without a merchant marine, and to the realization that they had been rendered helpless by their own "shipowners."

In this dire emergency the American people set bravely to work to build a new and modern merchant service in the face of tremendous odds.

But build it they did, manned it with their own sons, fathers and brothers, dedicated it to their country's requirements for the benefit of all mankind, and mortgaged their incomes for generations to come to guarantee its success.

Shipowners Are Parsimonious

American shipowners have always been accustomed to computing seamen's wages on the lowest possible basis, and their own profits on all the traffic would bear, and they can't get out of the habit.

But they are going to find that when it comes to grabbing millions of tons of American shipping, and reducing the wages of a quarter of a million American sons, in the interests of their foreign allies, the opinions of the American people must first be consulted.

Through the power of organization and collective bargaining, the wages of American seamen have at least reached a point where they can live respectably when ashore, if continuously employed, but it is far from a standard which would permit the maintenance of family life, to which all seamen as well as other workers are entitled.

The Jazz Waiters' Injunction

A ludicrous attempt by the Colored Waiters' Alliance of Baltimore to secure a writ of injunction restraining the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association of the Atlantic and Gulf from serving in the Merchant Marine, is causing more amusement than uneasiness in waterfront circles just now.

According to newspaper reports, and other information to hand from the Oriole City, it appears that certain members of the above mentioned alliance applied for positions as waiters on board the palatial steamer "Hawkeye State," but were beaten to it by the vigilance of the port agent and delegates of the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association.

When they attempted to don their white jackets, they were bluntly informed that there was nothing doing, as all vacancies in the Steward's Department had been filled by seafaring men.

Thereupon the indignant landlubbers returned to the seclusion of their headquarters and held an overheated conference, at the close of which it was unanimously voted to carry their grievance to the courts, "an' show dem doggone sea waiters what is an' what am."

Application was therefore made to the Circuit Court No. 2 of Baltimore for a writ of injunction, restraining the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association from interfering with their laudable efforts to serve in the Merchant Marine.

Antics of Employers' Union

In their petition the members of the Colored Waiters' Alliance No. 836 informs the court, that it is as high standing and efficient as any in Baltimore, and that it has been chartered by the Hotel and Restaurant Employers' International Alliance, and that it is given added distinction by the endorsement of the Bartenders' League of America.

They further gravely aver that they all and individually possess the qualifications, inborn and acquired, that go into the make-up of first-class sea-waiters, sea-legs and all, but that through the meddlesome perversity of the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association they have been prevented from giving demonstration of their nautical agility in platter slinging, and graceful tip palming on shipboard; and that, in consequence, they have been "greatly humiliated and disgraced, their standing has been lowered, and they have been made to suffer loss of prestige."

In our opinion the Colored Waiters' Alliance 836 of Baltimore has been keeping bad company, and this is the direct cause of the humiliation and discomfiture of certain of its members in the present instance.

If 836 is a labor organization it has forsaken its principles by accepting a "charter" from an employers' alliance of any kind. It has further degraded itself by claiming affiliation with a bartenders' "league" in a prohibition country where rum selling is outlawed and bartenders are banished and anathematized by public opinion.

The colored waiters complaining in this instance have lowered their own "prestige" and the dignity of their own chosen industry as well by attempting to undermine and disrupt the wellbeing and class efficiency of a kindred occupation, to which, however, they do not belong, to the detriment and distress of thousands of qualified marine workers, who have devoted twenty years of untiring effort to the organization of their members and the development of their craft.

News of Interest to Galley and Cabin

A recent issue of the "Marine Caterer," official organ of the National Union of Ship's Stewards, Cooks, Butchers and Bakers of Great Britain, contains a copy of the following correspondence which recently appeared in the columns of the London "Times." In accordance with policies pursued by the commercialized press everywhere the letter of the "wealthiest shipowner" was published in full, while the answer thereto was given a very abbreviated publicity. The scurrilous attack of Lord Inchcape's upon the men in the stewards' department aboard his ships is very ably countered and discredited by President Cotter of the union.

LORD INCHCAPE'S LETTER

A VILE EFFUSION

From Lord Inchcape to the Editor of the "Times."

Sir,—Ships are being laid up all over the world because they cannot be run under present conditions. Ports are congested everywhere. Thousands of officers, engineers, seamen, stokers, and stewards are out of employment, and yet a Commission is sitting in Brussels to consider the advisability of limiting employment at sea to eight hours a day.

The Stewards' Union is laying down the law as to the work stewards shall do aboard ship. Discipline, therefore, is at a discount. Demands are constantly being made for increased accommodation on board ship much in excess of Board of Trade requirements. Unless this is given, threats are held out that the ships will be held up, and passengers' cabins have to be sacrificed to meet the demands, thus reducing the earning capacity of the ships and necessitating higher rates of passage money.

A Shameful Admission

Before the war the average wage of a steward was £3 10s. per month, bed, board, and lodging found, and the Maritime Wages Board some four years ago fixed the wage at £10 15s., to which they have since added £3, making £13 15s. at the moment, quite apart from a large allowance for overtime. It did not matter so much to the owner what the wage was during the war, as the ships were on charter to Government and the wages were a charge against the State. Now, however, the wages have to be paid out of the vessels' earnings, and the earnings won't pay them. In addition to their wages, stewards get tips from passengers, which on many voyages increase their remuneration considerably.

Unfounded Assertions

The unions dictate to the shipowners what men are to go in the ships, with the result that incompetent men of whom nothing is known have often to be taken merely because they have joined the union, while men who have been in the service of the company for years are excluded. One result is that passengers' belongings and enormous quantities of cabin, saloon, and table furnishings are constantly being stolen. On one voyage alone of a P. and O. steamer plate and linen to the value of £1,043 were removed from the ship.

The thieving that is going on at sea and in the docks is beyond anything in history. A man recently removed the clocks from the smoking and music rooms of one of our steamers while the passengers were embarking at Tilbury Dock, and they have never been traced. Within the last few days a piano was removed from one of the steamers in dock and carried off to a cottage, where, however, it was fortunately recovered. The quartermaster, who was on watch, and found to be in league with the thieves, has gone to gaol with the receiver, and they are now picking oakum instead of playing the piano.

Antagonism Expressed

If it had not been that there were so many passengers requiring to go East in the last few months, who would have been immeasurably inconvenienced if they had not been able to go, we would certainly have taken no stewards except on our own terms.

The end, of course, will come, and we will get back to a sound economic working basis, though it may not be quite yet.—Yours faithfully,

INCHCAPE.

122, Leadenhall Street, E. C., January 26th.

GENERAL PRESIDENT'S REPLY

28th January.

To the Editor of the "Times."

Dear Sir,—I have just arrived back from the International Conference of Shipowners and Seamen, which has been sitting at Brussels considering the question of employment at sea being limited to 8 hours a day, or 48 hours a week.

My attention has been drawn to a letter signed "Inchcape," which appears in "The Times" of Thursday's date. If the letter had been written by a common or garden critic of the Stewards' Union I would have taken little or no notice of it, but coming from the pen of a real live lord, and one of the wealthiest shipowners in the world, one is bound to sit up and take notice. I have already replied to Lord Inchcape's previous effusion on the reduction of hours for seamen question, which no doubt will be settled amicably in the course of the next few weeks, whether Lord Inchcape likes it or not, so I will pass his reference to the Commission sitting in Brussels over.

An Accepted Challenge

In the second paragraph of his letter he starts a frontal attack on the Stewards' Union, of which I have the honor of being the president. He states there the Stewards' Union is laying down the law as to the work stewards shall do aboard ship. I suppose he means by this all members of the catering department. According to Lord Inchcape's letter a union delegate on board the ships can lay down the law as to what has got to be done and what has not got to be done, and he states "therefore discipline is at a discount." Enclosed with this letter is a card giving official instructions to ships' delegates, which speaks for itself. I want to emphatically repudiate the insinuation that any ships' delegate dare take up the attitude that he infers in his letter. Seamen on board ship, whether stewards or any other rating among the crew, come under the Merchant Shipping Act, and can be dealt with by the law of the land, and very severely dealt with, for any attempt to interfere with the lawful commands of a master or officer on board ship.

Abominable Accommodations

He further states demands are constantly being made for increased accommodation on board ship which are in excess of Board of Trade requirements. I would like your readers to know that the Board of Trade requirements for accommodation on board ships in regard to cubic space allowed to seamen are much less than what is granted to a convict serving time in our prisons. Has Lord Inchcape ever sailed in a hell-hole called a glory hole with one hundred men in one room, with their eating, sleeping, and lavatory accommodation all attached, where they step out of their bunks of a morning straight to a table at the foot of their beds, and scramble for their food worse than so many pigs? These men are not allowed to take beds upon deck to get some of God's fresh air in the Tropics, as they happen to be stewards. He pointed out "passengers' cabins have to be sacrificed to meet the demands of the men." I respectfully suggest to Lord Inchcape that in the building of ships the men's requirements ought to be the first and not the last consideration of a shipowner worthy of his salt.

The Wage Question

He then gets on to the question of wages, and points out the average wage of a steward before the war was £3 10s. per month. Perhaps I can help him in this matter. It is not many years ago that married men sailed in his company (the P. and O.) at 30s. per month; hours 24 per day (as the catering department have no specified number of hours laid down, and must work any hours called upon to work). It does not want a mathematician to work this out. The seaman is paid at the rate of 30s. per month (30 days to the month), equals 1s. per day, equals ½d. per hour, 24 hours per day, and this was in Lord Inchcape's company. No wonder shipowners die millionaires. Then he shows his hand as a patriot by stating during the war the wages increased to £13 15s. per month, and goes on to state it did not matter so much to the owner what the wages were during the war, as the ships were on charter to the Government, and the wages were a charge against the State. In addition to the wages he states stewards get tips from passengers. I agree! and Lord Inchcape and his friends encourage them to get tips by paying them starvation wages, for what the stewards got on the swings the shipowners got back on the roundabouts. His statement about the union dictating to shipowners who they shall carry on the ships is absurd. If the union dictated to Lord Inchcape, does he think for one moment we would allow him to carry cheap Asiatic Labor at half the wages paid to British white labor?

Regard for Coolies

The P. and O. Company (of which he is the head) has always had a record of being the worst company, as far as payments and conditions are concerned, of any passenger shipping company afloat, and I will refer him to any of the departments on board his ships—the deck, engine, and catering, and even the captains and officers. He continues his scurrilous attack upon the men in the catering department by insinuating that our men steal the plate and linen of the ships. I can hardly express in language what I feel over this charge, which is a deliberate lie, and I want to point out here that the P. and O. Company have received more money by sheer robbery and illegal stoppages from stewards and cooks in the shape of payments for silver, linen, and crockery than any other company owning ships.

An Example of Exploitation

To show the audacity of this company I will quote one incident. A well-known P. and O. boat ran ashore and was wrecked with a member of the Royal Family on board. The men of the catering department (who were the majority of the white crew), at the risk of their lives, saved not only the passengers, but also a valuable part of the company's property. When the men were returned home to be paid off, a part of their wages was stopped for the linen, silver, and crockery lost in their ship. Is any comment necessary upon this for audacity and robbery? I think you will agree this beats creation.

Lord's Lies Nailed

He refers to men stealing clocks from the smoke-rooms and music-rooms in their ships. He quotes the case of a piano being stolen. When I got to this part of his letter I began to think his lordship was starting to pull someone's leg. He was turning a tragedy into a farce. The next thing his lordship will be trying to tell the British public is that the sailors are walking down the gangways of the ships with a couple of anchors on their watch chains, and the firemen are going ashore with a couple of turbines in their pockets. I am a practical steward, knowing the business from A to Z, and I say emphatically that 90 per cent. of the losses sustained on board ship, viz., silver and linen losses, are caused through passengers taking it for souvenirs or other purposes.

A Record of Honor

I would like to point out to his lordship that the Stewards' Union's record during the late war stands among the highest in the category of any union in this country. The Seamen's Unions are the two highest in their losses of men in proportion to their membership. The majority of our men were lost dodging submarines, so as to keep the British Mercantile Marine in the forefront of the world. Among the ships were Lord Inchcape's, not only the P. and O., but all the lines in which he has personal interests. I wonder how many ships Lord Inchcape sailed in during the war? I think charges of this description ill become men of Lord Inchcape's type; men who have made huge fortunes out of the sweat and blood of the men criticised. If Lord Inchcape wants to command the respect of his employees, let him help to reduce their hours, give them better conditions and a higher standard of life, and make his ships fit for human beings to live in. Let his policy be a constructive one, and not a destructive one.

JOS. COTTER,
General President.

RUSSIA'S IRON DEPOSITS

The greatest iron ore deposits known are thought to have been located near Koursk, Russia, by magnetic disturbances of intensity unequaled elsewhere. These disturbances were studied several years by the late Prof. Ernst Leyst, a Russian, and his records are said to have been rescued and taken to Sweden. Two Swedish observers find that two immense parallel deposits of magnetic iron ore are indicated. These seem to have about equal length, 57 miles or more, and to be separated about 40 miles.

The manhood of the striker must take precedence of the comfort of the public.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd.)

Masses Carry Tax Burdens

Congress is attempting to commit the country to a huge further expenditure upon the army and navy, in face of the fact that the whole world cries out for peace and reconstruction and for assistance in feeding the hungry and clothing the naked victims of the great war. An item of $90,000,000 in the Naval Appropriation bill now before the Senate, while it looks moderate enough in itself, really means an investment of $640,000,000 in new and big warships—all of which may be found to be worthless against improved aircraft and submarines before their hulls are half completed. The item provides for beginning construction of the series of ships whose total cost will be $640,000,000.

Where will the money come from?

From the wage-workers and the citizens who have to bear all the other burdens of extravagance in government and in industry, of course.

Already Senator Penrose and Chairman Fordney of the House Ways and Means Committee have pretty well laid their plans for laying a consumption tax—they call it a sales tax—upon the everyday necessaries of life, and they expect to raise enough by this tax upon our bread and butter and clothes to pay for the naval extravagance which the big lobby of naval officers in Washington is insisting upon.

Senator Borah of Idaho, answering a demand by Senator McCormick of Illinois in the Senate that Harding be given a huge navy with which to play the diplomatic game with Europe—the same game at which Woodrow Wilson was euchred and discredited forever—served notice upon his party that it was playing with fire in the matter of extravagance and heavy taxation.

Tremendous War Debts

"This war debt of $250,000,000,000 or more," he said, "which now rests like a mortgage in process of everlasting foreclosure upon the brain and energy of the human family, really staggers computation, and in its demoralizing and deadening effects it beggars description.

"It is when you undertake to measure this debt in foot pounds of human toil that its magnitude becomes bewildering. The privation and the misery, the suffering and the sacrifice, the men and women bending in hopeless drudgery, the children starved in body and dwarfed in mind, the families discouraged and broken up, the pauperism, the crime, the suicide, which its ever-pressing weight and subtle tyranny imposes, place its size and effect beyond our power to portray. The most exacting task master in the world is the public debt. If it has any advantages to bestow, it bestows them upon the few and well-to-do—those who are able to hold bonds and collect the interest."

Borah showed how the statesmen who held the world in their hands at the end of the war had done nothing to reduce this debt nor to even prevent its growth. Britain's government erected barricades around its Parliament buildings recently, to guard against the possible violence of the unemployed, while in America the problem of unemployed and the condition of business in general gave reason for the gravest fears.

"It is not a long step," he remarked, "from the barricade around legislative halls and unemployment to the point where popular power breaks in upon the rights of property, and decrees are issued from the open forum."

Borah refused to agree to wait for any nod from Harding, in the next four years, before thinking and speaking upon the vital problems with which Congress and the people must deal. He smiled as he remembered how he had had to drive Harding and his advisers to abandon their schemes for an elaborate and costly "coronation" ceremony on March 4th, and he suggested to the Senate that "We have our duties to discharge and our obligations to meet, and it will be a pitiable spectacle if we loiter around like satellites of royalty until we are bid to act and to profess and pretend to think."

An Anti-Labor Cabinet

Fact is, Borah and Hiram Johnson and the La Follette group in the Senate are astonished at the devil-may-care way in which Harding has placed his political and official fate in the hands of the Ohio lobbyist, Harry Daugherty, who is slated to become Attorney General of the United States. Compared with Daugherty, if all accounts from Ohio newspaper men now in Washington are true, such notorious cabinet choices as Ballinger and Burleson and Palmer were selections of vast wisdom. None of these three black sheep of recent American politics ever maintained expensive offices opposite a State capitol, nor was known as the spokesman for all the traction interests of a big industrial commonwealth. None of them was ever identified in the public mind with the underground manipulation of legislatures in the interests of public service corporations and against the interests of working people. These points of peculiarity make Daugherty the most amazing cabinet selection in more than a generation.

But Daugherty in the shoes of Palmer will apparently not be so lacking in company as has been the case with the champion official strike-breaker of our legal department. There will be Herbert Hoover in the Department of Commerce to see that the Seamen's Act is not too severely enforced against the coolies and the shipping magnates. Hoover, the friend of the mining corporations and the big meat packers, will lend a ready hand in making up the labor policy of the administration, if he is needed.

Then there will be Mellon of Pittsburgh, whom no union official seems ever to have met, but whose family holds control of industrial corporations capitalized at over two billion dollars. Mellon has always stood for the non-union shop, enforced by the Pennsylvania Cossacks. As Secretary of the Treasury he will construe the taxation laws so that the workers will pay to the last cent, while he will be in a position to lend the support of the treasury to financial pirates whose schemes may be too big for private enterprise alone.

Working with Daugherty and Mellon will be Secretary of War Weeks, a stock and bond broker and banker. In time of strike the troops will be under his control. He will talk things over with Postmaster General Will Hays, who will get the signals from Senator Jim Watson of Indiana, champion of the railroads and the meat packers.

Under these conditions the question as to who shall be Secretary of Labor is no longer of importance to the labor movement. The cabinet is stacked for reaction and recklessness.

Industrial Situation Worse

Decreases in wages and further reductions of the force employed are reported by the basic industries reported upon today by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, for the period from December 15, 1920, to January 15, 1921. Between these two months thirteen selected industries show a decrease in wages, and only one an increase in the total poyroll for a week. In iron and steel the plants reported upon showed various cuts in pay, from the elimination of time and one-half for overtime to a straight 25 per cent. reduction. In hosiery some of the establishments reported a cut of 33⅓ per cent. in rates of wages. In silk a decrease of 22½ per cent. in the rate of pay was imposed in some of the plants. In cotton mills the reductions were from 5 to 25 per cent.

In all of these industries there were less employes in January than in the corresponding month of January in 1920. The automobile industry has decreased its working force—in the plants reporting—by 64.6 per cent. Iron and steel employ 25.4 per cent. less than a year ago. Car building and repairing employ 5.5 per cent. less, although there is always a shortage of cars. Hosiery and underwear employ 54.3 per cent. less persons than a year ago, and cotton-finishing employs 26.8 per cent. less. The shrinkage of the force in leather shops is 37.9 per cent.; in men's clothing it is 37.4 per cent.; in boots and shoes it is 33.1 per cent., and cent. below the total for January of 1920.

Nearing a Crisis

These figures do not cover a large number of establishments in any one industry, and they are merely the statement of the managers of the plants, but they show clearly the drift toward a serious crisis in unemployment.

Add to the fact of unemployment and the gradual but inescapable using up of the savings of the workers in all trades, the deliberate campaign of the reactionary employers and their political servants for the destruction of the labor movement, and you have the grounds for vigorous protest from the trade unions to the Harding administration this spring and summer. The passing of jail sentence upon Alexander Howat of the United Mine Workers in Kansas is looked upon by some of the labor spokesmen here as the possible turning point of resentment. The fight over the Kansas Industrial Court tyranny may become the center of a struggle which will spread to every State as the anti-union forces gain courage from Harding's cabinet selections to take the offensive.

Generally speaking, "respect for the rights of the third party," as that phrase is used in connection with strikes, implies disrespect for the rights of the other two parties.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER.

"reaches a farcical climax in Judge Curran's sentence of Alexander Howat and five associated labor officials to a year in jail for violation of an anti-strike injunction and 'the intents and purposes of the Kansas industrial court law.' The conception of a court to decide when capital is properly invested and when men must work is fundamentally fallacious. While our economic system endures capital will flow as profits direct it and men will put their hands to the plough or the shovel when they please. No court can be trusted to dictate to industry for the good of the state.

"Neither can it strip from the miners their one weapon in economic competition without giving an assurance of justice that lies beyond the scope of its power."

Want Independence

Members of the Porto Rican Legislature have appealed to the Congress of the United States for national sovereignty. The organized workers oppose the plan, and declare it is advocated by monarchists. The workers call upon the independents to grant some degree of economic freedom to labor and they insist that their struggle for this economic freedom will not be diverted by a political issue. The former monarchists and industrial barons are exploiting the island through trustification of the sugar and tobacco industry.

but as for you entering into the ordinary relations, living an ordinary human life, you know that the wages which you receive makes that impossible. Some of you have sung the English seamen's song, "The Sailor's Wife the Sailor's Star Shall Be," while you have been going around in the capstan, and some of you in bitterness of soul have sung it with the variations which you know all too well. I know that I have, and any of you who has been to sea more than a dog-watch, knows these facts.

By failing to again develop the skill in seamanship which the employers' policy for the last forty years has done its best to destroy, we shall come nearer and nearer to the point hoped for and worked for by that kind of shipowners. These men are without any conscience and without any dreams, except such as are connected or may be connected with dreaming themselves, as the indisputable masters surrounded by men consciously and willingly their slaves, and to listen to or consider them and adopt their philosophy spells a never ending misery to us. The convention did not dream of any general assistance, or even sympathy from shipowners. The convention felt that there are quite a number of shipowners who, partly through their imagination and partly through their experience, have come to a realization of the importance of skill and loyal co-operation in the vessel's personnel. Insofar as the convention thought of anybody outside of the seaman himself, it thought of the student, the social expert, the real statesman and that section of employers who have imagination, who can see, or have had some experience through which they have ascertained and digested the value to the merchant service, to the sea-power of a nation, of a personnel skilled in their work, willing to do their work because it is their work, and because the work is honorable.

But some of you will say high skill, greater efficiency, means more work and less employment. Think it over, friends, and you will see how utterly unsound such contention is. When the men who go to sea know their work, when they know the ship, her gear and appliances, how to find them in daylight or dark, how to use them at all times, how to repair them, and the means being available, how to replace them, there will again be permanency of employment, the intermittent, demoralizing and wasteful periods on shore will be ended. Shipowners will use the crew to do what the crew ought to do, and will keep them by the vessel. There will be more work, more men will be employed, the vessel will be better taken care of, the gear will last longer, accidents will be fewer, and it cannot help but redound to the profit of seamen and shipowners alike.

Of course, I know as well as you, that there are a large number of shipowners, and they are influential ones, who can think of nothing but the reduction in wages, and of using the power that they now think they have—seeing it arise from the stoppage of ocean carrying trade—for the purpose of squeezing the last drop of sweat, not only from the bodies but from the souls of the men whom they employ. I know not, cannot know what they will do, or will try to do. Nor did the convention know, nor did it undertake to guess. The convention was thinking about the seamen, what to do that would be of the highest good to seamen. If it had hesitated because of what some employers want to do, or may want to do, and if it had felt itself impelled to be governed by that, it would not have taken the action which we are now discussing; in fact it would not have come together at all; in fact we would have no unions, because you know, must know, if you take the trouble to think and surely you do, that whatever progress we have made has been made not because they wanted or because they liked it, but because they could not stop it.

Comrades, you are on trial, and you are trying yourself. If you were dreamers enough to make certain promises to yourself, you must be men enough to do your utmost to make those dreams come true or you will be like the tree upon which the Nazarene found no fruit, and upon you, through your own actions, will rest the curse that he left upon the tree. It is up to you; you will decide, and as you decide wisely or foolishly so shall be the results to the seamen, not only of America but to some extent to the seamen of the world.

While you are howling about the horrors of the "Dictatorship of the Proletariat" in Russia, don't overlook the blessings we enjoy from the Dictatorship of the Profitariat.—Miami Valley Socialist, New Zealand.

Labor News

Wages of 3000 of the 4000 employees of the Baltimore Drydocks & Shipbuilding Company have been reduced approximately 10 per cent.

The proposed plan of the Chicago Federation of Labor for alleviating the unemployment situation, by shortening the hours of men at work, have been abandoned as inoperative. The Federation failed to act on the proposals that had been submitted.

The wage of farm labor averaged about $16 a week without board last year, according to a statement issued by the Department of Agriculture. It is stated that the average rate for labor hired by the month was $46.89 with board and $64.95 without board; for day labor at harvest, $3.60 with board and $4.36 without board.

Retail clerks of Honolulu have organized a local union of that craft and are now prepared to take their place in the organized labor movement of the islands, according to a letter just received by the Union Record from Mildred Flynn, formerly with the Trades Union Savings and Loan Association of Seattle.

The four L's have become entirely discredited in the northwest, and workers in the lumber camps and mills are joining the Timberworkers' Union in large numbers. The men realize that it is absolutely necessary to maintain a bona fide organization in order to combat the aggressions of the lumber profiteers.

The Jones and Laughlin Steel Company of Pittsburgh, Pa., announced a cut of twenty per cent. in wages, effective March 1. Readjustment of the wages paid tonnage men was made in conformity with the new scale. The company employs an approximate of 25,000 men, half of which are laborers. The new wage rate is 37 cents an hour.

Governor Frazier of North Dakota has laid before the executive council of the American Federation of Labor a proposal that labor unions affiliated with the Federation invest their funds in bonds of the State-owned bank of North Dakota. He also has asked that the unions deposit their surplus funds in the North Dakota institutions.

President Barnes of Cigarmakers' Union 228 has announced that the cigarmakers' strike of Tampa, Florida, has been called off on account of lack of funds. He further stated that the cigarmakers of Cuba had contributed generously to support their Tampa comrades, but the bosses neutralized these efforts by closing down the Havana shops. Similar action was also taken by employees in Eastern States. By these means the Tampa strikers were literally [illegible] into submission.

State laws regulating working conditions in metal mines are lax and inadequate, especially as regard to ventilation, according to a statement by the Bureau of Mines, based on a survey of metal mines in Montana, Colorado, Utah, Nevada, Arizona and other States. The survey was made by David Harrison, a mining engineer of the bureau, and by engineers and surgeons of the Public Health Service. "The better health of coal miners as compared with metal miners probably is due to the better ventilation of coal mines," the statement said.

What Is a "Fair" Tax Rate?

Suppose you own a shed worth $100.
Suppose you pay $1 in taxes on this shed.
Your tax rate is, clearly, 1 per cent. on actual value.
If you pay $1.63 in taxes on your shed, your tax rate is 1.63 per cent. on actual value, and this is what State officials say our average tax rate is. To be exact, the rate is given as $1.632 on each $100 of actual value.
That's all there is to this taxation question.

What Should Utility Companies Pay?

Now apply the same process to public utility companies, from whom the State collects a tax that is passed along to all citizens. For example, the Seavey Tax Commission's valuation on operative properties of railroads and street railroads is $519,620,000, in 1916. On the same basis used by Mr. Seavey they are worth less today.

If they paid, like the average citizen, $1.63 on each $100, they would have paid the State, in 1920, $8,480,000.

As a matter of fact, they paid in 1920, $10,122,000, or an excess of $1,642,000 over the $1.63 rate. In other words, they are paying, not 1.63 per cent., like anyone else, but 1.94 per cent. on the Seavey Tax Commission's valuation of their properties.

Now our State officials demand that the taxes on public utility companies be still further increased.

A Fair Proposition

If these companies are not now paying their fair share of the proper cost of State government, they should do so. If they are now paying what they should pay, the tax burden on the public should not be increased. This situation demands facts and fair play.

The Facts Are These:

Today—to use the same example—railways and street railways are paying taxes at the rate of	$1.94
In 1916 the Seavey Tax Commission estimated the tax paid by railroads and street railroads, as compared with the value of their properties, at	1.30
An increase, since 1916, on each $100 on the Seavey valuation of	$ .64

or, in percentage, an increase of 59 per cent. over the 1916 rate.
The average citizen's direct taxes have increased, meanwhile, 35 per cent. on property which is like that of the public utilities, in that it has not increased in value.

Our Citizens Must Decide

It is for all citizens to decide whether the indirect taxes they pay through public utility companies shall be again increased when these companies are already paying at the rate of 59 per cent. more on the Seavey valuation than they paid in 1916. Be not deceived. This is your affair. The money collected through public utilities is charged back to you in the cost of food, clothes, rent, light, heat, interest rates and transportation—in everything you buy.

No Ad Valorem Tax

Remember:
No revenue deficit exists.
No ad valorem tax is needed.
Ask your legislator to demand that the State live within its income, or show WHY.

Domestic and Naval

Bolshevist convoys, consisting of two submarine chasers and two gunboats, have appeared on the trade route between Trebizond, on the eastern shore of the Black Sea, and Novorossisk, on the northeast coast.

The Atlantic fleet has been separated from the Pacific fleet and has sailed for the Atlantic, thus ending the first joint maneuvers of the two fleets. The maneuvers, in the opinion of high naval officers, have been a marked success.

Figures recently published show that ninety-two sail, steam, gas and unrigged vessels of 208,967 gross tons were built in the United States during the month of January, 1921. Fourteen of these ships were for the U. S. Shipping Board and fourteen were oil tankers.

Six steamers owned by the United States Shipping Board and aggregating 65,450 tons gross, now lying idle in New York, will be towed to the Hog Island shipyard for storage until disposed of by the Government. Three of the ships are former German liners, the "Baron von Steuben," ex "Kronprinz Wilhelm"; "Nansemond," ex "Pennsylvania," and the "Mercury," ex "Barbarossa," which served as army transports. The others are the "Marcia," "South Bend" and "Edellyn," American-built steamships.

The Postoffice Department announces that the steamer "Mount Clay," scheduled to leave New York Feb. 19, carries mail for airplane delivery to Berlin and Rhine points in Germany. The mail will be delivered from the ship to a German hangar in Cuxhaven for forwarding. Matter intended for such transmission should be marked "dispatch by air from Cuxhaven."

Uncle Sam has determined to clean out his antiquated warcraft in Pacific waters and is offering a number of former "war dogs" for sale. The cruiser "Brooklyn," famous for her participation in the battle of Santiago during the Spanish war, heads the list of craft to be disposed of. The cruiser "Minneapolis," formerly the flagship of the "train" of the Pacific Fleet, is another, while the cruisers "Raleigh" and "Cincinnati," the auxiliary ship "Supply," the gunboat "Castine" and tug "Bay Ocean" complete the lot. Recently the old cruiser "Marblehead" was sold to Mexico, and it is believed in shipping circles that the entire fleet of obsolete warships will be purchased for the rapid growing navy of Mexico or by some other Latin American republic.

The Chinese government has demanded an apology and reparation from Japan for the sinking, last June, of a Chinese craft by fire from a Japanese gunboat in the Amur river, shortly after the Nikolaevsk massacre. According to Chinese naval department reports, the Chinese boat, manned by one naval officer, four [illegible] and [illegible] seamen, was sent out by the Chinese gunboat [illegible] on the Amur to [illegible] fuel. On its return, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, a Japanese gunboat was sighted. The Chinese craft dropped anchor and ran up the Chinese flag. The Japanese gunboat opened fire, and seven shots hit the hull. The boat was partially submerged in shallow water and thirty-four seamen were killed by gunfire or drowned in efforts to get to shore.

News from Abroad

The insurrection of Montenegrans against Jugoslav occupational troops is spreading, according to advices from Agram. It is said there have been a number of casualties in recent fights.

Pogroms against the Jews in Ukrania still continue, according to Dr. Rosenblatt, representative of the joint distribution committee for American Jewish relief funds, who has arrived at Paris from Moscow.

Austria has been placed under martial law in efforts to prevent a threatened general strike. Further measures of repression are planned in case the discontented elements renew demands for extension of political liberty and increase in wages.

According to reports from Constantinople, French destroyers cruising along the eastern coast of the Black Sea have been engaged with soviet forces as Gagry, a town fifteen miles northwest of Sukbun-Kale.

Emigration from Mexico is decreasing, due to renewed industrial activity within the country. Construction of low-priced dwellings in Mexico City is especially alive at this time. Railroad conditions are improving, but movements of vessels continue slow.

Representatives of the Hamburg Senate and Chamber of Commerce, recently called upon and expressed thanks to the Captain of the Argentine steamer "Baria Blanca," when that vessel arrived at Hamburg with 7000 tons of foodstuffs, a gift to the Austrians from the Argentine Government.

Argentina reports very little improvement in commercial and industrial conditions. Building and other construction operations are very inactive, and movements of freight are light. The cost of living decreases very slowly, and labor unrest is rampant. A big railroad strike is threatened, and other labor troubles are anticipated. Immigration from Germany, Italy, and Spain is increasing rapidly.

German Communists polled 1,200,000 votes in the recent elections to the new Prussian Landtag. This was their first appearance on an official Prussian ballot. They captured thirty seats and will constitute with the Independent Socialists, who elected twenty-eight Deputies, the Far Left opposition wing. The majority Socialists will have 111 Deputies, losing forty-one seats. The Democratic party's representation is reduced from sixty-six to twenty-five and the Clericals dropped from ninety-four to eighty-three, giving the Prussian three-party coalition bloc 219 mandates, as against their former 304.

French newspapers are making terrible revelations of the poverty in which many of the greatest French savants are forced to live. Madame Curie, the inventor of radium, has barely funds enough to employ a single assistant in her famous institution. The heroic Doctor Infroit, the latest victim of X-rays, died recently in such poverty that the municipality had to pay for his funeral. The laboratories of the well-known scientist Branly are falling into ruins. The first woman doctor to practice medicine in France, Madame Madeleine Bres, has just been discovered by the newspapers living in extreme poverty and completely blind at the age of 82.

Republics are forgetful. If a gallant doughboy did put on his hero medal and wore it downtown people would think he was a delegate to some two-by-four convention.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

"Father, have you cut all four of your wisdom teeth?"

"Yes, son. I have purchased a used car, accepted a nomination, been chairman of a local reception committee, and married your mother."—Life.

"All this talk about prohibition is the bunk," declaimed an old laborer. "'Twas whiskey saved my life oncet."

"Snake bite?"

"Snake bite, nothin'. I was diggin' a well an' come up for a drink and while I was gettin' it th' well caved in."—American Legion Weekly.

"And what," asked the welfare worker, "did the French think when they found out the Americans were the greatest water-drinking race on earth?"

"I dunno, mum," answered the returned gob. "I don't think they found it out."—American Legion Weekly.

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

RAILROADS' METHODS EXPOSED

Senator La Follette Protests Against Looting of U. S. Treasury

Railroad Operators Show Avarice

In opposing the Winslow-Townsend Bill in the Senate, Senator La Follette of Wisconsin declared that the railroads of the country should be required to "repay to the Government the enormous debts which they have incurred under the bounty of Congress," instead of being permitted to collect several hundred millions of an additional gratuity from the Government, in such a manner that "they would leave the door of the treasury ajar so that they may come back year after year, pyramiding new claims upon the old, adding fresh items of loss, unearthing new indemnities, and gradually swelling the total amount of Congress' generous gift of public money in taxes from the people until that gift, instead of being $631,000,000, will reach a billion and still not discharge the claim."

Senator La Follette presented figures to show that the railroads are now indebted to the Government to the sum of $1,292,000,000, and said that it was doubtful if they could ever discharge the debt.

"The question raised by the Winslow-Townsend bill is: Shall we present the railroads with a gift from the public treasury before the gift promised is due, under circumstances which will enable the railroads vastly to increase the magnitude of the gift, and while the railroads are under investigation for alleged violation of the contract under which the gift was made.

"Secretary Houston denies that the private claims pending against the railroads are a substantial factor in preventing the railroads from presenting a final claim for payment in full. Secretary Houston adds the significant comment, that 'the Transportation Act in its present form is unusual in omitting such a provision of limitation.'

"If such a limitation is not set, and if Congress passes a measure like the Winslow-Townsend bill, authorizing partial payments, Secretary Houston truthfully declares that it 'would render it impossible for the Interstate Commerce Commission ever to make a certificate which would be final.'

"There you have the reason why the railroads are unwilling to present final claims for settlement of the guaranty at this time. The powerful interests which own the railroads see in these claims an opportunity to drain the public treasury for years to come. Having already exacted $260,000,000 of the $631,500,000 gift voted to them by Congress, they are unwilling to accept payment in full of the balance of $370,000,000. They seek now to collect several hundred millions of this money, but they would leave the door of the treasury ajar so that they may come back year after year, pyramiding new claims upon the old, adding fresh items of loss, unearthing new indemnities, and gradually swelling the total amount of Congress' generous gift of public money collected in taxes from the people until that gift, instead of being $631,000,000, will reach a billion and still not discharge the claim.

Loot Used Against Unions

"Mr. President, I opposed the guaranty in Section 209 when it was proposed in this body. I believe then, as I believe now, that it was a policy which could only result in the unjust enrichment of the interests which exploit the transportation facilities of the country for excess profits. It was contended that the guaranty would enable the railroads to give the public improved service. It had no such effect in practice. This guaranty proved an invitation to fraud and extravagance. It encouraged the railroad owners to commence a ruinous policy of smashing the labor organizations of their employes.

"The least Congress can do, as the trustee of the people's money, is to stand upon the contract which was made by the enactment of the Transportation Act of 1920. The courageous policy would be to repeal the law by which this gift was made. There is no question of the power of Congress to repeal the guaranty, because it was not compensation for any services rendered, but a pure gift, in reliance upon which the railroads did nothing they would not have been bound to do without the guaranty.

Roads Are Debtors to U. S.

"The Government owes the railroads no debt. It promised a gratuity upon certain conditions. The railroads have not complied with the conditions. Until they do so the railroads are without the shadow of a claim.

"The railroads are at this hour indebted to the Government in so many millions of dollars that it is doubtful if they can ever discharge the debt.

"Under Section 210 of the Transportation Act a revolving fund of $300,000,000 was appropriated from the Treasury to be loaned to the railroads. The Bureau of Finance, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, informs me that 'there has been certified to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment,' under Section 210 of the Act, the sum of $192,483,487.

"'During the twenty-six months of Government operation the Government made additions in the way of improvements and betterments, construction on roadway, etc., to the amount of $750,000,000. This money was paid out of the Government Treasury for these purposes, and when the roads were turned back to their private owners on March 1 they went back with these permanent improvements added to them.

"In 1918, while the roads were under Government control, the Director-General made contracts for 100,000 freight cars and 2,000 engines. A total of $400,000,000 was paid out of the public treasury for this equipment. Several payments have been made on this account, reducing the amount due for new freight cars and engines to about $350,000,000.

"The railroads have filed enormous claims with the Railroad Administration for alleged damage done their property during the period of Government control. They will not pay one penny of the $750,000,000 due for improvements and betterments if they can help it. If they can devise some means to avoid payments for the $350,000,000 owing for allocated equipment purchased by the Government, they can be depended upon to escape that debt.

"The $300,000,000 revolving fund which was intended to afford ample credit to the roads for a period of two years has already, before the end of the first year, been nearly two-thirds exhausted. The total amount now owing to the Government from the roads may be listed as follows:

"1. Improvements and betterments during the period of Federal control	$ 750,000,000
"2. 100,000 freight cars, 2,000 engines, etc., purchased during Federal control	350,000,000
"3. Money borrowed from the revolving fund since March 1, 1920	192,000,000
	$1,292,000,000

Predatory Practices Revealed

"Before considering other evidence of the wasteful and unlawful practices of the railroad owners since the roads were surrendered to private control, I wish to introduce into the record five tables of figures prepared by the Interstate Commerce Commission on monthly reports rendered by Class 1 railroads which constitute 97 per cent of the railroad mileage of the country.

"These statistics tell their own story. Table No. 1, setting forth the railway operating revenues, shows that since the rate increase which became effective August 26, 1920, in spite of a falling off in passenger and freight traffic on account of the prohibitive rates, the railroads have averaged an enormous monthly revenue of $600,000,000. This means an annual transportation bill for the people of this country of more than $7,200,000,000. When the roads were under private control in 1917 the yearly revenues were only $4,000,000,000. During 1918 and 1919, the two years of Government operation, they averaged only $5,000,000,000. The railroads are thus realizing an annual revenue at the present time which exceeds the revenues enjoyed during each of the two years of Government control, by more than $2,000,000,000, and yet the railroad owners complain that they are unable to operate the roads at a profit.

"Table No. 2, embracing railway operating expenses, shows that since the roads went back to private operation the operating expenses have jumped until they are now nearly $100,000,000 a month in excess of the highest monthly expense under Government operation.

Public Funds Squandered

"For the first time in American history unearned profits were guaranteed out of the public funds to private corporations; this gift was justified on the claim that deficits under private operation would fall far short of deficits which were being incurred under Government operation. And the senators who made that claim pointed to Section 422 of the law as a protection to the taxpayers of this country because it conditioned the Government's bounty upon 'honest, efficient and economical management and reasonable expenditures.'

"How did the railroads respond to this show of confidence on the part of Congress? No sooner were the transportation facilities of the country back in their hands than they began the letting of contracts to supply companies at unprecedented figures. The railroad shops which had recently been organized and employed union labor proceeded to discharge men, reduce output and were in many cases closed down. At enormous increase in operating expenses, fat repair contracts were given to 'outside' companies employing non-union men. In many instances, the boards of directors of these 'outside' supply companies were controlled by the same men who were directors of the railroad companies. New companies were organized in which the same interlocking control existed, and so lucrative did this 'farming out' of repairs become that the stocks of the corporations supplying repairs to the railroads maintained a higher level in Wall street than the securities of any other class of manufacturing concerns.

"This practice served a double purpose. It enriched the great interests which control the railroads, and in addition it threatened the existence of union labor. Under Section 209 of the Transportation Act these sinister purposes could be served at public expense, because no matter how high their operating expenses, no matter how poor and inefficient the service, the railroads had been guaranteed profits of $75,000,000 a month from the public treasury.

"The inevitable result of this guaranty which put a premium upon inefficient service soon followed. The railroads not only failed to make the profit of $75,000,000 a month, but they fell short of making expenses. Although in granting this guaranty it had been urged among other reasons that the railroads would cost the Government less under private operation than under Government operation, it was found on September 1, 1920, that the deficit for six months aggregated an amount estimated at the astounding figures of $631,500,000. Think of it! In six months the private owners of the railroads piled up a deficit 85 per cent as large as the deficit of $715,500,000 incurred by the Government during twenty-six months of Federal control. The monthly deficits under Government operation had averaged under the exacting conditions of a great war less than $30,000,000 a month. Under private operation in a time of peace the deficits were in excess of $105,000,000."

ORGANIZED LABOR PROCRASTINATES

The nervousness of organized labor over renewal of immigration is probably well grounded. With unemployment on the increase, and an industrial depression in view that may last several years, an increase in the supply of labor must have a disastrous effect on wages. But has organized labor done all that it could or should to ward off unemployment and an industrial depression? Has it left undone certain things which, if done, would have made the coming of immigrants an advantage to all? If so, why not pay some attention to this neglected duty?

Why should there be unemployment when individuals able and willing to work are in need of things that labor can produce? Why should there be involuntary idleness when labor applied to the natural resources of the United States alone could produce enough to supply the wants of the world? Why should immigration from foreign lands create or add to pressure for employment when by far the greater part of the nation's natural resources are unused? In view of these facts why should unemployment now, or why should there have been a high cost of living—which is still with us—due to shortage of production?

Of course the obvious answer to these questions is that, although the natural resources of the United States are ample to supply the wants of the world and furnish luxuries besides, they are held as private property and can be used only on the owners' terms. Because these terms have been becoming more and more onerous, because entry for effort has become so high that it does not pay to build on them, because rents of improved lands have mounted so that it does not pay to do business on them, because coal and other mineral lands cost so much—when they can be bought at all—that they cannot be worked profitably, and because farm lands have boomed so that a farmer who pays the prices asked must work at a loss, the greater part of the land of the country which some one wants to use is being withheld. In addition production and trade are further discouraged and impeded by a tax system that imposes heavy burdens on industry and bears lightly on the privilege of holding valuable land. It is consequently no wonder that a high cost of living prevails, that in spite of a shortage in necessities men are involuntarily unemployed and, with a population of only 33 to the square mile, we seem so crowded and so lacking in opportunities for work that the coming or prospective coming of a few more millions makes organized labor shiver.

Under these circumstances there are two courses open to labor. One is to demand that the power of landlords to hold valuable land out of use be taken from them. While this may be done in more ways than one, the most convenient would be to take for public use the entire rental value of all lands, exclusive of improvements, and abolish all taxes on labor and its products. The other course is to demand stoppage of immigration which, though it will not put an end to existing unemployment, must prevent to some extent its intensification. The first course is by far the fairer and more effective. But to put it in effect powerful opposition must be overcome, the opposition of every predatory interest, together with the opposition of ignorant, misguided or deluded laborers. For this reason, perhaps, organized labor has chosen the easier way. It is leaving the predatory interests alone and attacking immigration. This course suits the interests perfectly. So long as they can control opportunities they can manage during normal times to make the number of jobs a little less than the number of men and keep wages down to the bare living point. So they are glad that labor is not attacking their legalized right to hold opportunities out of use. It suits them that the poor immigrant is attacked instead. But why would it not be far better for organized labor to concentrate its efforts on its real enemy?

SAMUEL DANZIGER.

HEALTH AND THE SUBMERGED

According to a bulletin released by the United States Public Health Service, a recent survey conducted in the State of Oregon revealed that more than 75,000 men, women and children, out of a total population of 783,000, are dependents, delinquents, or feeble minded. They are unable either to work or fight and are a constant drain on the finances, health and morality of the State.

In addition, more than 500 school children out of a total school enrolled population of 32,000 were found to be more or less mentally deficient. This fact is of much significance when it is remembered that the condition of the children of today is the best possible index to the condition of the community of tomorrow and indeed to the future of the race.

The figures yielded by the Oregon survey are considerably lower than the average shown by the draft examination, a fact that indicates, in the opinion of the U. S. Public Health Service officers, that they are certainly not higher than those that would be obtained by similar surveys in other States. It is considered greatly to Oregon's credit that it has been one of the first States to realize the importance of the problem and to take effective steps toward ascertaining the exact facts concerning it.

The survey was authorized by the Oregon Legislature and was carried out by the University of Oregon in collaboration with Dr. C. L. Carlisle of the U. S. Public Health Service.

"The making of the survey," said Surgeon-General H. S. Cumming, "was not an easy task, for in Oregon, as in many other States, comparatively few of the types involved are being cared for in institutions. The rest are widely scattered and were practically unknown, for most of them are quiet and do not attract attention as do the insane and criminal. It was therefore necessary to build an organization to find them and report on them.

"The prevention and correction of mental defectiveness is one of the great public health problems of today. It enters into many phases of our work and its influence continually crops out unexpectedly. For instance, recent studies made in connection with the spread of venereal diseases have shown that feeble mindedness is an important factor in prostitution. Again, work of the U. S. Public Health Service in connection with juvenile courts shows that a marked proportion of juvenile delinquency is traceable to some degree of mental deficiency in the offender.

"For years public health officials have concerned themselves only with the disorders of physical health; but now they are realizing the significance of mental health also. The work in Oregon constituted that first state-wide survey which even begins to disclose the enormous drain on a State caused by mental defects.

"One of the objects of the work was to obtain for the people of Oregon an idea of the problem that confronted them and of the heavy annual loss, both economic and industrial, that it entailed. Another was to enable the Legislature to devise a program that would stop much of the loss, restore health, and bring to lives of industrial usefulness many of those now down and out, and, above all, to save hundreds of children from growing up to lives of misery."

EUROPEAN AIR LINE

The Rumanian Government approved a 20-year concession granted to the Franco-Rumanian Aerial Navigation Co. of Paris for the international transportation over Rumanian territory of passengers and merchandise in connection with the Paris-Strassburg - Prague - Vienna-Budapest - Belgrade-Bucharest-Constantinople air route.

The Rumanian Government reserves the right to operate on national air routes and on international routes to the city of Belgrade and the nearest Bulgarian air ports.

Injunctions Restore Feudalism

"The revival of the unrestrained use of the injunction imperils the stability of our economic structure," declared the recent trade union conference in Washington, D. C. The only remedy, in the face of usurped power, is for labor to ignore these unconstitutional writs, said the representatives of organized labor.

"For six years the Clayton act, accepted on all sides as the established law of the land, to an appreciable degree checked the abuse of the writ of injunction. A majority of the justices of the Supreme Court have swept away this strong barrier against a feudalistic legal concept, and labor finds iself again at the mercy of an unlimited use of judge-made law. The injunction as it is now used and abused in labor disputes is without sanction either in the Constitution or in the fundamental law of the land. It is a pure usurpation of power and authority. The only possible and practical remedy in the face of a power so usurped, and so completely unjustified, lies in a flat refusal on the part of labor to recognize or abide by the terms of injunctions which seek to prohibit the doing of acts which the workers have a lawful and guaranteed right to do, or which seek to compel workers to do those things which they have a lawful and guaranteed right not to do.

"This is the only course through which labor can find relief and this course it purposes to pursue. Labor realizes fully the consequences of such a course, but in the defense of American freedom and of American institutions, it is compelled to adopt this course, be the consequences what they may.

"The workers maintain that the Constitution of the United States is a living document, its provisions and guarantees as applicable today as when they were adopted. The workers maintain that in their every day life and work rights which the Constitution declares to be inalienable should in practice, as well as in theory, be inalienable.

"Among these rights is the right to liberty—freedom from involuntary servitude or compulsory labor, except as punishment for crime. This guarantee of the thirteenth amendment lives, and the workers are determined that it shall not be denied them.

"Nor shall this guarantee of their freedom be so distorted as to compel a group slavery in modern industry as reprehensible as was the individual, chattel slavery of old. Slavery, compulsory labor, the tying of men to their jobs, will be no more tolerated now than was chattel slavery then. It has no more right to exist and is just as repugnant under our democratic form of government as it would be under a government of monarchial, bureaucratic, or under any other form of government."

Aids to Bolshevism

The cunning of Bolshevists is harmless in this country when compared with the profiteering tactics of the steel trust, declared Comptroller of the Currency Williams in a letter to Judge Gary of the United States Steel Corporation, who is criticized for holding steel prices to the level fixed soon after the signing of the armistice.

The Federal official calls on the trust to reduce prices, which is possible without affecting wages or dividends. He says that the official figures of the trust show that in 1918 it charged on an average $30 more than was necessary to pay dividends on steel stocks for every ton of its products. Earnings were so large that during that year it could double all wages paid to its 268,710 employes and officers and have a surplus of nearly $10,000,000.

"All the diabolic cunning and striving of the Bolshevists of Russia," said Mr. Williams, "can do comparatively little harm here, little toward creating revolutionary and destructive impulse, compared with the effects of insistence by a great corporation in our midst such as yours, supposed to represent not only capital, but character and brains, on using the power given it by circumstances and the law to exact that last hair's weight of its pound of flesh.

"No insidious, sneaking propaganda of high or low brow apostles of ruin could put in the popular mind so much poison as refusal by such a corporation to do its part toward solving a great and difficult problem, reviving industry and business activities and promoting prosperity and the peace and happiness of humanity.

"I realize your desire as an executive to do the best possible for your stockholders. I contend, however, that profits for them, such as you gathered in during the war years, were not 'reasonable,' and in the present condition of the country that your prices are excessive and unjustifiable."

"Bill" Wilson Honored

As the first Secretary of Labor, William B. Wilson made his last address before organized labor at a reception given in his honor by the Central Labor Union on the eve of his retirement from office. President Gompers, Secretary Morrison and other members of the A. F. of L. executive council, together with other trade union executives joined in praising the trade unionist's administration of an office that is so entwined in the life of the American people, and especially the wage earners.

In replying to the kindly sentiments, the guest stated that for several years there has been a campaign waged to destroy the Department of Labor, carried on under the guise of attempts to establish a Department of Welfare. He said that the advocates of this plan did not dare openly attack the Department of Labor but hoped to cut it to pieces by transferring bureaus now under its jurisdiction to the new department. He said the women's bureau, the children's bureau and other branches of the department have been included in the tentative draft of the new scheme, which would leave the Trade Commissioner A. W. Ferrin, at Melbourne, Australia, reports that the New Castle Steelworks of the Broken Hill Proprietary Co. (Ltd.), which employs about 5000 men, has been closed on account of the strikes at the mines of this company.

Despatches from Buenas Ayres, under date of March 3, state that a general strike is in effect in the Province of Cordova, as a protest against certain governmental measures. The situation is admitted to be serious ,with prospects of further trouble.

The executive committee of the Swedish Socialist party has begun an agitation for the release of Eugene V. Debs and "the other imprisoned pacifists" in America. The committee is urging the International Socialist Bureau to start an international campaign in aid of this movement.

A cablegram from Consul General R. P. Skinner at London, dated February 16, 1921, states that shipping conditions in the United Kingdom are unchanged and that unemployment is increasing among seamen, shipbuilders and dock laborers. The port of Hull alone reports 2000 seamen, 1500 shipbuilders and 3000 dock laborers unemployed.

The international labor office at Geneva has reported a movement among the metal workers in France for a larger voice in settling hours, wages and working conditions, and one of the leading demands is "during a period of unemployment the management should agree to measures to alleviate distress by means of rosters, shortening hours of labor, etc."

The railroad strike situation between Monterey and San Luis Potosi, is described as serious. Bridges have been burned and tracks destroyed. Mexican Federal troops guarding trains have had several clashes with the strikers. Severe repressive measures are to be taken by the government due to the fact that political influences are regarded as being responsible for the outbreaks.

At Toronto, Ontario, an attempt to cut wages of building craftsmen by starting on the painters ended in disaster—for the contractors. The move was started on one large job and when the painters objected the Master Painters' Association declared a general lockout and their adoption of the non-union shop. The other building trades swung in behind the victimized painters and all hands quit. The employers quit in less than 48 hours.

Secretary of Agriculture Villareal of Mexico state that his department will spend about two millions annually in the United States for machinery and [illegible] employing union labor. It will be spent for oil drilling [illegible] and agricultural machinery. The new government of Mexico [illegible] General Obregon [illegible] entered into an agreement with the International Association of Machinists, having earned his living as a machinist for many years in the United States.

You Want the Truth

This year there will be stirring times in the Nation. Under government censorship it is increasingly difficult for the average man to get the real meaning of the social and political movements of the day.

LA FOLLETTE'S MAGAZINE

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong—on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

Publication of a new chart of the Umpqua river entrance and river as far as Reedsport is announced by the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Sailing from Rotterdam next month, the motorship "Lochatrine" will be the first of the 16,000-ton twin screw motorships to enter the Pacific Coast service of the Holland-America Line and the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company. The motorships are equipped with large refrigerator space for the carrying of California fruits.

A fire of unknown origin did considerable damage to the hemp cargo aboard the Japanese liner Korea Maru at her dock in Hongkong, according to cables received at San Francisco. After considerable effort on the part of her crew, the fire, which was confined to the hemp cargo, was extinguished. The vessel was undamaged from the fire, though the hemp cargo suffered. The Korea Maru was loading for her voyage back to San Francisco. She had no passengers aboard at the time of the fire.

A concrete argument in favor of internal combustion engines in place of steam for the propulsion of large ocean carriers has been revealed in New York in connection with the visit of Axel Johnson, president of the Johnson Line of Sweden on the new motorship Buenos Ayres. "Why don't Americans adopt the motorship?" Johnson asks, reviving the old question which figured so conspicuously in the affairs of the United States Shipping Board during the early days of the war.

Interesting figures on the possibilities of the Panama Canal have been given to the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce in response to an inquiry to Jay J. Morrow, acting governor of the Canal Zone. The canal has a theoretical maximum capacity of 16,550 ships, Governor Morrow advised. The average cargo handled through the canal is 3825 tons, including vessels in ballast, so that it is possible to handle 63,303,750 tons of cargo per annum with the present average load. The average size of the vessels passing through the canal is 3300 tons net, Panama Canal registry, or about 2700 tons net, registry measurement.

San Francisco offices of the Cunard Steamship Company have received advices from their New York offices stating that the liner Imperator, which was taken by Great Britain under the terms of the peace treaty, has been turned over to the company. Heretofore the vessel had been operated by the Cunard Line for the British. The Imperator is the largest vessel flying the British flag and is at present the largest steamship in the world in active service. She is of 52,000 gross tons, with a length of 919 feet, beam 98 feet and depth of 63 feet. The first class accommodations include 141 private baths, passenger elevators and other conveniences.

Owing to drop in ocean rates, one of the principal worries of shipping men is to get the vessels into port before their charter cancelling dates. Several steamers have been compelled to race against time, and the barkentine Russell Haviside had a narrow escape. The Russell Haviside, owned by the Pacific Freighters Company of San Francisco, arrived at Newcastle from Cape Town February 27 after a fifty-two day passage, according to a cable yesterday. The barkentine's cancellation date was February 28, so that she had only one day to spare. She was taken at 110 shilling to carry coal to the west coast of South America, and the going rate is now only 40 shillings.

Information has been received by Commander Wm. Glassford of the hydrographic office, San Francisco, that a large number of floating trees have been sighted by shipmasters running coastwise between Cape Blanco and Point Reyes. The trees were washed down from the rivers of Oregon and Washington and their presence along the coast are a menace to navigation. Capt. R. A. Wilson, master of the steamer Santa Inez, reported to Commander Glassford that on March 3 at 11 a. m. when in latitude 39 28 15 north, longitude 124 3 30 west, he passed two large trees, one of them about sixty feet long.

Conferences on wage adjustments between the Shipping Board and the representatives of the various unions have been postponed for two weeks, according to Harold H. Ebey, district director of operations. The agreement between the board and the unions terminated with the expiration of the usual thirty days' notice. The policy of the new board will be announced with the selection of the members by President Harding. The request for a conference was sent more than a week ago by the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association and other organizations which have had agreements with the board. Director Ebey stated that it would be useless to discuss the question of any new agreement on wages or working conditions until after the change in administration at Washington.

The "Adolph Vinnen" has arrived at San Francisco in tow of the tug "Sea Lion" of the Red Stack Company after an uneventful journey from the port of Santa Rosalia in Lower California, where she was a part of the fleet of German barks which were interned during the war. She was bought by the Robert Dollar Company and is to be commissioned for service in world trade. The "Adolph Vinnen" is about 5000 tons dead weight and is one of the largest sailing vessels afloat. The Dollar Company bought her from the English, to whom she was allotted by the peace conference at a ridiculously low rate.

Another sailing vessel due at this port from across the Pacific is exceedingly long in making her passage. It was recorded that the "Monongahela," now out nearly 100 days from Manila, should have arrived some two weeks ago at least. Aboard the craft are over twenty cadet seamen under training of the Sea Service Bureau of the U. S. Shipping Board. The vessel has cargo for the Pacific Steamship Company. She departed Manila December 3 with 2,200 tons of copra. The other vessels overdue are the schooner "Harvester," now out 121 days from the Tonga Islands, in the South Seas, and the schooner "Philippine," out 99 days from the Fiji Islands. The "Harvester" departed the islands November 4 and the "Philippine" sailed from the Fiji group November 26.

On a trial run on March 2 the liner Wenatchee, one of five 535 type steamers allocated to the Admiral Line for their passenger service out of Puget Sound in the trans-Pacific trade to Vladivostok and Oriental ports by the United States Shipping Board, made an average of 18.75 knots for six hours. The highest speed attained during the trial spin was 20.2 knots. The following day the Wenatchee was delivered to the Admiral Line and is now at New York. On March 12 the vessel will sail for San Francisco via ports with about 200 passengers, who are making the trip through to the Pacific Coast, going as far as Seattle, the terminus of the vessel's call. Delivery of the Wenatchee marked the first of the five vessels completed for the Admiral Line and the third of twelve of this type awarded to Pacific Coast passenger lines to be delivered.

The Buenos Ayres, on her maiden trip to San Francisco, loaded 1500 tons of oil in her fuel tanks before proceeding to New York. She arrived there, according to a dispatch from the East, with 1250 tons remaining. It is estimated that 300 tons will be required for the remainder of the voyage to Copenhagen, and, allowing a generous amount for emergencies, she should then have not less than 800 tons unconsumed. This oil, which cost $20 at San Francisco, is worth $43 in Sweden, according to Johnson. Thus the sale of the remainder would more than pay the oil bill for the entire voyage. If unsold, it would carry the vessel back to San Francisco with considerable to spare, and the total fuel bill for the round trip would be less than $30,000.

While there is little enough, as a matter of fact, which can be pointed out as specific proof of improvement, there is, nevertheless, growing and more confirmed opinion among shipping men that business is improving a little. There is less talk of a continued decline. The charter market is absolutely quiet on this coast as far as the closing of charters goes. None has been announced for the last ten days. On the other hand, brokers say that inquiries are becoming more numerous. There is no strength, however, to the offerings. Nothing is doing in grain, and lumber seems to be unable to regain its feet. Freight from the Orient is picking up a little, although the outbound vessels are light. Trade with Oceania is being bolstered up for the present by heavy wool shipments. Lumber continues to move in great quantities to the east coast, and canned goods are fairly active. Hawaiian trade has again resumed its annual prosperity.

The shipping world, more than any one other industry perhaps, is waiting with tense eagerness for the pronouncements of new policies by the incoming Federal administration, particularly with reference to the disposition of the United States Shipping Board. The intercoastal trade is probably the most vitally interested. That the new administration will soon call a halt to the vast losses of the Shipping Board is freely predicted by San Francisco shipping men. Although the board's reports do not reach such a startling total, many San Francisco men declare they have positive information that the losses are not less than $1,500,000 a day, including interest. One shipping man went so far as to predict that the new administration would immediately withdraw from operation all Shipping Board freighters except those which could be sold at market prices or chartered under the bare boat plan. This, he said, would be an admission that hundreds of millions had been lost in the building program for the war emergency, which admission, he asserted, must be made sooner or later.

WOODROW WILSON

An Appreciation of the Man

Unrelenting the tide of time rolls on. March the Fourth, 1921, has been heralded and passed away, a momentous day in the history of our country. By an unusual vote of the people, the complexion of our National Administration has been materially changed. The political party which has held the reins of government for the past eight years has been swept aside, and another takes its place. Our citizens now await the accomplishments of those whom they have chosen as their representatives and administrators; some with solicitude, many with hope, and others with circumspection. The new helmsman, President Harding, has been received with acclaim, and that quality of favor with which only the people of a democracy are capable; he starts the ship of state on a voyage with the full support of his Party, and the heartiest wishes of his people.

But what of the pilot who has just been relieved, Woodrow Wilson, the retiring President? With his cabinet and counsellors he withdraws to the seclusion of private citizenship. For five cruel and strenuous years he has steered our craft through the most treacherous and tumultuous period of the world's history; he has borne overwhelming burdens with the fortitude and confidence engendered with noble ideals. As the mantle of authority is relinquished, wearisome and oppressive tasks cease to crush his illustrious spirit.

The solution of such abstruse problems as the disturbed times have laid upon him required more than the power or intelligence of ordinary mortals to confront. With all the most bitter and brutal passions of men and nations inflamed, only an infinite power could meet the situation without arousing hatred or animosity. Mortal man being endowed with only finite qualities, some mistakes were predestinated.

We have cause to believe that where the struggle between principles of humanity or policy were intense, with Woodrow Wilson the former would be supreme. As to statesmanship and the greatness of the man, judgment of Wilson must be left to future historians.

Some of his qualities and actions, however, we are impelled to consider and review at this time. As Americans it would be unfair and unworthy of us to place the onus of the transgressions or omissions of the departed Administration upon the shoulders of Woodrow Wilson. Those advisers and counsellors, upon whom circumstances compelled him to rely for a certain measure of direction and information, must be the more responsible parties where the requirements of humanity failed to be conserved; because the principal attributes of Wilson were humane and his lofty ideals precluded the element of smallness.

As seamen we appreciate the most excellent worth of our retiring President to its fullest extent. We realize that no small degree of courage was required to support and to sign the seamen's "bill of rights" as embodied in the La Follette Act. We also know by that act, Woodrow Wilson invited and received all the hate and aggression that the forces of greed and despotism were capable of mustering; herein was revealed to what extent the heart of Wilson ruled stronger than his judgment.

The element of ingratitude which is inherent in man can be calculated to observe and at times magnify faults, while all the virtues of an individual are overlooked. Under such manner of appraisement does Woodrow Wilson appear to stand to-day before a certain percentage of thoughtless Americans.

To the seamen his excellent characteristics can never be forgotten. When we cried aloud to the world for redress of our grievances, and sought freedom from our bondage, Woodrow Wilson gave us ear, and tendered us succor, unafraid of the consequences he knew would inevitably follow his kindly and humane act.

Presidents have gone before; many Presidents will come and go again, each leaving an impression upon the sands of time, with memories of good or evil accomplishments. To those that go down to the sea in ships, one will always stand out before all others, loved and reverenced. The man who dared to loosen the shackles from the hands of seamen, in face of the most powerful and determined opposition of commercialism, will always be remembered with love and esteem. When the memory of other American Presidents shall have passed to oblivion, that of Wilson will still live; because it will be carried by seamen, with gratitude and respect to all corners of the earth.

Notwithstanding present day criticism, we believe that historians of the future will regard Woodrow Wilson as one of the greatest of American Presidents.

CHECK THEIR GAME

The rapacious practices of the railroad corporations, as elucidated by Senator La Follette in argument against the Winslow-Townsend bill, furnish considerable food for thought. In the light of methods pursued by the management of the roads during the war, and while under government control, it is not surprising that they should assume a desire to have the door of the U. S. Treasury swing at their particular pleasure, now that they are again in full control of our transportation system. The shameless effrontery of certain railroad managers has not been equaled by any other class of predatory profiteer.

During the war, when the nation was in need, the average citizen responded to the call without question. Men left their homes, gave up their careers or prospects thereof, sold their businesses, gave their lives, and in other ways made sacrifices in the interest of the country.

The railroads, however, assumed an antagonistic and defiant attitude towards those who were endeavoring to make the wheels of war activities run smooth.

As a matter of fact, the federal government was more than once openly defied, by one or other arrogant heads of large public corporations.

It was several months after the government took over management of the roads in 1918 before the slightest evidence of efficiency was visible in the administration departments, notwithstanding the fact that the personnel was but slightly altered. The pay granted by the commission award was withheld from the railroad workers until threat of a strike forced payment. From the manner in which the whole service was demoralized, for some time there appeared to be evidences of a deliberate plan to sabotage government ownership of the railroads, and to make the necessary experiment of such costly nature as to preclude future efforts along those lines.

At no time have the managements of the roads showed a tendency to submit to even the slightest regulation or control by national government. Orders and requests of such boards and commissions, vested with authority to issue the same, have been ignored at every opportunity and the authorities defied.

This has been especially true where the government has endeavored to bring about harmony in the relations between the railroad corporations and their employes.

The operators have always assumed the attitude that the employe must accept such conditions as the corporation may direct, and that it is none of the government's business. Only very recently the National Association of Railway Executives abolished its labor committee and decided to keep clear of national boards of adjustment. When a combination of capital attains a position which permits of disregard for public opinion and open defiance of government, it is time for its influence and activities to be curbed.

A continuous and insidious propaganda has been maintained by the commercialized press discrediting the efforts of railroad employes to secure a living wage through their organizations. The suggestions intimate that an organization of railroad workers efficient enough to enforce their demands would constitute a menace to the welfare of the nation. After careful preparation the open shop devotees are engaged in an effort to destroy the labor unions.

They care not by what methods the necessary funds for such a campaign are obtained, it serves their purpose just as well if obtained through legislative, or other devious ways from the U. S. Treasury direct. The work given to "outside" companies with interlocking control may cost the government more and the roads less, but it is the people's money and it is needed to destroy the Unions. Whoever suggested that the National Railroad Executives were permitted to wield too great a power for the welfare of this country?

SIXTH OF MARCH

Last Sunday the Sailors' Union of the Pacific passed its thirty-sixth birthday, and is still going strong; in fact, we are only just beginning to grow.

When the organizers of the Union met at San Francisco on the old Folsom street dock in the evening of March 6, 1885, they set several weighty tasks for themselves and those who followed them. The efforts of these pioneers has led to the construction of organizations of Seamen in the Pacific, Atlantic and Great Lake districts, which in turn have affiliated into the International Seamen's Union of America.

By sustained and united effort the conditions aboardship and status ashore of seamen in all branches have been materially improved. Our right to the freedom guaranteed by the Constitution to all citizens alike is no longer denied us. However, we still have some heavy tasks to perform before we attain the purposes for which we are organized.

We must continue to strive and struggle as we leave the years behind like mileposts on a journey. The prospects in the immediate future may appear uncertain to a few, but there is no obstacle that cannot be overcome when the right amount of courage and determination is exerted. Seamen in the past have faced difficulties under the most distressing circumstances, but the obstruction has always been left behind with the flight of time. The spirit of men is as strong today as in 1885; we are enjoying better conditions, and our situation is more favorable, especially as pertaining to the Pacific Coast. Therefore, we can face the future with confidence, look to the sheets and braces and stand up to the course, no matter what the weather. The seamen must continue to progress, so our efforts towards the goal must never cease.

The number of trade disputes in Great Britain causing stoppages of work, reported to have begun in 1920, was 1715, "the highest total recorded for any year," the official Labor Gazette states. The total number of workpeople involved in these disputes (including those thrown out of work at the establishments where the disputes occurred) was about 1,930,000, and a further 90,000 were involved in disputes in progress in 1920 which began in 1919. The aggregate loss of working days in all disputes in 1920 was about 27,000,000. "These totals are smaller than those for 1919," the Gazette explains, "but the number of workpeople involved is greater than that for any year prior to 1919, and the aggregate loss of working time shown is greater than in any year except 1912 and 1919."

THE ANGEL OF DISCONTENT

When the world was formed and the morning stars,
Upon their paths were sent,
The loftiest-browed of the angels was named
The Angel of Discontent.

And he dwelt with man in caves of the hills,
Where the crested serpent stings,
And the tiger tears and the she-wolf howls,
And he told of better things.

And he led men forth to the towered town,
And forth to the fields of corn;
And he told of the ampler work ahead
For which his race was born.

And he whispers to men of those hills he sees
In the blush of the golden west;
And they look to the light of his lifted eye
And they hate the name of rest.

In the light of that eye doth the slave behold
A hope that is high and brave,
And the madness of war comes into his blood,
For he knows himself a slave.

The serfs of wrong in the light of that eye
March on with victorious songs;
For the strength of the right comes into their hearts
When they behold their wrongs.

'Tis by the light of that lifted eye
That error's mists are rent—
A guide to the table-land of Truth
Is the Angel of Discontent.

And still he looks with his lifted eye,
And his glance is far away,
On a light that shines on the glimmering hills
Of a diviner day.

SAM WALTER FOSS.

The foregoing ardent poetical expression appeared some years ago in a copy of the American Federationist. The emotions of the poet will naturally find echo in the breasts of seafarers. It is the very spirit of life to the adventurer, and others who suffer and chafe under the restrictions enforced by industrial and commercial conditions of this period.

SHACKELTON TO TRY AGAIN

Reports from Christiania.—Sir Ernest Shackelton, the Antarctic explorer, will leave in May or June on a new polar expedition to the Arctic. He will take with him a dozen men, chiefly those who accompanied him on former expeditions, and contemplates being away for about two years.

The Norwegian whaling boat "Foca" has been purchased, and in all probability will first proceed to Hudson Bay, where 150 dogs will be procured. Thence the expedition will proceed by way of Baffins Bay, which will be reached, it is hoped, by the end of July, through Lancaster Sound, to Axel Heiberg's Land. From there Sir Ernest intends to explore the islands eastward to Parry Island, this being the main object of the expedition.

J. J. Tynan, general manager of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, has arrived at San Francisco on the Golden State from San Pedro, and announces that his San Francisco Bay yard has been awarded the contract for repair work on the tanker Liebre. The Bethlehem bid was for $40,000 and thirteen days' work. The next nearest bid called for $54,000 and seventeen days' work. The Liebre, now in drydock at San Pedro, where she was surveyed, will be brought here immediately. She received her injuries when she hit the beach at Asuncion Island in Santa Barbara channel last Monday night.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

THE "SEQUOYA" "SETTLEMENT"

In previous issues of THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL we have related the chief incidents of the unlawful procedure resorted to by the agents of the "British" steamship "Sequoya," owned by the Standard Oil Corporation, and officially decorated with the British flag, in securing Chinese crews under false pretenses, paying them illegal advances, and then paying them off with the jib downhaul at their own convenience, thereby concealing any fraudulent transactions, and saving their sterling.

James S. Alina, secretary of the Oriental Seafarers' Union in New York, has just informed us that in the case of the 33 Chinese seamen signed on the "Sequoya" on December 29th, and summarily discharged one month and one day afterward, without ever leaving port, the Standard Oil Corporation decided to settle with the crew, probably to avoid the publicity for backing illegal advance securities, in favor of one George Wong, a Chinese crimp at No. 48 Mott Street, New York.

The company admitted the unlawful transaction, but disclaimed the payment of any advance in this instance, as the ship had not yet sailed and the notes would not have become due until three days after she had left port.

In accordance with this arrangement the wages due the men for one month and one day's labor were paid them at the headquarters of the Oriental Union, 66 New Bowery.

Officials Show Negligence

From the amounts due the crew, 33 1/3 per cent. was deducted for counsel fees, which we regard as an altogether unnecessary expense on the men.

In our opinion, and according to our own experiences in handling cases of this kind, the United States District Attorney, and the United States Commissioner's office were fully qualified to handle the subject, or to send it up to the United States Court on a criminal prosecution for violating a Federal statute. The company would undoubtedly have climbed down to avoid the ill-fame and unsavory exposure which a criminal prosecution would have involved.

Moreover, we believe that with judicious urging the company would have been willing to pay the counsel fees, as an indirect form of compensation to the crew for unjustifiable discharge.

According to statements made by the Chinese crew, the company offered to return them to the service of the "Sequoya," if they would consent to being re-signed at the British rate of wages, 15 pound sterling per month.

Peculiar Charge Accounts

It was because they refused to break the American law that the crew of the "Sequoya" were discharged, and not because their services were not required. When we reflect that at the present rate of exchange the British currency is the below "parity," we must concede that in this one respect at least the crew of the "Sequoya" acted wisely and loyally.

In connection with the foregoing it will be interesting to read the following statement of account with the Chinese crimp signed by a member of the "Sequoya's" crew. Every one of them held a written statement of similar import:

"S/S 'Sequoya' Br., Standard Oil S/S Co.
"Chow Ah Kum, No. 2 Fireman:

Wages,	$95.00
Advance:	95.00
Commission fee:	13.50
One week boarding:	5.00
Received from Kow Low, boarding master,	76.50
	95.00

Hong Vik & Co.,
17 Pell St., New York City."

Judging from the foregoing, it is more than evident that the old blood money system is still in full vogue, and insidious operation among the antiquarian Joss worshipers of New York's darkest Chinatown.

"Tricks That Are Vain"

Comrade Alina informs us, that in consequence of these proceedings, George Wong, the King of Chinatown, inspired a gang of his trusty tongmen to fall afoul of several members of the "Sequoya's" late crew and beat them up.

Our only comment on this hard luck sequel is, that if they were beaten hard enough to infuse a little Melican sea-sense into their ossified craniums, they may come back some time with sufficient vim and advanced ideas of self-protection to put the redoubtable George Wong and his henchmen and partners in crime out of commission for good.

Eye Protection

Comrade Jacob Christiansen, a brother of Mr. Oscar Christiansen, Philadelphia agent of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, met with an intensely painful accident recently on board a Standard Oil steamer, under repairs at Robin's drydock, Brooklyn, which calls attention to a long-felt want among men employed in the Merchant Marine.

Comrade Christiansen was at work with a number of other seamen, chipping iron rust in the forepeak of a tanker, when a sliver of detached metal flew out and imbedded itself deeply into the ball of his right eye.

The injured man was sent to the company's physician at Broadway for treatment. But the doctor decided that it was a case for a specialist to deal with, and sent him forthwith to a licensed oculist for expert treatment. The sliver was successfully removed.

Fortunately the offending particle did not pierce the pupil of his eye and our comrade will not, therefore, lose his sight.

A miss may be as good as a mile, but in these days of steel hulks and constant chipping, every sailor or fireman in the service should be furnished with a pair of goggles to protect his eyesight. This provision should be made obligatory on all shipowners, and in cases where they fail or refuse to comply therewith, seamen should be granted the right to protect their own eyesight by refusing to chip.

Submarine S-48

The submarine S-48 launched at the yards of the Lake Torpedo Company, Bridgeport, Conn., on February 26, is acclaimed as the latest development in submarine construction for the United States Navy. The S-48 is 260 feet long.

The hull is constructed to withstand the pressure incident to submergence at a depth of 200 feet, and is especially designed for protection against depth bomb shock. The wireless apparatus is designed to operate with equal facility whether submerged or running on the surface.

The battery will consist of five 21-inch torpedo tubes and one 4-inch rifle.

Cause, Effect, and Remedy

According to reports from Washington, the Federal Reserve Board foresees a period of intense competition in world shipping from a recent survey of foreign and domestic transportation conditions. This situation is attributed, according to the report, to overproduction in shipbuilding the world over, thus creating an excess of available tonnage over and above the actual commercial requirements of the world. Reports are coming from abroad of cancellation of shipbuilding contracts on a large scale in foreign countries.

"This would indicate," the board says, "that for the time being the peak of shipbuilding in foreign countries, as well as in the United States has been passed."

In conclusion, the board views with grave concern the extraordinary efforts being made by foreign nations to secure a more definite and larger share of the carrying trade for themselves, and the sweeping rate cuts in ocean carried freights resulting.

The cause of the present shipping crisis is world-wide industrial and political confusion; the result of which is commercial stagnation.

The remedy, insofar as American commerce is concerned, is patience during the season of panic and a strict enforcement of the La Follette law and the Jones Merchant Marine Act, both before and after it is over.

When stable political and industrial conditions have been re-established among the disrupted nations there will not be enough ships in commission to accommodate the volume of commerce that will ensue.

Demands will be heavy at once, and there will not be ships enough to supply international requirements for a long time thereafter.

In that event the one best weapon in the hands of the United States will be to compel strict international observance of their Maritime Laws, and reduce the power of unfair competition by enforcing equal terms and conditions upon their competitors.

That will be a task for the United States Government and ship operators, as well as the seamen's unions, to perform.

Mariners are Liberal Minded

For the information of the misguided members of the Colored Waiters' Alliance of Baltimore we desire to point out that the men best qualified for sea service in the capacity of waiters, are the members of the International Seamen's Union of America, recognized as such, and not the members of the Hotel and Restaurant Employers' Alliance. An employer never cuts a stick to beat his own back, therefore he never organizes his employes for their own benefit.

The Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association is one of the most liberal and progressive organizations in the American labor movement. It permits no race distinction within its ranks, except to prohibited Asiatics and outlawed bartenders. Comrade D. L. Grange, the able and efficient leader of the colored division of the organization, is one of the most distinguished and highly respected, as well as one of the most genuinely popular officials in the International Seamen's Union of America.

The Waiters' Alliance of Baltimore, may, therefore, rest assured that none of its members have been discriminated against because of their color.

But the sea service rightfully belongs to seamen, and men of any color, who have qualified by long experience, special training, and organization to uphold and dignify that service are not going to allow themselves to be displaced, or the dignity of their craft degraded by the influx of a bunch of overelated landlubbers, or casual excursionists, bent only on sightseeing and tip palming, and bound to get sea sick and spill the beans.

Men adapted by habit and experience to hotel, or restaurant work, will always find it to their own interests, as well as to their peace of mind, to remain where their services are most needed and appreciated. By so doing they will stabilize their own calling, and dignify the importance of their own labor.

If the members of 836 are union men they should be able to appreciate the anomaly of their present position at once, and desist from their ill-advised attempt to injure or annoy a kindred organization to their own disadvantage.

"Cobbler stick to thy last," is an ancient adage, but newer and truer to-day than ever before, and those having the dignity and well-being of labor, as well as their own best interests as stake, should always keep it well in mind. J. H. W.

JUDGES AND INCOME TAX

When the Supreme Court held the salaries of its own members and of the President to be exempt from taxation, it based the decision on clearly expressed constitutional provisions forbidding reduction of the salaries of Federal judges and of the President during their term of office. There were opportunities to split hairs and argue that reduction of salaries by means of an income tax does not come within the constitutional inhibition. There would have been precedent for this, for the court has on many occasions decided that other constitutional provisions, equally clear, do not mean what they say.

Thus about twenty years ago the court upheld the levy of customs duties on imports from outlying United States territory in spite of constitutional inhibition of interstate tariffs. More recently it has upheld laws abridging freedom of speech and of the press in spite of the First Amendment, has upheld convictions of persons denied trial by jury in spite of the provision that "the trial of all crimes, except in case of impeachment, shall be by jury," and has construed other provisions so as to make them practically meaningless. In view of this record it is hard for a layman to explain why the learned judges were unable to split hairs with equal facility when called to pass on a constitutional question affecting their own personal interests. A minority of the court was consistent enough to offer such an argument, but the majority seemed to feel that the framers of the Constitution should be credited with ability and will to express their meaning clearly on at least one subject.

TRANSPORTATION OF W. GERMANY

The volume of traffic from Rotterdam and Amsterdam to points on the Rhine in Germany measuring the trans-shipment trade from abroad into and out of Germany during the year 1920 showed a large increase over that of the same period of the previous year. Further development in this line hinges entirely upon the restoration of normal conditions in Germany.

It is becoming more and more patent that there is to be a very sharp conflict between shipping interests of Great Britain, the Netherlands, and Belgium for this trans-shipmnet trade. It is already apparent that there is to be a marked change in the course of the import and export transportation business in Germany itself. The general movement is from the northern German ports of Hamburg, Bremen, and Emden to the outlet through the Rhine and Scheldt; and as a part of this movement, plans for the extension of the port of Cologne have been approved calling for the expenditure of 450,000,000 marks. Part of the scheme is for the deepening of the channel of the Rhine so as to accommodate seagoing vessels of considerable size, and thus permit the import and export of goods overseas without breaking bulk. The alternative of this direct oversea trade is the continued use of the large Rhine barges which have handled this trade heretofore. These barges are vessels, usually without power and towed in trains, built with comparatively small draft, but long and having a dead-weight capacity of as high as 3500 tons. Goods are passed from oversea vessels into these barges in Rotterdam, Amsterdam, and Antwerp with slight breaking of bulk, and under a very effective and economical system of handling; but, of course, there is the actual expense of trans-shipment and more or less disadvantage in having the goods handled en route aside from this actual expense. For this trans-shipment trade the competition is particularly keen between Rotterdam, representing the prime Rhine route, and Antwerp, representing the route of the Scheldt.

The signature of William Shakespeare written on the wall of Hampton Court, London, and dated 1606, has been pronounced authentic.

SAN FRANCISCO IMPROVEMENTS.

The port of San Francisco boasts one of the finest and most extensive land-locked harbors in the world. It covers an area of 460 square miles of water in its bay. There are fifteen miles of berth space for vessels, forty-one modern piers, and 135 acres of cargo space.

All the modern piers are wired for electric cargo handling apparatus, and the tracks of the Belt Line Railroad system were recently extended to eight additional piers.

The China Basin warehouse project provides for the building of a 990-foot bulkhead wharf with shipwide track, and erection of a warehouse 816 feet in length and six stories in height. In addition to this giant undertaking ship hoists are to be mounted on the roof of the warehouse, which will permit unloading direct to the building. Numerous elevators will be part of the warehouse equipment, and with other modern improvements this will constitute one of the most up-to-date units for shipping in the world.

WHEN MONEY FAILS

"Pirates?" Capt. Charley Thompson, who took President Harding fishing in Florida and who is said to know more about the old pirate cruising grounds than any other navigator, gave a grunt of disgust when questioned about pirates. "I'm fed up on pirates," he continued. "They were the biggest suckers that ever lived. Pirates sure had a hard life, I'll say. They were the original dollar-a-year men. They worked for practically nothing.

"Money? Of course, they got money. But it was no good to them. All they could do was to bury it. Suppose some hard-working pirate wanted to retire from pirate life, buy a nice farm and some blooded cattle and settle down. Could he do it? Not a chance. The first look anybody got at his box of dubloons, a plain clothes man from the nearest precinct would be showing him the star on the lapel of his vest.

"Suppose he did take a nice coat and pair of pants off some Spanish Don. The minute he wore it down the Prado in Havana, somebody would mention that it looked like the suit Bill Garcia hadn't paid for yet. Two weeks later the pirate would be doing a buck and wing on air. A self-respecting pirate couldn't even get a hair-cut in London for fear somebody would notice his earrings. "The trouble with the pirate was their money was no good to them." There are people right now singing "Seventeen men on a dead man's chest." They work hard and suffer all kinds of privations and hardships to get their money and then bury it where it is out of their reach and can do them no good. The pirates had to take a chance to make their money work for them. All anyone has to do nowadays is to drop around to the postmaster or his bank and buy Government Savings Securities, Treasury Savings Stamps and Savings Certificates.

It is not necessary to take a chance. The securities are safe as the government. They keep the money invested in them working and ready when needed.

Always demand the Union Label!

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Conservative A. F. of L. Program

Because nobody brought forward a substitute program, the purely defensive and negative declaration which was presented to the emergency conference of the executives of the national and international unions comprising the American Federation of Labor and the "Big Four" independent railroad brotherhoods, was adopted with only minor amendments. The official statement of organized labor's present position—which is that labor stands pat on its rates of wages and other gains, and defies the industrial and judicial autocrats to rob it any further—came from the Executive Council.

"Reactionary employers," it sets forth, "have joined their might in a campaign which they are pleased to call a campaign for the 'open shop,' which they have been waging vigorously since the armistice. Compelled by the pressure of public opinion to accept labor's co-operation during the war, when the utmost conservation of productive energy was necessary to the life of the nation, they cast off all pretense immediately upon the passing of the emergency. . . .

"This campaign, disguised under the name open shop,' is primarily designed to destroy trade unions and break down or eliminate the whole principle of collective bargaining which has for years been accepted by the highest industrial authorities and by the American people, as a principle based upon justice and established permanently in our industrial life. . . .

"The unscrupulous pirateers of finance, having squeezed the consumer during the war period, are now broadening their field and enriching themselves by squeezing both the producer and the consumer. We declare again that the Government has been and continues impotent in the face of the criminal operations of profiteers, and must therefore accept the responsibility for a great portion of the indignation and resentment of the people against those who have filched their pockets for no reason except that they have power to do so.

"Going hand in hand with profiteering there has been and is a shameful and unjustified overcapitalization of industrial and commercial projects, compelling the consuming public to pay interest in the form of inflated prices on vast sums of money, back of which there is no foundation of intrinsic value or productive capacity.

Faulty Conduct of Industries

"Due to the maladministration of industry and principally and primarily because of the studied and calculated arbitrary policies of reactionary employers, there has come upon us a state of unemployment which is depriving fully three and a half million working people of the opportunity to earn a living.

"That there should be this tragic situation at a time when hardly any portion of the world has a sufficient supply of the necessities of life, is a commentary upon the conduct of those responsible for the conduct of industry which they cannot justify. It is a rebuke to their methods which only prompt and fundamental remedial action can remove. The condition of unemployment has been accentuated by keeping open the flood gates of immigration which has added to the confusion and given employers an additional weapon in their efforts to reduce the American standard of living.

"One result is the effort to lower wages. The stupidity of such policies as these, whether or not apparent to employers inspired only by a desire for monetary gain, is a matter which should give the most serious concern to the American people as a whole. Every reduction of wages is a reduction in the consuming power of the wage-earners, and is a direct blow at the prosperity and well-being of the country."

Demands Are Moderate

Upon the basis of this statement of the general conditions with which labor is now struggling, the conference report declares:

"Labor not only insists upon maintaining the present standards of wages and working conditions, but it declares its solemn purpose to continue to struggle to further improve those standards."

Industrial courts are mercilessly exposed as schemes for reducing the workers to industrial servitude without their consent, while the injunction evil is similarly handled.

"A majority of the justices of the Supreme Court," says the report, "have swept away the Clayton Act, which was a strong barrier against a feudalistic legal concept, and labor finds itself again at the mercy of an unlimited use of judge-made law. The injunction as it is now used and abused in labor disputes is a pure usurpation of power and authority. The only possible and practicable remedy in the face of a power so usurped and so completely unjustified lies in a flat refusal on the part of labor to recognize or abide by the terms of injunctions which seek to prohibit the doing of acts which the workers have a lawful and guaranteed right to do, or which seeks to compel workers to do those things which they have a lawful and guaranteed right to refuse to do. This is the only immediate course through which labor can find relief, and this course it purposes to pursue. Labor realizes fully the consequences of such a course, but in the defense of American freedom and of American institutions it is compelled to adopt this course, be the consequences what they may."

Must Disregard Injunctions

If that language means anything, it means that the responsible elected executives of the big unions comprising the American Federation of Labor, together with the railroad brotherhoods, have pledged themselves to defy injunctions in industrial disputes, and go to jail when sentenced for contempt of court. Hundreds of lawless injunctions against trade unionists are being issued in all parts of the United States, and except for Alexander Howatt of the Kansas coal miners, the country has not noticed any prominent labor officials going to jail to emphasize the injustice of this judge-made government. Yet the American Federation of Labor went on record, enthusiastically, in its Baltimore convention of 1916, in favor of defiance of injunctions. Possibly now the conditions are so much worse than in 1916 that the officials will make the promise good. If they do, public sentiment toward the organized labor movement will swiftly change, and labor will regain the respect it has lost in these four years, at the hands of its enemies.

After asking public support for and recognition of the principles of collective bargaining through trade union representatives of the workers' own selection, and of the right to strike, boycott and "exercise collective activities in furtherance of the welfare of labor," the conference proposes:

Enactment by Congress of legislation which shall protect the workers in their organized capacity against the concept that there is a property right in the labor of a human being;

Removal by Congress of the usurped power of the courts to declare unconstitutional laws enacted by Congress;

Repeal by the States of all industrial court laws and all restrictive and coercive laws, including the so-called open port law of Texas, and freedom from decisions of courts holding trade unions and individual members thereof liable in damages for the unlawful acts of others;

Enactment by Congress of a law declaring that labor organizations are not copartnerships and shall not be so treated in law or in equity;

Investigation by Congress of the activities of so-called private detective agencies in the field of industrial relations.

And many other measures of less importance.

The answer to the demand of the reactionaries for lower wages is worded: "We call for united support in the protection of standards of wages and conditions already gained, and we summon the workers to continued efforts to increase the consuming power, raise the standards and improve conditions of life and work."

Workers Should Control Tools

It is noticeable that nowhere in this long declaration—it covered twenty-one pages as handed out to the members of the conference—is there a word of reference to the principle of ownership of the means of work by the workers. The railroad workers' plan of public ownership is not mentioned, nor is democratic operation of industry suggested. Even the Machinists' and the Locomotive Engineers' industrial and banking operations are not noticed as a hopeful sign. Not a syllable of new tactics is to be found in the document, strong as is its note of defiance to triumphant reaction.

But on Thursday, the second day of the conference, there was taken a significant step, not anticipated by the Executive Council. Without a dissenting vote, the conference adpoted a resolution sponsored by Andrew Furuseth of the Seamen and championed by Wilson of the Patternmakers, Johnston of the Machinists and others, recommending to the friendly consideration of all labor organizations the purchase of the bonds of the State of North Dakota, issued to establish State-owned terminal elevators, flour mills, banks, and home-building activities. Spokesmen for the Non-partisan League program, headed by Governor Frazier, had appeared before the council. Spurgeon Odell, a farmer-banker, talked to the conference. His appeal was endorsed with warm cordiality. Except for Matthew Woll, eighth vice-president of the A. F. of L., no man present sought to weaken the alliance between organized labor and the progressive organized farmers of the Northwest.

The final act of the conference was to telegraph President-elect Harding its disapproval of his putting a business man in the post of Secretary of Labor. It was known in advance that Harding would ignore the desires of the organized labor movement of the nation.

A MYSTERY OF THE SEA

A recent dispatch to the press from Beauford, N. C., contains the following interesting story. A grim specter stood unseen at the helm of the Bath-built schooner "Carroll A. Deering" when she cleared Rio Janeiro harbor last December, riding light and winged out to sea with a Norfolk port to make, via the Barbados.

The ship was tough and trim from truck to keelson, sound throughout and sweetened to the ways of the sea by her year off the stocks. A stout New England shipmaster trod her quarter-deck. Above him clean, sound canvas towered away to the five great masts that drove more than a thousand tons through the water on airs that barely fanned the cheek. Today she is "the ghost ship of Diamond shoals," her bones bleaching in "the graveyard of the Atlantic," her master and crew vanished. No one knows where or why. She adds one more page to the sea's great book of mystery.

End of Career

There is no record of the "Deering's" last voyage. She sailed full handed. A month later she staggered blindly shoreward, alone by night, to her last berth on the shoal. No hand tended her wheel; no man stood to clack a sheet or spill the wind from her canvas. She was a dead ship. No living thing saw her end.

Sunset was drawing down the gloom of night when patrols from the life saving station looked their last for the day across the storm fretted shoals. Surges ran white over the menace of the sands, headstoned with relics of many a stout craft. But there was no sail in sight. The wide reach of sea beyond was empty to the gathering gale.

In the morning, the "Deering" lay before them in the grip of the sand, her canvas set and slatting to ribbons, her boat gear hammering overside, her boats and her people vanished. All day the life savers sought to reach her. Some of the crew might still be aboard. Time and again they were beaten back by wind and sea and it was a day later before it was known positively that the ship was empty, stripped of all life before she had plunged into the death trap.

There was no mark on her to show why she had been abandoned. She was apparently undamaged until the wind and sea had their will and slowly ripped her, timber from timber. Under drive of her sail the ship was buried beyond the power of tugs to pull her out. And in the weeks that have passed not a word has come to tell what became of her crew. Nobody has been washed up; no remnant of lifeboat or of clothing came ashore.

The battered hulk of the big vessel, with toppling masts and torn canvas, stands a ghostly monument to the mysterious power of the sea.

DECLINE OF HOLLAND FISHERIES

According to information received through consular sources, the Netherlands fishing industry generally, and especially the herring fishery, is in a very depressed state and present indications are that unless there is Government intervention or some other steps are taken to rehabilitate and protect the industry it will disappear after centuries of successful operation. During 1920 the fishing interests of the country tried the most radical experiments in the way of combinations without success. They restricted the output by limiting the fishing season and the number of boats allowed to participate in the work and they have tried price fixing. Success has been attained in neither case. The closing of Germany to the Dutch catch is held largely responsible for the present situation, but the fact that there has been only slight movement of Dutch fishing products in that direction since the German market was thrown open in December indicates that other and more far-reaching causes are operating in the business.

Spy's Story Shattered

Attorneys for the defense in the trial of Sid Hatfield and his co-defendants, shattered the story of C. E. Lively, Baldwin-Felts secret service man, who operated a restaurant and posed as a union man at Mingo to secure evidence against those charged with the death of seven detectives, last May.

The spy was forced to acknowledge that the Baldwin-Felts agency offered Mayor Testerman $1,000 if he would permit a machine gun in Matewan. Lively said he was paid $225 a month for his spy work and that he operated with a union card in his pocket in Colorado, Illinois, Missouri, Oklahoma and other States. For three hours attorneys for the defense grilled the spy and succeeded in riddling much of the sensational story the witness told the jury under careful coaching by the State's attorneys and those retained by the mine owners.

Railroads Handed Cash

The President has signed the Winslow-Townsend bill, which authorizes approximately $400,000,000 of the $600,000,000 due railroads. The Government guaranteed to meet the roads' expenses for six months after these properties were returned, last spring. Comptroller of the Treasury Warwick refused to pay money on this account until the roads had returned an itemized statement. It was found that the Federal official was sustained by the Cummins-Esch act, and the Winslow-Townsend bill was rushed through Congress to remedy the oversight. Representatives of the railroad unions opposed the bill and the conference of trade union executives, held in Washington, February 23, declared that the bill "is an unjustified and unjustifiable concession to the railroad owners who have shown a wanton disregard for law and lawful processes."

Labor News

Unemployment continues to grow unchecked throughout the Eastern States according to all reports emanating from those districts.

Unions affiliated with the Detroit Federation of Labor are voting on a referendum to change Labor Day from the first Monday in September to the first of May.

The American Federation of Teachers, chartered by the American Federation of Labor, has issued charters to 125 local unions with a total membership of more than 10,000.

The Hedrick Construction Company of Dallas, Texas, has signed a union shop agreement with the Carpenters' Union. This concern operates in several sections of the State and until recently was non-union.

The Cooks' and Waiters' Unions of San Francisco have decided to amalgamate. The referendum was carried by a slight margin in the Cooks' Union and by an overwhelming majority in the Waiters' Union.

At Olympia, Wash., printers employed on the Olympian and Recorder have been locked out. These employers violated their agreement and are attempting to establish the anti-union shop.

Employees of packing companies from every packing house center in the United States have been called to attened a conference at Omaha for discussion of a reported plan of the packers to discontinue contracts with their workmen.

The strike of organized shoe workers against two firms in St. Paul, Minn., that attempted to cut wages has been adjusted. The old status has been restored and the companies agree to establish former methods of handling differences.

At Toledo, O., the Ladies' Garment Workers' Union has signed a contract with the Conde Manufacturing Company and the Alexander Black Cloak Company. The 44-hour week is agreed to and the minimum rate will be $44 a week.

During the past month the American Federation of Labor issued charters for one new State Federation of Labor, seven for Central Labor Councils, six local trade unions and three Federal labor unions.

Sanction from sixteen railroad brotherhoods and unions for a strike of employes of the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railway was dispatched to local representatives of the unions following a midnight conference of the organization's officials at Chicago.

A $500,000 damage suit has been filed in the District Supreme Court at Washington by owners of the New York Call against Postmaster General Burleson. The complaint alleges that Burleson's action in closing the mails to the publication caused severe losses before mail privileges were restored by court orders.

Superior Court Judge Lawton of Worcester, Mass. has issued an injunction against [illegible] molders picketing two foundries where strikes have been on since June, 1919. One of the plants has been forced out of business and the other is doing no business. But this does not deter the judge from issuing a perpetual injunction against the iron molders.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Anyone knowing how Eugene McNulty, coalpasser, met his death recently at Boat Harbor, Newport News, Va., while employed on S. S. "Colquit," will confer a favor on his mother, Mrs. Frances McNulty, 511 Hemlock street, Scranton, Pa., or Silas B. Axtell, 9 State street, New York City, by communicating with either one.

Ole Toreson, born in Trondhjem, Norway, age about 30. His cousin, Tryggve Hagen, would like to hear from him. Address, Sailors' Union, San Francisco, Cal.

Father and mother of Nicolay C. Monsen, a native of Bergen, age 43, last heard from in San Francisco, are anxious to ascertain as to his whereabouts. Kindly communicate with Nicolay Monsen, Sjomandenes Aldershjem, Haugeveien, Bergen, Norway. 2-9-21

To the members of the crew of the "S. S. Acoh":—As I previously notfiied you, the court gave udgment for fifty-three days' penalty amounting to $118 and $10 for shortage of potatoes, $328 in all, a $90 wage the others proportional. Subsequently after the judge went away the penalty was cut to 53 days at $3 per day, making the amount $169 each on a $90 wage, the curt thinking that because the crew were paid wages to the time of their arrival in San Francisco, the Government should get credit for that. I believe the court was in error as the pay to San Francisco was under contract for time actually consumed, and had nothing to do with the penalty for not paying off in Manila, at least what was easily ascertainable there. I think the case should be appealed, and will appeal it unless a majority of the crew write me they do not want it appealed. If appealed it will be on the calendar for argument in February and may be decided in March or April, or not later than May. The question as to transportation can also be again raised on appeal, and I think it about year ago in Norfolk Va. 3-9-21 should be. S. B. Axtell, New York, N. Y.

Domestic and Naval

On his last day in office, President Wilson affixed his signature to a resolution which virtually repealed all of the war laws.

Mare Island Navy Yard estimators figure that it will cost $400,000 to place the predreadnaught "Vermont" in first-class shape. The vessel was placed out of commission at Mare Island last year.

Plans prepared by the U. S. Public Health Service and about to be put into effect will largely increase the hospital facilities for ex-service men in Pennsylvania, particularly at Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

The National Association of Railway Executives, at a meeting recently, voted to abolish its labor committee, asserting that its further maintenance was a constant invitation to seek a uniform settlement of labor matters which ought to be settled between each railroad and its own employes. The association also decided to stand clear of national boards of adjustment.

Clear signals from the navy's big radio towers at Pearl Harbor, Hawai, were distinctly heard by the ship's wireless set on the Shipping Board steamer Eastport, while that craft was lying in the port of Stockholm, Sweden, according to advices received by Lieutenant-Commander E. C. Raguet, district communication superintendent, from H. M. Lundgren, wireless operator aboard the freighter.

At the annual British shipmasters' dinner, recently held at Liverpool, William Marconi announced discovery of a new wireless invention by which vessels may be guided during dense fogs. The invention is based on a principle by which electric waves may be sent in any definite direction like flashes from a lighthouse. These waves would take the place of leading lights in thick weather.

The U. S. Shipping Board has declared that the agreement between the International Mercantile Marine Corporation and the British Admiralty, requiring the corporation to operate its ships without injury to British commerce, is inimical to the foreign commerce of the United States. The agreement is also declared to be at variance with both the letter and spirit of the merchant marine act of 1920.

The destroyer "Stoddert" has arrived at San Diego with the first detailed story of the sinking of the U. S. torpedo boat "Woolsey" on February 26 off Coiba Island. The collision between the destroyer and freighter "Steel Inventor" occurred at 1 o'clock in the morning. Fifteen bluejackets who were sleeping in the after compartment were drowned like rats in a trap when the prow of the "Steel Inventor" virtually cut the "Woolsey" in two, the after part of the ship sinking in 1000 fathoms of water. A number of bluejackets sleeping on deck were washed overboard. They were rescued by the destroyers "Wickes," "Philip," "Aaron Ward" and "Buchanan," which threw their searchlights on the scene of the disaster and located the bluejackets swimming amongst the wreckage. Destroyer Division No. 15, of which the ill-fated "Woolsey" was a unit, was steaming in two column formation, 1000 yards apart, at a speed of 19½ knots.

Domestic and Naval

A mild epidemic of smallpox broke out on the U. S. dreadnaught "Mississippi" of the Pacific fleet. Twenty-four of the vessel's complement were landed and transferred to the Canal Zone hospital at Ancon.

Mare Island officers have advised the Navy Department that the superdreadnaught "California" is 95.2 per cent. finished, the battleship "Montana" is 17.4 per cent. compelted, the destroyer "Perry" is 55.2 per cent. finished, and her sister ship, "Decatur," is 53.3 per cent. completed.

One person in every 164 in San Francisco and vicinity traveled abroad during 1920, according to figures compiled by the Federal Passport Agency at San Francisco. During 1920 passports to the number of 164,354 were issued throughout the entire United States.

Nearly one-half of the nation's record-breaking overseas commerce in the past fiscal year was carried in American ships. The overseas trade reached the unprecedented total of $11,875,424,000 and $5,071,905,000 of it was carried in American owned vessels as against $368,359,000 carried in American bottoms the year before the war.

At Philadelphia the U. S. Public Health Service has recently acquired from the Navy a large hospital for the care of ex-service men suffering from nervous and mental diseases. Its capacity is between 400 and 500. Recent heavy demands for accommodation by this type of patients have conclusively shown the need for this hospital, which, it is hoped, may become permanently devoted to its present use.

Advices from the East state that the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation has decided to equip its four new 20,000-ton ore carriers with steam engines, although it was reported Diesels were to power the vessels. The steamers are to be built for the Ore Steamship Company, a subsidiary of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, and two of them will be constructed on San Francisco bay. A bond issue of $20,000,000 has been floated for this purpose.

At Pittsburg the capacity of the Marine Hospital (No. 15) will be trebled at first by the addition of a dozen portable buildings of approved type, and later, when Congress appropriates the necessary money, by new and permanent brick and tile construction. At present funds are available for the erection of portable temporary buildings only. The importance of Pittsburgh and the growing demand on the Government's hospital facilities there make these additions imperative.

A ruling which will have considerable bearing on the incipient intercoastal passenger trade has just been made at Washington by President Wilson. Hereafter, the President ruled, American citizens will not require passports for transportation from one American port to another, via a foreign port, provided the passenger does not stop over at the foreign port. An example of such a case is the trip from Baltimore to San Francisco by way of Havana, which passage is now being offered westward by Matson and P. C. S. S. steamers and which will shortly be available eastbound. This ruling is expected to remove a great drawback to pleasure travel over this route.

A broken agreement by the Grays Harbor Iron Works has forced iron molders and machinists on the street.

An alliance which has for its purpose defense against the Bolshevika has been entered into by Poland, Hungary and Rumania, according to reports from Budapest.

Five hundred and forty-three vessels, with tonnage totaling 672,278, arrived at Hamburg during the month of February. Of these thirty-three flew the American flag.

Eleven persons have been killed, more than 100 wounded and 500 others arrested in connection with the disorders which seem to have been the outcome of a revolutionary plot having ramifications throughout Tuscany, in Italy.

The Palace Clothing Company, operating one of the largest tailor shops in Minneapolis, has agreed to resume relations with the Journeymen Tailors' Union. The union shop and a 5 per cent. wage increase feature the adjustment.

Moscow despatches quote the Soviet organ "Isvestia" as stating that Soviet Russia is working to create a federation of all states which formed part of the old Russian empire and since have become detached from it. The object stated is to prevent "the growing entente influence" in those countries.

The German Communist party has made the ultimatum delivered by the allies to the German delegation in London the occasion for a revolutionary proclamation, in which the German workingmen are called on to overthrow the government, erect a Soviet state and effect a political and economic alliance with Russia.

The "Maoriland Worker" states, at the recent Science Congress in Melbourne, it was demonstrated that a forty-eight-hour week was more productive than a fifty-five or sixty-six-hour week. Here is an idea for the "more productioners" of the Welfare League. Let us reduce hours and increase production—by absorbing the unemployed who wish to produce but are not permitted to do so by the capitalist exploiters.

At Buenos Aires criminal action has been begun against Senator E. del Valle Iberlucea by the public prosecutor of the city of Bahia Blanca, who alleges the Senator made seditious statements in an address advocating the adhesion of Argentine Socialists to the third internationale of Moscow. The prosecutor has announced he will ask the court to sentence the Senator to four and one-half years in prison and to take from him the rights of citizenship. The Argentine Senate will be asked to remove Senatorial immunity so that the case may be tried.

The council of the League of Nations, in its reply to the American note on the mandates question, invites the United States to send a representative to the next meeting of the council to be held in April. The reply was cabled to Washington by the American embassy. Concerning the Island of Yap, the reply says the council was obliged to accept the decision of the supreme council. It indicates, however, that the whole question may be re-opened if the Washington government sees fit to send a plenipotentiary to discuss the matter.

"Who is at the phone?"

"Your wife, sir."

"What does she want?"

"The only word I can understand is 'idiot,' sir."

"Hold the line. She probably wants to talk to me."

Manager—"I like your voice, Miss Gargle, but I can't understand your actions at the beginning of your song."

New Soubret—"My actions?"

"Yes; the business with your eyes and shoulders. I can see no excuse in the song for that."

"It is in the music."

"In the music?"

"Yes. Right here after the introduction it says 'vamp till ready.'"

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Development Policies and Management Reviewed

AN APPRAISAL

The close of the Wilson administration affords a suitable occasion for an appraisal of the United States Department of Labor. For forty-eight years, organized labor and social reformers strove to persuade Congress to establish a federal department charged with the duty of guarding the interests of the working people of the country. On March 4, 1913, the department actually came into statutory life. It has had eight years of life under one management.

The department was first sought by wage-workers who had borne the burden of the Civil War. They were confronted with economic problems which they and the country at large appeared to be unable to master. The instrument they wished to see created for their own relief is, however, now, a half-century later, in existence, and by the irony of history another generation of wage-earners is faced with difficulties not less grievous nor less confusing than those which the veterans of the Civil War envisaged when they returned from the long campaign to resume the duties of a peace era of production and readjustment.

As a separate body, the Department of Labor was formally created on the day that President Wilson first came into office. The life of the department has been coincident with the Wilson administration. The present Secretary of Labor and his principal assistants have been in office continuously for eight years. Theirs has been the responsibility for building. They have been considerably limited by the lack of funds. During the first months of its existence, the Department of Labor lived on the charity of the Department of Commerce. The broad policy of the Department of Labor was, moreover, outlined by Congress. In the first section of the act creating it, Congress said that "the purpose of the Department of Labor shall be to foster, promote and develop the welfare of the wage-earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment." This underlying policy as formulated in the organic law ought to be kept in mind in evaluating the actual achievements. Many good citizens criticize the Department of Labor on the ground that it is a partisan agency. Apparently Congress intended it to be devoted to the interests of industrial wage-earners, just as the Department of Agriculture is partisan in that its works relates exclusively to the agricultural interests and just as, similarly, the Department of Commerce is concerned with the needs of business and industry. The Department of Labor is partisan because of the separation of governmental functions. But it is fair to state that the department has never "regarded wage-earners who have associated together in unions as the only wage-earners for whom the law requires it to be solicitous." In the words of Secretary Wilson, "created in the interest of the welfare of all wage-earners in the United States, whether organized or unorganized, the department has been administered in the interest of all from its beginning." That this is a fair statement of the actual policy of the department, open-minded and sympathetic observers will agree. For although William B. Wilson was himself a trade union official and long identified with organized labor, it is true that he has been moved by a scrupulous sense of justice in his dealings with all classes of workers, whether they happened to be members of unions or not.

When the department came into existence it was chiefly an aggregation of independent bureaus. The Bureau of Labor Statistics was the first and oldest. This organization had originally been the Bureau of Labor, a part of the Department of Interior. Then it became the so-called "Department of Labor"—a department only in name—and later it was the Bureau of Labor in the Department of Commerce and Labor. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, as it is now known, has, within its history, performed notable public service. It has been administered by two men, at least, who stand in the front rank of those citizens who have wisely served their country. The first of these was the late Carroll D. Wright. Colonel Wright, first in the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics of Labor and afterwards in the Federal bureau, was a pioneer. No student in this country has, for his generation, done better work in the interpretation of the effects of industry on the life of the people. Colonel Wright had a real passion for democracy and a real understanding of the service that scrupulous research might render. Every modern student of industrial conditions finds himself constantly indebted to the studies initiated and carried on by Colonel Wright. Others also have attained distinction in the Bureau of Labor Statistics. With the name of Carroll D. Wright stands that of Royal Meeker, who, until last summer when he went to Geneva to take charge of the scientific work of the International Labor Office, had been, during the Wilson administrations, in charge of the bureau. Under Dr. Meeker the Bureau of Labor Statistics reached high distinction. He it was who was responsible for the development of the Federal studies in the cost of living, as well as for many other industrial researches of primary importance to the present. The Bureau of Labor Statistics carried on its cost of living inquiries with a delicate regard for scientific precision. Its findings are endlessly used in labor adjustments. Few better researches have been carried on anywhere by any agency, public or private, in this country or abroad. The cost of living inquiries of the Department of Labor are classics. This work has been done under difficulty. Ridiculously inadequate salaries have been paid. Scientists of national reputation have been paid $2,000 and $3,000 and less. But niggardly compensation has not restrained in any way the zeal of these devoted public servants. Its present chief is Ethelbert Stewart, one of the best known statisticians in the public service.

The Children's Bureau came to the Department of Labor from the old Department of Commerce and Labor. It has been administered during its entire life by Julia C. Lathrop. Its record has been brilliant. The infant mortality studies initiated and carried on by the Children's Bureau have made an outstanding contribution to the understanding of American life. This work has been accomplished with rigorous regard for scientific exactness. By virtue of these studies, the country now knows the human consequences of poverty and social neglect. The relation between inadequate income and infant death rates has been reduced almost to a mathematical formula. The country knows that at a certain wage level, a given number of children will inevitably die. It knows also that at higher wage levels certain numbers of children can be saved. The knowledge thus made available is leaven in the national lump.

The Children's Bureau brought out the facts and the conscience of the nation will never again be quiet until adequate remedies and readjustments have been undertaken. In other fields also, the Children's Bureau has been conspicuously a public servant. The logical conclusion of many of its studies has been expressed in a measure now before Congress, the Sheppard-Towner Bill. This proposal would further in the United States the same kind of public care for the health of women and children which has been applied with such notable success in Great Britain, New Zealand and elsewhere.

The Department of Labor also inherited the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization now divided into the Bureau of Immigration and the Bureau of Naturalization. These have been administrative rather than research institutions. Soon after the department was created, the Secretary of Labor was given the new duty of acting as mediator in industrial disputes. During the first years, however, this work was not adequately provided for in the appropriations. It was conducted from the office of the Secretary of Labor, as one of many duties. On the whole, however, in spite of the vagueness of the law creating this responsibility, and in spite of the inadequate organization permitted, a very considerable measure of success has been obtained with hardly more power than that which necessarily arises from the dignity of a cabinet office. The Secretary of Labor, through Commissioners of Conciliation, has ably and fairly mediated in many industrial controversies. The large number of settlements peacefully effected is a wholesome indication of the readiness of employers and of workers to utilize the peace-making service of Government in industrial conflicts. The settlements effected have been more numerous by far than the failures, and yet, as so often happens, the occasional failure, rather than the numerous successes, is remembered.

During the war, the department took on a number of new activities, some of which have been retained and more of which ought to have been retained. To meet the needs of the war emergency, the United States Employment Service was developed. This had already existed in embryonic form as a division of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization. During the

COAL PROFITS AND UNIONS

Students of our universities are proving that they are advised on modern social and industrial conditions. The following clever article, under the caption, "Profits in the Coal Industry Since 1915," was submitted as class work in economics at the University of California, by Mildred Everett. The interesting manner in which the subject has been treated warrants publication, and is reproduced for the benefit of our Journal readers.

By MILDRED EVERETT

The United States contains fifty-two per cent. of the total available coal reserves of the world; Canadian deposits, which rank next, approximate seventeen per cent. Our exports of coal have never been large; the pay and standard of living of our miners is poor and miserable; but in spite of these facts the price of coal has mounted steadily until it has reached an exorbitant figure. The mine operators contend that any advance in pay to their employes must be reflected in higher prices for coal to the public. In consideration of the great sacrifices required of the miners, during the war period, it is not surprising that they should exhibit a desire to participate in a small percentage of the huge profits made by those who obtained benefits from the nation's extremity.

During a deadlock between miners and operators, William Gibbs McAdoo telegraphed to Harry R. Garfield, Federal Fuel Administrator; "I am convinced that the increases proposed for the mine workers are just and reasonable, but I have grave doubts as to whether the mine operators are entitled to increase the price of coal to consumers because thereof." In the year 1917 many mine owners made shocking and indefensible profits on bituminous coal. I know this because as Secretary of the Treasury, I examined, May '18, their income tax returns to the Treasury. Before deduction of excess-profits taxes, which were less in 1917 than now, these returns showed earnings on capital stock ranging from 15% to 2000%. Earnings of 100-300% on capital stock were not uncommon. . . . If profits were even measurably as great in 1918 as in 1917, operators can well afford to pay the increased wages to the miners and still have perhaps a larger return upon the capital employed in the mines than they are justly entitled to. In behalf of the public, already over-burdened with the high cost of living, I earnestly urge that the bituminous coal operators be not permitted to impose an additional charge for coal until the income tax returns be examined." Mr. McAdoo advises publishing these.

The operators, in turn, claimed his implications to be false and said "his misleading statements and insinuations are the kind of stuff Bolshevism breeds upon." They do not however wish the truth known to the public and recalled a clause of the Revenue Act making it unlawful for a Treasury official or agent to divulge confidential information which comes to him in his official capacity. They asked, "Will William Gibbs McAdoo be able to run for the Presidency if he is in jail?" accusing him of feathering his political nest as an aspirant to the candidacy for United States President. Of course it has since been proven that McAdoo did not aspire to the candidacy and in fact did not want it, but these men seem to care very little for the truth—beyond keeping as much hidden as might be a hindrance to their own selfish schemes. As for the accusation regarding Bolshevism—it needs no answer, for every one knows it is the unscrupulous profiteer who sacrifices the nation's interest to satisfy his greed.

Mr. McAdoo's suggestion of publishing the income tax lists of the great profits is an excellent idea. As the Wilkes-Barre Record says, "The situation gives startling emphasis to the fact that in the labor controversies the public is almost entirely in the dark. The public is threatened with calamity by the stoppage of utilities, yet does not know which is the right and which the wrong side. In controversies threatening national disaster public sympathy would make gouging less easy." Fuel Administrator Garfield speaks of the large income and excess-profits taxes which "were upward of thirty cents a ton in 1918," saying because of this, the returns were not so great. However, the very fact that the income and excess-profits taxes were so great would make us believe the profits big. In any case the people of a Democracy should be allowed to form their own opinions and not have all their decisions handed them "ready-made" with absolutely no knowledge of facts. The Internal Revenue Bureau did publish some general statements, saying the coal operators in 1914 and 1915 lost money considering depreciation of plants and depletion of the cost of value of the coal in the ground. In 1916 all coal companies in the United States began making profit, showing a profit of from ten to thirty-five per cent on capital invested except in the extreme West. In 1917 fabulous profits, the average being from one hundred to one hundred and fifty per cent. on invested capital. 1918, range in the Appalachian was from fifteen to three hundred per cent.; in the Rocky Mountain district it went as high as four hundred per cent. Some operators then claimed to have actually lost money."

It was claimed that the miners were producing less than formerly; that the decrease in production would be still less if they were given the six-hour day; furthermore, that the miner was not troubled with the high cost of living as were other people. The New York Tribune says that from 1917 to 1920 the cost of living to the miner advanced but 2.6%, which is less than that of the carpenter, the bank clerk, the preacher and the laborer in the cities of the State. The miner has no rent problem, no gas or fuel bills but the flat rate charge of one dollar or a dollar and a half a month. It also compares the cost of a doctor's visit to the miner, and to some one in the city. Then it says that the miner pays sixty-four per cent. of his house rent for union dues (This time however, not laying such stress on the fact that he pays "almost no rent"), or more than fuel and doctor bill. (And well he may—it is money well spent.) This may sound very convincing to some, but having spent a large part of my life in mining camps, and knowing something of conditions there, I interpret the facts somewhat differently. In the first place I should not agree that the miner had no rent problem—in general he has a much greater one than the city worker. The city tenant can not be ejected without some trouble to the landlord and at least thirty days' notice, while the miners homes are owned by the company. This furnishes one of the strongest weapons the company has against strikes for the men with their families are immediately forced to leave their homes, and it was not an uncommon thing for families to be turned out in the middle of the night—even in times of illness, and with little children. And as to the difference in doctor's bills, let us consider the difference in doctors. And although a large mine could afford to hire a good doctor—this is seldom the case; they are usually very incompetent. One large mine in particular, I am thinking of. If the men have enough money to go outside and get fixed up after the mine accidents they get well; but if they have to stay there and be treated by the company's doctor (for whose services a couple of thousand men pay about two and a half dollars a month each), they are usually known as "Tennessee Cripples"—the "Tennessee" being the name of the mine. Even correct statements may give false impressions and figures can be used for any purpose. I remember cases where the miners were thought to be getting enormous wages, but the public would have had a very different opinion had they known that the miners had to buy from the company's store,—paying enormous prices for everything, had to sign in blank for everything, and by the time the bill for supplies was deducted from the pay check, little was left of the "enormous wage." The Union has been the one hope for the miner and would be well worth it if it cost twice what it does.

Thirty hours a week seem to make a short working day—to the clerk, or carpenter, or city worker, who spends the time in well-ventilated places, or perhaps even in the sunshine—but it is very different down in the mine, with the gases, heat and stuffy air, to say nothing of the constant danger. However, Mr. George O. Smith, director of the U. S. Geological Survey, says the miners are asking for more work; the average miner's weekly time was very little over twenty-four hours a week. The miner works when the mine is open. It was said that "any industrious man who wants to work can under the present wage maintain a decent American standard of living." Yet here again differences may arise as to what is the "American Standard of Living." We may be reasonably sure, however, that the writer does not wish to accept it as his own standard. And is there any reason why men should enjoy piling up wealth for another man? An Oklahoma miner says, "I dug coal for seventy-five cents a ton when it sold for two dollars and fifty cents. Now it sells for five dollars and fifty cents (at the mine) and we are still paid seventy-five cents a ton."

Following is a table showing the production of coal in the United States from 1915 to 1919. Figures are expressed in thousands of gross tons.

Year	Total	Bituminous	Anthracite
1915	474,660	395,200	79,460
1916	526,873	448,678	78,195
1917	581,609	492,670	88,939
1918	605,546	517,309	88,237
1919	508,000	432,000	76,000

Production for the year 1919 had to be estimated as this table was compiled in November, 1919 (no more recent figures were available). Production was less in 1919 than since 1915 because of the slowness of demand and the car and labor shortage. The coal can not well be stored at the mines, and it is too bulky to permit rehandling between the producer and the large industrial consumer, but must go all the way in the same car whenever possible. It is interesting to note here that the industrial and domestic uses constitute about one half of our bituminous consumption, while the railroads use more than one fourth. Also that the western part of the United States contains more coal, but the real wealth of our coal lies in the Eastern and Interior Provinces.

During the past ten years the production of coal has developed remarkably, showing in 1918 an increase of 32% over the average production during the five years from 1909-1913. The output per man has increased steadily for a considerable period while in Great Britain it declined after 1918.

United States		Great Britain
Year	Output per man	Year	Output per man
1915	647.	1915	265.
1916	731.	1916	257.
1917	768.	1917	243.
1918	794.	1918	226.

A possible explanation of this is that 37% of the coal in the United States is machine-mined while only 7% in England is so mined. This is due largely to the English miner's dread of being replaced by machines, and also the difference in the English mines which makes machinery impractical.

There was a slowing-up of work in this country in July, 1919, due to any one of a number of reasons, perhaps partly to all. There were not enough underground cars and railway cars; the companies did not wish to see a wasting asset diminishing during an era of excess-profits duty; the railway companies did not wish to spend money on trucks while under sentence of dissolution; or the miners wished to do less work for more pay.

Although our exports have never been large, there is a deficit in production and export throughout the world and it is predicted that the United States will take the place in exporting, which is due her as the location of the largest coal reserves of the world. I tremble to think what the price here at home will be, if we have a world market for our coal. Unless some adequate method of regulating prices is evolved, the price will very probably keep right on going up.

TROPICAL EXPLORATIONS

Dr. H. H. Rusby, dean of the College of Pharmacy of Columbia University, will lead a scientific investigation next May into the unexplored areas of southern Venezuela, Bolivia, Ecuador and eastern Colombia. The enterprise is being financed by a Philadelphia chemical company.

The explorers will attempt to study and bring back for further examination specimens of birds, insects, flora, reptiles, fish and other creatures that abound in those regions. They also will seek new light on tropical diseases, their origin and their cure. The results of the expedition will be given to the world.

Dr. Rusby will be accompanied by Dr. William M. Mann, of the Bureau of Entomology in Washington; Professor E. N. Pearson, ichthyologist at the University of Indiana, and two motion picture men.

Proceeding from New York to La Paz, the expedition will cut across the Andes and follow Indian trails along a route of about 12,000 miles. The trip is expected to take eighteen months.

SEEKING STEEL FACTS

The current issue of the American Labor Legislation Review states that an official inquiry into the operation of the three-shift system in the iron and steel industry has been undertaken by the International Labor Office among all member countries of the League of Nations.

Information is particularly sought with respect to the extent to which the three-shift system has superseded the two-shift system in the iron and steel industry in the most important industrial countries and "the effect the change has had on the quality and quantity of output, on the economic use of plant, on the number of work people employed, on the frequency of accidents and on the interest and health of the workers."

Vets Score Profiteers

At a mass meeting of unemployed, arranged by ex-service men, at Minneapolis, Minn., scathing resolutions were adopted against business interests that applauded the boys in khaki three years ago and now show no interest in their distress.

A program to relieve the unemployed was agreed to and in urging its adoption by State, county and city officials, the meeting declared:

"We do not forget that those who, bandit like, enriched themselves during the war, did not hesitate to join our friends in singing 'Keep the Home Fires Burning,' and that these same profiteers who sang so lustily while we fought are today under the slogan of the non-union or 'open' shop, banded together for the purpose of putting out the fires of veterans and workers who assert their liberty and right to organize for their own protection. Through artificial unemployment they seek to make the hearthstones of the workers cold and their children hungry.

"We fought to make the world really safe for democracy. We fought not only to end the reign of the tyrant of Prussia, but to terminate the era of industrial kings and kaisers here at home.

"Work or fight" was the order sent to us three years ago and we fought and worked. Today we are jobless, while those who sat on the soft cushions bask in the sunshine of California and Florida enjoying the luxuries wrung from the blood of our comrades and our sacrifices."

A Matter of Business

A. R. McGrath, district superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph Company, has forwarded this notice to all managers:

"The slowing up of business has added to the ranks of the unemployed. In our own line we find the 'help' situation very favorable, as there is a surplus of operators, clerks, etc., available. We should now be able to secure new employees at lower ratings than now prevail.

"I notice a tendency on the part of some of our managers to engage new employees at the same rating as is paid old employees who are leaving the service. As you are aware, these ratings were made because of the length of service of the employee involved, together with the high cost of living, which, by the way, is rapidly coming down. In many cases new employees are receiving $76.25 instead of being hired at $60 or $65. These irregular ratings should be eliminated as fast as employees leave the service and new ones are employed. Please acknowledge receipt."

Rail Plan Not Rosy

Defenders of the Cummins-Esch railroad act are less enthusiastic than when the law was passed. Then financial interests were happy. Rates were boosted higher than ever. Interest was guaranteed and the prospects were rosy. People who made contrary predictions were called "croakers," but it would appear that the predictions of so-called pessimists have been verified.

The law is being attacked in the United States Supreme Court, rates have made shipments impossible and the "croakers" include those who defended the act, but now confess that the railroad question is far from settled.

One financial writer says: "Today there is just as much pessimism over the railroad outlook as there was optimism when the Cummins-Esch law was passed.

"The present basis of operation of the railroads is fundamentally unsound and cannot long continue."

Sing Different Tune

A few months ago labor was urged to greater production, and every social ill, including high prices, was laid at the door of "workers who refuse to produce."

These elements are now singing a different tune, as is indicated by this statement by the Washington correspondent to the Annalist, a financial paper published in the city of New York:

"'All dressed up and no place to go' is a phrase which one economist who has been studying conditions in Washington applied to the situation which the over-produced industries, farms and cotton fields found themselves facing with the foreign markets practically closed because of inability to buy."

The correspondent makes no comment on the inability of his own countrymen to buy, but he does state that it is "an undeniable fact that the industries of the Nation are overproduced."

Two Sets of Laws

"We live under two sets of laws, the law of the land and the law of the employer," said John P. Frey, editor of the International Molders' Journal, in an address at Altoona, Pa.

"The pay envelope," said the trade unionist, "determines our condition of living to a far greater extent than the law of the land. It determines the kind of home we shall live in, the kind of clothes we shall wear, the kind of food we shall eat, the kind of education we can give our children, our pleasures and our health largely. Statistics prove that health is largely dependent on the quality and quantity of food consumed and the conditions of sanitation existing in the home and the place of employment."

In defending the trade union movement, the speaker declared that he "would take chances for a square deal with the trade union rather than with a man who would sell rotten armor plate to the Government."

Operators Ignore Agreement

The agreement which ended a strike of coal miners in Alabama is being ignored by the coal owners, according to statements made by the workers' representatives to the commission that is now adjusting differences. The unionists stated that miners are being evicted from company houses and others are denied employment.

The commission was appointed by

World's Workers

The recent allied advance into Germany has resulted in renewed activities by the Communists who are advocating a general strike, and urging establishment of Soviets in that country.

Labor conditions in Italy are in a very disturbed condition, according to latest reports. Riots have taken place in several cities and the police have been put in possession of some of the factories.

All legal restrictions for the protection of seals have been removed from the operations of the Newfoundland sealing fleet, which sailed from St. John's, N. F., on its annual hunt. Nine steamers made the start.

Sanitary conditions on some of the Hawaiian sugar plantations were characterized as "horrible" by Chinosuke Yada, Japanese consul-general at Honolulu, who recently toured the islands. As a protest, the consul-general advised Japanese laborers not to strike, but to move to other plantatoins, where living and sanitary conditions were more modern.

At Vancouver, B. C., word has been received from New Zealand that the strike of waterfront workers there had come to an end and shippers were now loading. This will affect the passenger liner "Makura" of the Canadian Australasian line and the steamer "Canadian Winner" of the Canadian Government merchant marine. Both ships were delayed at Auckland by the strike.

Wages in Budapest are only fifteen to twenty times higher than they were in 1914. The cost of living, however, Pedlow estimates at least 100 times higher than seven years ago. "The average yearly income of 5700 employes is 12,000 crowns," he states. "In many instances such a salary is insufficient even to maintain life."

E. J. Jones, international organizer of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, has declared that unless Montreal packers considered wage schedules presented by their striking employes, he would communicate with all locals from Halifax to Winnipeg to obtain assistance for members in that city. He declared that, if it became necessary, a strike designed to tie up the meat industry throughout the Dominion would be called.

Striking marine stewards are supported by the Australian Worker in their refusal to submit their case to the Federal arbitration court. The strikers are demanding an eight-hour day and they decline to have a question arbitrated that has been accepted in Australia for many years. They claim that the scant justice accorded them in the past by the [illegible] court has caused them to lose faith in that institution.

Three hundred unemployed men marching behind a red banner and a band [illegible] made what they termed "a [illegible] demonstration" at Mexicali to show their need of employment. They ended their parade in front of the office of Governor Rojo, to whom they presented a petition asking for "better conditions." The Governor, who took office only a few days ago, addressed them promising to do "all in his power to help them get work." After the Governor issued speeding the men dispersed.

You Want the Truth

This year there will be stirring times in the Nation. Under government censorship it is increasingly difficult for the average man to get the real meaning of the social and political movements of the day.

LA FOLLETTE'S MAGAZINE

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong — on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

Pacific Coast Marine

The Inter-Island Steam Navigation Company of Hawaii is shortly to place an order at San Francisco for the construction of a passenger steamer, larger than any in the present fleet.

Fremont Morse, engineer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, has begun a check of all compass stations on the Pacific Coast. He will also inspect the tide-recording instruments along the Southern California Coast.

Reports to the marine department of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce state that the "West Neris" has been compelled to return to Honolulu on account of engine trouble. The "West Neris" was bound from San Francisco for Manila, and was 170 miles west of Honolulu when the trouble developed.

Estimates have been made by engineers from the Shipping Board as to the cost of improving the ventilation system on the liner "Golden State," the most glaring fault in this and other "535" Shipping Board liners. Pacific Mail officials believe that no time will be lost in correcting this difficulty.

The schooner "Roy Somers" is on the way from Tahiti, for San Francisco, with a cargo of copra. She is one of the oldest and most popular of the schooners in the South Sea trade and her owners are looking forward to a smart passage in spite of the hard luck tales of other vessels coming from that section of the world.

Two steamers of the Alaska Steamship Company's northern fleet, which have been under charter for several months, will soon return to Puget Sound to prepare to resume their runs to points in Alaska. The steamers are the "Juneau," returning from a voyage to Cuba, and the "Redondo," which has been on the coastwise trade between Portland and San Francisco.

The "Freeport Sulphur No. 5" arrived in the port of San Francisco with 5551 tons of sulphur from Freeport, Tex. The cargo is for the San Francisco Sulphur Company and will be used in the spraying of fruit trees and also the curing of fruits. The "Freeport" is a McCormick & McPherson vessel. The cargo she brought is the first large shipment of sulphur that has arrived since last October.

The cargo of the "Steel Inventor" has been unloaded and repairs are being made at Balboa. The "Steel Inventor" collided with the "Woolsley" and sank her about 125 miles north of Panama. She was slightly damaged. The "Steel Inventor" belongs to the Isthmian fleet and the "Woolsley" was a U. S. destroyer. Fifteen lives were lost in the collision. The investigation is being held at present, but no reports have been made as yet in connection with it.

Upon arrival at San Francisco recently from Callao, the motorship Admiral Mayo reported sighting an upturned vessel of considerable length 118 miles southwest of Monterey, Cal. To date no action has been taken by Government officials to tow the derelict from the path of steamships. The upturned vessel is a danger to navigation, and according to the log of the Admiral Mayo is 200 feet long and about 40 feet wide. Opinion prevails in shipping circles that it is the long overdue schooner Harvester.

Insurance circles in New York and Los Angeles are greatly excited over 25,000 pounds of TNT which is stored in the submarine base in the outer harbor at San Pedro. The submarine base occupies a portion of Municipal Pier 1, at which many steamers dock. Insurance men want the explosive removed, declaring it a menace to the dock and to all ships at the dock. The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce has adopted a resolution requesting Captain Shackford to remove the explosive.

That some of the German ships are becoming white elephants upon the hands of British shipowners is evidenced from the fact that reports from England indicate that British shipowners who bought ex-German steam tonnage from the Reparations Commission have found their capital tied up almost hopelessly. A San Francisco business man, recently returned from England, reported that some of the English owners were attempting to sell some of their tonnage back to the Germans at as low a price as seven pounds.

By failing to renew the "coastwise law" insofar as it affects the carrying of passengers from this coast to Hawaii, and vice versa, the Shipping Board has eliminated foreign vessels from this trade. Extensions had been granted up to March 1 because of the congestion of traffic between Honolulu and the mainland. Most vitally affected by the ruling are Toyo Kisen Kaisha and the China Mail Steamship Company, one of whose steamers, the "Nile," is of British registry.

A further decline in the sensational drop in grain rates from North Pacific ports to the United Kingdom went into effect when the Holland-America steamer "Kinderdyk" took between 6000 and 7000 tons of wheat and flour from Portland at fifty shillings, or about $9.50. The fixture of the Norwegian steamer "Rio Grande" at $10.50 last week, gave a startling reopening to this market, which has been dormant for several weeks, but the rate made by the "Kinderdyk" is even more surprising in view of the fact that this is not a full cargo.

Thorough inspection and verification of all the Pacific Coast compass stations, from the Mexican boundary as far north as Port San Luis, has been begun by Fremont Morse, engineer for the Coast and Geodetic Survey. The work, which will take a month, is being done at the request of the Navy, which desires that the new compass stations be perfectly accurate, so that mariners will have no difficulty in determining their exact position offshore when using the radio stations. Morse will make an inspection of the tide recording instruments along the Southern California coast at the same time.

After having been at anchor in the Bay since December 20, during which time rumors have been in circulation that the vessel would be sold, the sailing ship "General Faidherbe" is to go into the grain-carrying trade between this country and the United Kingdom. The "General Faidherbe" came to this port last December from Marseilles for cargo and since that time has been anchored in the stream off Meigg's Wharf, due to her inability to secure cargo. A large number of vessels are now engaged in the grain-carrying trade between the United States and the United Kingdom, and the "General Faidherbe" will be added to the fleet, which is being operated by a number of individuals and corporations. The home port of the "General Faidherbe" is Nantes.

After almost interminable delays, the first steamer built for the United States Shipping Board in China has sailed for America and will arrive in San Francisco almost two and a half years after the close of the war. She is the steamer "Mandarin," 10,500 tons deadweight, and she departed from Shanghai March 3, according to advices received here. The vessel is in ballast to the Robert Dollar Company, agents for the Shanghai company which constructed the steamer. She will be delivered to the Shipping Board. Shipping men are eager to inspect the vessel and to pass upon the type of shipbuilding done by the Chinese yards. According to advance reports, the "Mandarin" is a handsome, sturdy steamer and a credit to the American merchant marine. Three sister ships of the "Mandarin" are to follow. They are the "Celestial," "Oriental" and "Palanquin." Their delivery will terminate the foreign shipbuilding contracts of the Shipping Board.

Lying safely in the harbor of Copenhagen, Denmark, Captain Walter S. Milnor of Seattle, master of the Shipping Board steamship "Eastern Tempest," and his officers and crew, many of whom also belong to that port, have derived a lot of entertainment from reading in Eastern newspapers how their vessel foundered at sea and how the heroic wireless operator stuck to his post until the inrushing waters forced him over the side. In a letter received at Seattle, Wash., Captain Milnor says the vessel struck a rock off the Atland Islands, but escaped with comparatively slight damage. The ship received temporary repairs at Stockholm, Sweden, and then proceeded to Copenhagen for permanent repairs. Captain Milnor reports that the Shipping Board steamship "Eastern Maid," which was built in Japan and altered in Seattle last year, burned near the Belgian coast this winter. The "Eastern Star," another Japanese-built steamship, is sojourning on a rock off the coast of Finland, while the "Toneset," also a Shipping Board carrier, reposes on the rocks of Haven Island, two hours' run from Copenhagen. The "Ethan Allen" went on the rocks at Narvik.

According to information received by San Francisco shipping circles, inauguration of a fast passenger and freight service, with two 8000-ton liners between British Columbia ports and San Francisco, has been decided on. The reports state that the vessels will be operated by the Canadian-Pacific Ocean Services. It was planned to have the service in operation some time ago, but the move was held in abeyance, due to labor troubles in shipyards of Great Britain. The Canadian Pacific, according to reports, is building four giant passenger boats in British shipyards. It is stated that the C. P. O. is anxious to capture the tourist trade between Canada and California, which has increased tremendously during the last five years. The plans of the new service will extend to Los Angeles. The other two liners building in British yards will be placed in the trans-Pacific trade. According to statements received the two vessels to be placed in the coastwise trade will be the most luxuriously appointed ships plying in this service and will be the last word in ocean liners. In line with the above announcement it was stated that other interests are planning the inauguration of a regular freight service from Vancouver and Victoria to San Francisco and other Pacific Coast ports.

AMERICAN PLAN DEFINED

If there ever existed, in the minds of organized workers or the general public, any doubt as to the actual meaning of the term "American plan," or "open shop," the subject has been made clear by the National Conference of State Manufacturers' Associations' Convention, which met at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, on January 12th, 1921.

The purpose of this assemblage was set forth in an opening address which demanded the immediate elimination of national adjustment boards; uninterrupted and uncontrolled right to exploitation of immigration, and the full establishment of the "open shop" everywhere. In so far as the convention itself was concerned it was not different from that of the average mutual admiration society, with the introductory platitudes "we have with us today the illustrious, able," etc., etc.; the clearing of pompous throats as each worthy (?) plute proceeded to read his particular speech covering opinions as to what should be done to the wage slave. From the actions of these arrogant representatives of big business it was evident that each individual was obsessed with the delusion that he was Atlas. Therefore, with the weight of the world upon their shoulders they proceeded to agree as to what disposition to make of it. Before the sun was high in the heavens the inordinate desire of these commercial giants (?) was made apparent. All they want is the Earth with an insurmountable fence around it. But they took themselves very seriously when the definition of the term American plan or open shop was under discussion. Big business feels that it has maneuvered to a position where it can disregard the rights of the public and liberties of the workers with impunity. So their meaning is no longer hidden behind soothing phrases. The full import of the American plan or open shop has been set forth in a resolution which is considered a gem of Americanism, as follows:

Whereas, It is recognized as fundamental in this country that all law-abiding citizens or residents thereof have the right to work when they please, for whom they please, and on whatever terms are mutually agreed upon between employe and employer, and without interference or discrimination upon the part of others; now therefore be it

Resolved, That we hereby express our purpose to support these fundamental principles of American plan of employment by the maintenance of the open shop;

Resolved further, We urge upon our members to secure by discussion and education the active support of workers, merchants, bankers, and professional men, and all other elements in their respective communities in favor of American ideals and the open shop.

The "Resolved further" was a bit of wisdom tacked on to the original resolution by one of the employers who was fearful that something might be overlooked in the massacre of trades unionism, or that some of the select might falter in performance of the open shop program unless sufficiently impressed. The amendment resulted in the desired discussion in which it has been elucidated that the path of the wage slave in the United States is to be strewn with thorns. Big business feels that the time is ripe to declare war on labor; therefore its attitude made evident through certain of its representatives. Excerpts from the speech of one of them, Mr. Gillette, follow and they leave no room for the slightest misunderstanding as to what is meant by the American plan or the open shop. Mr. Gillette stated:

To my mind it is a good deal of a question of non-union shop or unionized shop. . . . As I understand the purpose of Mr. Clausen, it is this: that we are going back to our communities and we are going to try to work there and try to stir up an agitation in favor of the open shop. . . .

We have to be very careful, Mr. Chairman, how we, who are advocating what you call an open shop—but what I call a non-union shop—how we deport ourselves in these conferences. There is no reason I can imagine why any manufacturer situated almost anywhere in this country cannot conduct almost any kind of a shop he wants to today with the unemployment which exists, and I tell you there is a great moral responsibility resting upon us now that we have the power. . . .

I will be confounded at this date if I am going to get up here—you can do what you want—but I am not going to get up here, for one, and say I am in favor of the open shop and that there will be no discrimination against union men, because I am mighty apt to do it.

If there could have been a vestige of uncertainty regarding the American plan in the minds of organized workers or the general public before this conference, that doubt has been dissipated by the expressions that emanate from those who represent "big business." They are strongly entrenched; they are arrogant of spirit; they will brook no regulation or interference by adjustment boards. "The public be damned," they intend if possible to smash the organizations of the workers beyond hope of resurrection. Verily these apostles of greed and oppression have set up to themselves false gods in the shape of the American plan or open shop.

The large attendance at regular meetings along the Pacific Coast is slowly but surely bringing to the front a number of members of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific who previously have taken only an ordinary interest in the conduct of organization affairs. This is one of the surest signs for progress. There are always a number of men with real ability who permit their talents to remain dormant during times of peace and quiet, but let the occasion arise and they can be depended upon to meet any emergency. It is the large number of such members with which we are favored that makes the Sailors' Union of the Pacific one of the most successful labor organizations.

SAUCE FOR THE GANDER

In the home of the Better American Federation it appears that some of the city fathers are beginning to show extreme liberality with the funds of Los Angeles taxpayers. The following news item from the United Labor Press of California is enlightening:

Wonders never cease. Two weeks ago the City Council of Los Angeles, by a vote of 7 to 2, complied with the request of the Bitter America Federation and voted the sum of $2000 to be used in investigating the "radicals" in the Labor Movement. Now this same City Council, by a vote of 8 to 1, has voted an additional $2000 to be expended under direction of the City Prosecuting Attorney in uncovering radicals in the business world, especially the agitators of the Bitter America Federation.

The Central Labor Council sent a committee to the City Council and insisted that while "radicals" are being subjected to investigation, the probe be complete. With one lone exception, the councilmen concurred in the plea for "equal rights to all and special privileges to none."

Of course, the scabby Los Angeles Times and the various organizations of union-haters in Southern California are horrified at the "weakness" of the councilmen in "yielding" to the "threats" of the "labor dictators," but the fact remains the investigation is proceeding "50-50," and the silk-hat I. W. W.'s are proving themselves to be as poor losers as they are poor Americans. They are thoroughly sick of their own medicine.

If fair and impartial, as well as thorough investigations were to take effect, the workers of the southern city would have cause for great rejoicing. In view of past performances, however, we are compelled to feel skeptical about final results. If the situation develops true to form there is a probability that the whole $4000 will operate one way, in accordance with the desires of the anti-unionists. There is also a good chance that the actual expenditure for investigating will be a very small percentage of the amounts appropriated, which often happens in the conduct of such matters.

This latter result is much to be desired, inasmuch as it might have a salutary effect upon those long-suffering citizens who foot the bills.

LABOR LOSES A FRIEND

Mary Macarthur, general secretary of the British Women's Trade Union League, whose recent death has deprived the labor movement of one of the most respected and devoted champions of protective labor legislation on either side of the Atlantic, was long an able and active participant in the councils of the Association for Labor Legislation, says an editorial in the current issue of the American Labor Legislation Review.

A tribute in the Official Bulletin of the International Labor Office of the League of Nations says: "The International Labor Organization has lost a true friend in Mary Macarthur. Although engrossed in the British labor movement, and especially in the organization of women workers and the promotion of laws for their protection, she had the wide vision of a statesman and never lost sight of the importance of the international spirit. As soon as the ideas of the International Association for Labor Legislation penetrated to England she became a member of the executive committee of the British section. . . . Mary Macarthur could not attend a conference without leaving her mark upon it, nor without exerting a permanent influence upon the friends and acquaintances she made."

In her several visits to the United States within recent years, and as one of the advisers from Great Britain to the Official International Labor Conference at Washington in 1919, she made many warm friends who were inspired by her sincere and intelligent interest in the progress of protective labor legislation in America.

Whenever a worker's wages is cut he is informed by some carping hypocrite that it is one of the essentials of the period of readjustment; that labor and capital must both become subject to the reconstruction. In the ranks of big business profiteers have made stupendous gains during the war, all of which have been salted away to such extent as to seriously impair industry. What Cant! If the readjustment shall be downward, and wages fall with prices to lower levels, it means that the conditions of the workers must deteriorate, while the profits coined from the miseries of war will have added value for the profiteer.

All indications suggest a well-organized and determined effort of big business throughout the world to dominate governments and policies of the people. As a means to this desired end, destruction of the workers' organization is regarded as essential.

Evidence is not lacking that a ruthless drive on labor is about to be launched, the scope of which is not only nation- but world-wide. Therefore, the international solidarity of labor must be accomplished as a natural defense against oppression.

Marine engineers and others interested in mechanical engineering are registering in the course of study of the Diesel engine, which the University of California Extension is giving. The class meets at 1337 Sutter street, San Francisco, on Monday and Wednesday evenings at 7:30 o'clock. Carl G. A. Rosen, of a local concern which makes Diesel engines, is the instructor in the course.

Registrations are being received for the class at the San Francisco office of University Extension, 140 Kearny street.

The lectures will include a discussion of internal combustion engines, the general theory of heat engines, as applied to Diesel engines; information regarding stationary and marine Diesel engine installation, and a particular study of the various parts of the engines.

The increased use of the Diesel engine on land and sea has created interest in this technical University Extension course.

At the hour of going to press we are confronted with evidence of a condition of extreme industrial unrest throughout the country. The lower-paid, unskilled and unorganized workers everywhere are being subjected to a cut in wages. Railroad employes are preparing to resist the demands of the operators for a revision downwards, and the packing industry shows a chaotic condition prevailing. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, is hastening to Chicago to discuss the situation relative to the packing industry with the international officials of nine trades employed in stockyards and packing houses, with the possibility of a unified strike.

A TIMELY RESOLVE

The following is a text of the resolution which was adopted by the United States Shipping Board at a meeting on March 3, 1921:

Whereas, A hearing was granted the International Mercantile Marine Company by the United States Shipping Board with reference to a certain agreement dated August 1, 1903, between the Commissioners for Executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the Board of Trade (for and on behalf of His Majesty's Government), the International Mercantile Marine Company and certain British companies, which said agreement provides among other things:

(a) "The term 'the association' hereinafter used means the parties hereto of the second and third parts and also includes any other company, corporate or unincorporate, partnership, body, or person, whether British, American or other foreign which by any arrangement is admitted to or brought under the control of the association or any of its constituent parts for the time being;"

(b) "Par. 8. If at any time hereafter during the continuance of this agreement any other company, whether corporate or unincorporate, partnership, body or person, whether British, American or other foreign, shall be admitted to or brought under the control of the Association or any of its constituent parts for the time being, the association shall give notice thereof to His Majesty's Government and shall furnish all such particulars with regard to terms, parties or otherwise as the Government may reasonably require."

(c) "Par. 10. This agreement shall have effect for 20 years from the 27th of September, 1902, and shall continue in force thereafter subject to a notice of five years on either side (which may be given during the continuance of this agreement), provided that His Majesty's Government shall have the right to terminate this agreement at any time if the association pursue a policy injurious to the interests of the British Mercantile Marine or of British trade."

(d) "Par. 12. In case of any difference as to the intent and meaning of this agreement or in case of any dispute arising out of this agreement, the same shall be referred to the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain for the time being whose decision whether on law or fact shall be final."

and

Whereas, It was developed at said hearing that although said International Mercantile Marine Company is owned practically in its entirety by citizens of the United States, yet that certain contract and agreement, dated August 1, 1903, together with certain agreements supplementary thereto between the parties above stated is regarded by the United States Shipping Board as inimical to and not in harmony with the policy of the United States of America with respect to the development of its trade and commerce and merchant marine, and at variance with both the letter and the spirit of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920.

Resolved, That the International Mercantile Marine Company be, and it is hereby requested and directed by the United States Shipping Board to so amend the said agreement of August 1, 1903, together with agreements supplementary thereto as to exclude therefrom any and all vessels documented under the laws of the United States, to the end that said agreement and supplements thereto shall not be allowed to affect or apply to the ships operated by said International Mercantile Marine Company at any time under the flag of the United States of America; and be it further

Resolved, That said International Mercantile Marine Company advise the United States Shipping Board of its conclusion with respect to this resolution.

SICKNESS IS COSTLY

An investigation of the records of 143 manufacturers, employing 77,000 workers during the latter part of 1919, shows a monthly sickness average of 19 cases per thousand, reports the New York State Industrial Commission. The total number of cases of sickness lasted from three days to six months, and was 8,761 for the half year. The lost time was 84,665 days. The average loss of each case was 10 days' working time and $36.73 in wages. This investigation, the commission states, can not be compared with other investigations, as only able-bodied adults were considered.

Damage amounting to a few thousand dollars was done to a shipment of tin plate in the hold of the Williams Line steamer "Wilpolo," in the voyage from New York. Loose rivets permitted leakage from one of the fresh water tanks into the lower tiers of one hold. Although both the cargo and the vessel were fully insured, the steamer was libeled for $30,000 by Balfour, Guthrie & Company, the consignees. Bond was immediately arranged by J. W. Chapman, Pacific Coast agent, and the vessel got away for the north. Some difficulty was had with the crew while the vessel was berthed at Oakland, because of the difference between wages on the Atlantic and Pacific, occasioned by an attempted reduction by the operators of the "Wilpolo" of $15 a month on the East coast.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

MODERN SEAMANSHIP

The result of the referendum vote of the affiliated Seamen's Unions on the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts, in reference to the Report of The Committee on Policies and Education of the 24th annual convention of the I. S. U. of A. on Seamanship, Skill and Efficiency in the American Merchant Marine, is not yet known. We do not care to anticipate the returns on the ultimate adoption of the report by all the Unions interested; we are not apprehensive.

The interested attitude of scores of individual members, as manifested by their remarks in debating the subject in the various meetings at which it has been discussed, has been most gratifying to all who favor the plan.

The one deterrent factor most likely to shelve this interesting and important proposition at the present juncture is the general business stagnation, great number of unemployed members, and the imminent danger of controversy with shipowners over the wage scale after May 1.

The desire to economize in the present crisis is a natural and sensible one.

The present is not the best time in which to introduce new and expensive educational projects that cannot result in immediate material improvement or financial increase to the Unions involved.

Nevertheless, the vocational training plan has been favorably received and ably and seriously discussed from every angle; and there can be no doubt as to its ultimate adoption as an important part of our educational policy as an American maritime organization.

Shipowners Derive Benefits

The American shipowners have never spent a day or a dollar on the training of their crews.

Nevertheless, in their present efforts to extinguish American sentiment from the merchant marine, they modestly petition the government to maintain free training ships and nautical schools at public expense, while they proceed to exterminate American seamen for private profit.

From the year one in the Age of Reason training ships and nautical colleges of all kinds have always proven worse than useless for practical instruction in any grade of skilled seamanship.

We have been shipmates with many of these training ship recruits, and the longer they had been "trained" the more we pitied them, and the more we were to be pitied ourselves for our own misfortunes.

The boys are not to blame, they are only the victims of an aimless and inefficient system.

It has been well and wisely said, "the place to train seamen is at sea."

Past Days Recalled

In sailing ship days, on the long reaches of five or six weeks on every passage north or south, while we sweated through the brimming trades, or even when hove too under a goosewinged maintopsail in the middle latitudes, there was abundant time and opportunity for a capable, ambitious boy or youth to acquire at first hand, and under the most favorable conditions imaginable, at the hands of skilled and conscientious instructors, every known wrinkle in practical seamanship, marlinspike and palm and needle work.

But now in the modern steamship era, the opportunities for practical training among seamen in actual service have been reduced to a neglible factor.

The usual runs at sea are short; the crews are also short, with never a man too many for what there is to do, and no time or inclination to teach or train novices. The seamen, too, are of an entirely different type from those who manned the three skysail yarders of yore. Those men (the regulars) were to the manner born who took pride in the arts and traditions of their chosen calling, regardless of personal advantage or distinction, and took an honest pride in demonstrating the practical utility and artistic beauty of their handiwork and transmitting it to their successors. Posterity they had none. God made sailors one at a time and endowed them with natural aptitude suitable to their needs.

Commercialism creates them by the multitude and trains them by machinery.

As a general proposition, when the machinery goes "dead" so does the sailor, for he has learned to think in mechanical terms and work accordingly.

Past Methods Obsolete

Steam has simplified seamanship and nautical equipment, but has intensified the need of class efficiency. The ancient arts and practices of windjammer days are, for the most part, unappreciated by modern seamen because they are non-essential in modern equipment, but their fundamental principles can never be departed from in actual sea service.

The modern sailor knows nothing about turning in deadeyes, setting up lanyards, crosspointing sheerpoles, coxcombing ringbolts or making fancy bunt-gaskets. The modern sea cook does not need to learn anything about making "cracker hash" or "dog'sbody" or "dandyfunk," or how to weigh out short rations to a starving crew. The less he learns about those ancient abominations of hellship days the better for the service. He is here to cater to the gastronomic requirements of civilized men. not to mess up hog feed, dump it in wooden kids and slam it on the floor of the cattlepen for abject slaves.

The marine firemen have developed a special calling of their own, and it should be improved and dignified by the attainment of high skill and expert practice that will lead its best devotees and foremost followers into the engineers' department.

It is, therefore, highly desirable that in all marine departments the unlicensed seamen should undergo special training that will make them experts in all up-to-date and approved methods of their crafts.

The old codgers as well as the younger generation of seamen will find much to learn that will be beneficial by a special course in modern scientific principles of applied technical, mechanical or culinary practice.

When it has been clearly established that the most expert and best qualified seamen in the world are graduates of the Union vocational training schools, and that certificates issued under authority of those schools are guarantees of conscientious training and expert efficiency on the part of the holders; Union seamen will be in highest demand in all branches of maritime service and non-Union seamen will know where to secure skilled instruction and develop profitable efficiency.

Vocational training is destined to become one of the chief bulwarks of the Seamen's Unions, of that we feel assured.

WAGE AGREEMENTS VS. CHAOS

In a recent issue of the JOURNAL we referred editorially to the declared intention of the American Steamshipowners' Association to reduce seamen's wages, eliminate overtime pay and discontinue all agreements with the Seamen's Unions after May 1, 1921.

In formulating this arbitrary program, the organized ship operators of the Coast, and of the country, consider no interests but their own.

The public welfare, the rights and requirements of seamen, or the future development of the American Merchant Marine, does not enter into their calculations.

In dictating terms of industrial order in the operation of the American Merchant Marine for the people of the United States, they demand the immediate withdrawal, and absolute surrender of all Shipping Board tonnage to their control, on their own terms, without reserve.

They further demand an immediate increase in the salaries of all clerks and inspectors, paid by the government, while insisting upon a European rate of wages for American seamen, paid out of the proceeds of over-sea traffic, at the same time. The inconsistency of their attitude thereby becomes manifest.

"The sea is ours, and we made it, and our hands fashioned the Merchant Marine!" Such appears to be the arrogant assertion of the entrenched shipowners, in pronouncing their imperialistic ultimatum against the seamen, the Shipping Board and the people of the United States.

The American Steamshipowners' Association threatens to enforce this ultimatum by locking out organized American seamen and replacing them with foreign mercenaries, cutting rates, as well as wages, to European levels; to oust Shipping Board vessels, and precipitate a nation-wide marine strike, and general maritime chaos, if necessary, in order to impose their arbitrary demands upon the country.

Whatever may be our personal opinions of the organized shipowners and their treasonable plotting, we must confess that they are brutally frank in their domineering attitude toward all other interests concerned.

Profiteers Might Err

It is evident from their overbearing and non-compromising pretensions that

The American Steamshipowners' Association imagines that it now holds the whip hand, and taking advantage of prevailing commercial and industrial distress the world over, but with an eye single to future improvement, is determined to demand the lion's share, which is nothing less than the whole carcass, while nothing appears strong enough to restrain its power.

But it may turn out hereafter that the Shipowners' Association has been fondly figuring without its host.

What will it avail the American Merchant Marine to reduce seamen's wages to a level of five pound five, if the British shipowners, by taking thought, suddenly retaliate by reducing them to two pound ten? Such things have happened before in the course of maritime history, and will assuredly happen again if American shipowners commence wage cutting. As a low wage nation, America can never hope to compete with European countries, much less with the rice-fed coolies of India and China that figure so prominently as "British" seamen.

If American shipowners treacherously break the existing rate agreements to oust the United States Shipping Board, what guarantee have they that the foreign shipowners will not break all agreements, and all previous records in cut-throat competition, in their intense eagerness to oust the American Merchant Marine in toto? An avalanche, once started, can never be stopped until its errand of promiscuous destruction has been completed, and to cut either wages or freight rates in the American Merchant Marine in the present crisis in the hope of offsetting foreign competition, would simply be lending valuable aid and comfort to our most inveterate maritime enemies.

The correct way, the logical and only honorable way to offset foreign maritime competition, and cheap commercial aggression in the United States, is for all interests to unite in upholding American conditions by enforcing American laws enacted in support of those conditions. We have repeatedly pointed out in the columns of the SEAMEN'S JOURNAL the grave national danger involved in permitting foreign ships to engage crews in United States ports at ridiculously low wages by simply violating the maritime laws of this country, by the practice of outlawed and criminal methods.

Seamen Combat Danger

The Seamen's Unions have made every effort, and expended many thousands of dollars in prosecuting foreign shipowners for these violations, and in endeavors to compel conformity with the spirit and text of American Statutes. But, far from aiding us in our patriotic and laudable attempts to compel respect for American laws among foreign competitors, the American shipowners have constantly encouraged foreign contempt for our Maritime Laws, by openly denouncing their provisions and ignoring them wherever and whenever possible.

The American Steamship Owners' Association has all along been pursuing a foreign policy, and obviously with an ulterior purpose in view.

Reviewing their conduct, as well as their candor, it appears to be the settled determination of the Association to acquire full control of the entire Merchant Marine, and then turn it over to foreign management and exploitation under the onus of coolie labor.

There is absolutely no other sane or logical conclusion to be deduced from the persistent, and consistent anti-American attitude maintained by the organized shipowners of the United States during the past six years.

In conclusion, let us repeat the assertions made on this subject last week. The American Merchant Marine is public property, built with public funds at a staggering sacrifice, both in labor and treasure, for our national glory and enterprise, and maritime defense. It has been manned by the mothers and fathers of American manhood with their own flesh and blood, and dedicated to the national service for all time.

All plans relative to the future development or disposition of the Merchant Marine must, therefore, be discussed from a national viewpoint, and not from the narrow concept of the Temple of Mammon at 17 Battery Place, New York.

The love of Gold inspires treason, but love of country exalts men's souls.

summer of 1918, the United States Employment Service was hastily built up to deal with the emergency shortage of labor. The service had many of the defects of an emergency undertaking. Some of the appointments were unwisely made, but, when all the discountings are taken into consideration, it is still true that the United States Employment Service responded to the needs for which it was created. These needs, although acute sensed during the stress of war, are none the less persistent, as every industrial country except the United States well recognizes. At the end of the war, Congress "economized" by refusing to appropriate adequately for the service. It is now a mere shell, and yet during this season of depression and unemployment it is needed sorely. Money invested in it would be returned to the country manifold. The Department of Labor shares responsibility with Congress for the present plight of the Employment Service. For it is undeniable that some appointments were made on other grounds than technical fitness for office. The present is an admirable time for correcting these mistakes. An employment service is one of the essentials in any adequate Department of Labor. Until the United States possesses such an organization it would be impossible to deal with issues as fundamentally significant as unemployment. The present department bequeaths to its successor a small employment service, and a large body of experience. It has rendered wise building for the future easy of attainment.

It is needless, in a cursory review such as this, to examine in detail the wartime agencies of the department which have not been kept up. Two other organizations, however, have carried on, although one of them has been reduced almost to the vanishing point and the other has been treated so stingily by Congress that it has never been given a real opportunity to function. The Bureau of Industrial Housing is still in existence, although it is but a vestige of its former self. At the present time, Congress evinces no burning desire to go further into the housing field, although the shortage of houses was never more acute in this country. England, in contrast, has, of course, kept up and developed extensively its national housing program.

The Women's Bureau, inaugurated during the war under the leadership of Mary Van Kleeck, and now continued under the guidance of Mary Anderson, has so far been retained, although on a ridiculously inadequate basis. The present Congress seems inclined to name $2,000 a year as the upper limit of salaries paid in the bureau, the one exception being the salary of the chief. It is well nigh impossible to obtain competent economic students at any such salary. In spite of this, with its limited appropriation, the Women's Bureau has done important and intelligent work. Its recent study of The New Position of Women in American Industry is extremely valuable. The bureau lives, it has been cynically said, because Congress felt impelled to give something to women, following the adoption of the suffrage amendment. If, however, the size of the appropriation given the Women's Bureau is a measure of Congress' appreciation of the importance of the enfranchisement of women, it is fair to state that woman suffrage is not taken too seriously on Capitol Hill.

The Department of Labor has also been involved in a number of other undertakings. Not least of these was the association of the Secretary of Labor with the President's Industrial Conference whose report was discussed in the Survey for March 27, 1920. So far Congress has failed to act on the recommendation of this conference. The department also stands sponsor for a number of policies which some time will call for action. Among the most significant of these was the recommendation of the department that the transportation in interstate commerce of private troops or private police or armed guards, whether by employers or strikers, be forbidden. Few issues are more serious than that of the unregulated use of private guards in industrial conflicts. Police power is essentially a function of the State. And yet, so far, this evil, which is corrupting and destructive, has been neglected.

In his final report, Secretary Wilson has made fifteen recommendations to the present and to future Congresses. These include the development of the United States Employment Service so that "no wage-earners shall vainly want for profitable work, while profitable work anywhere waits in vain for wage-earners"; the utilization of public lands and community credits so that wage-earners may be given opportunities for co-operative self employment; legislation relative to the adjustment of seasonal to non-seasonal industries; the promotion of the training of wage-earners within their indstries for the purpose of making their employment more profitable to themselves and their work more useful to their employers and to the public; the maximum national protection for women and children of underpaid wage-earners; the perpetuation of the Division of Negro Economics; the development of better immigration policies; the provision of higher pay for competent and industrious employes of the department; and a legislative consideration of the program of the President's Industrial Conference.

No review of the work of the Department of Labor would be adequate without some reference to Louis F. Post, the assistant secretary, who, at various times, has been the acting head of the department. Mr. Post is a Democrat of the old school. During recent months when, in the hysteria following America's participation in the war, so many important elements in the American system of constitutional liberty have been in suspense, Mr. Post has faithfully upheld the tradition of liberty, and he has extended the protection of the law to many humble and friendless aliens. His attitude has been challenged by many, but as the blood of this heated season tends to cool, his difficult role will probably be more and more appreciated. It is never an easy task in a time of excitement to uphold the rights of "foreigners." Mr. Post has done this difficult thing. In so doing he has contributed generously to the record of the Department of Labor.

The first formative period of the department is practically at an end. A new Administration is at hand. The work of the pioneers has been accomplished. Much of it has been of a rare standard of efficiency. Most of it has been animated by the large and distinguished sense of fairness which is the predominant trait of the first Secretary of Labor. It is not a flawless record. Unwise appointments have been made and some incompetent officials have been kept in office, but human organizations are seldom perfect, and if at the end of the next eight years, a new Department of Labor achieves as much, proportionately, as has been done since 1913, the country will profoundly be its debtor.—The Survey.

LABOR COMPULSORY IN BULGARIA

Bulgaria has passed a law by which labor is obligatory both for men and women. This labor can be utilized in many ways, including the construction of roads, railways, canals, aqueducts, improvement of rivers and streams, installation of telephone and telegraph lines, preparation of various building materials, the planting and exploitation of forests, work in the various domains of the State, districts, or communes, cultivation of kitchen gardens, raising of silk worms and of bees and cattle, fisheries, work in mines and factories, conservation of food products, weaving, etc. The proponents of this law claim that demobilization of the Bulgarian army renders it necessary.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Reaction Is Rampant

While the British labor movement and other labor organizations of Europe were lining up in support of the Council of Action of the British Trade Union Congress, in efforts to prevent initiation of another great war in Europe by the French armies of occupation; the coterie of old guard politicians completely surrounding President Harding were rejoicing in the prospect of an anti-labor man in the post of Secretary of Labor for the next four years. They felt sure up to the hour of the announcement of Harding's choice. And what was the executive council of the American Federation of Labor doing at this fateful hour?

It was in session at headquarters discussing the exact language in which it was to damn forever as "radical and revolutionary" the International Federation of Trades Unions, with its 26,000,000 working class members in Europe.

It is unnecessary to state that such employment of its time by the executive council is due to the personal programs of a few members, rather than to any demand from the rank and file of the A. F. of L., and it does not in any degree reflect the views of the Unions or Central labor bodies; which everywhere, week by week, prove their sympathy with the progressive policies of the workers of Britain, France, Belgium, Italy and Scandinavia. It does not reflect the will of the organized railroad workers, who have no spokesman in the executive council of the A. F. of L. It is not labor's last word by any means; but it does explain why there is nobody in Congress today who considers the protests of the A. F. of L. as being worthy of a second thought.

In the statement proposed by the council and ratified by the executives of the national and international unions in conference at Washington recently, there was included a paragraph assailing "European radical fanaticism." When that language was read to the conference, Johnston of the Machinists protested, saying that organized labor knows who its enemies are in this country; that these enemies are the anti-labor employers and their associates; that we do not know the situation in Europe and had better leave the disputes among European workers to their own adjustment. But he was voted down as a dreamer of dreams.

Quick-steps to Slavery

On the other hand, and as showing how far the anti-radical trend can lead a body of conservative workers, an anti-labor newspaper in Buffalo has published a resolution adopted last December by "Steam Fitters' Union No. 665" of Buffalo, claiming affiliation up to that date with the United Association of Plumbers and Steam Fitters, in which they denounce the A. F. of L. and their own international as holding "unsound principles and theories on American doctrines." The local therefore resolved to withdraw from the international, to stand for the "open" shop, and to pledge to the boss increased production.

This gem-example of co-operation in American labor is being sent broadcast, of course, by the "open shop" propaganda bureau in Indianapolis, and is hailed with delight by editors who have been waiting for a safe pretext to hit at the alleged radicalism of organized labor in their own communities. Here is a morsel from this treat:

"Whereas, Our international body is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, an organization largely if not totally controlled by men apparently devoid of any understanding of economics, or of respect for the laws of America." And this among other resolves:

"That we, Local Union No. 665, use every fair means possible to maintain present wage scales and hours of labor, confidence in our ability to do this being based upon the belief that the increased production our freedom from outside dictation will enable us to deliver, will mark all the reduction in costs our employers can fairly ask for the time being."

As the Buffalo Commercial truly says in its description of this affair, "Such a declaration was probably never before promulgated by any organization of workingmen," especially in its statement that it "unreservedly endorses the principle of the American Plan Open Shop, and pledges the combined effort of our membership to the upholding and extension of that policy."

Passing the Buck

Here, then, is a local of the Steam Fitters seceding and declaring that it wants to work harder and is satisfied with the non-union shop, and denouncing the American Federation of Labor as a lawless and un-American organization. And the executive council of the A. F. of L. just as earnestly denounces the radicals in the American movement and the Amsterdam International as being dangerously "revolutionary," while the Amsterdam International holds the sections of the European and Asiatic labor movements that take their inspiration from Moscow to be, in their turn, too dangerously revolutionary. Meanwhile each of these elements returns the compliment by pointing to its accuser as a reactionary, or an enemy to the working class.

Europe for Solidarity

War clouds gathering over Europe will have a tendency to make workers in that part of the world forget their differences and try heroically to stop further slaughter. George Lansbury of the London Daily Herald says that a military conquest of Germany by the French government on the issue of war indemnities will result in general revolution, and that the outcome may even be a communist triumph—which he would dread.

Workers Save the Race

One reason for the willingness of British labor to risk the charge of treason in stopping a new war over the spoils of the last war is seen in the official admission by technical officers of the army that women, children and all domestic animals must wear gas masks if they are to survive the poison-gas attacks which will come in any future hostilities. Two tons of the poison gas now perfected in American laboratories, if fed from a pipe under the end of an airplane, will kill all animal life for a distance of a hundred feet on either side, and for a distance of seven miles of the flight of the machine over a city or an army.

It is a war of this sort—universal extermination—that is so lightly discussed by politicians when they try to put appropriation bills through Congress and when they stir up quarrels between irresponsible governments of helpless peoples. From these horrors the working class organizations of Europe turn with hope to almost any form of revolutionary protest.

Hatching Devilish Plots

Albert B. Fall of New Mexico, the new Secretary of the Interior, is the foremost champion of war against Mexico. It is reported here that he will soon become Secretary of State. His friend, Fletcher, who wants war against Mexico, is Undersecretary of State at Fall's suggestion. Secretary of War Weeks and Secretary of the Navy Denby are in close sympathy with Fall. Nothing short of a miracle can prevent the group now in the saddle from riding thousands of American soldiers to their death in the deserts of Mexico.

That miracle can be worked by the will of organized labor in the United States. Mass meetings and resolutions and instructions to every spokesman of organized labor can prevent this war of conquest upon a friendly neighboring republic. Every public official should receive these resolutions.

Whether consciously or not, the politicians who came in with Harding are afraid of the day when American labor will strike back at them for the terrorist tactics they and the employers throughout the country have adopted. They want a big army with which to keep organized labor "in order." A war of conquest of Mexico will give them this army for two or three years, and incidentally will enable American oil corporations, centered in Wall Street, to capture the Tampico oil fields.

MINNESOTA ADVANCES

The State of Minnesota has given to labor direct representation at the head of the Labor Department. The Legislature has abandoned the old plan of a single headed labor department and has enacted a law which creates a State industrial commission to administer workmen's compensation and all other labor laws.

The commission, to consist of three men appointed by the governor, will provide for direct representation of both employers and workers in labor law enforcement. Labor representatives declare this is a significant forward step, coming at a time when reactionary efforts are being made in some States to undermine protective labor laws by destroying the industrial commission and "politically reorganizing" the Labor Department so as to deprive labor of effective participation in the administration of laws for its own protection.

The adoption of the industrial commission form of administration by Minnesota follows an investigation by a legislative committee which visited the capitols of most large industrial States. Sponsors of the measure declare that the State industrial commission does away with the danger of partisanship, both political and industrial, at the head of the Labor Department and point out that it insures co-operation of all interests affected, now required for effective administration of modern labor legislation.

AN EXTENSIVE REPORT

Commissioner Joseph N. Teale in a report on the operations of the U. S. Shipping Board recently concluded with the statement that "Economies can be effected, efficiency can be increased, but after making all allowances therefor, the country is still faced with the fact that to establish and maintain an adequate merchant marine, as directed in the act, it must pay directly or indirectly a large sum each year."

The report is one of the few comprehensive statements ever issued by the Shipping Board.

Among other figures the report shows the following:

Total amount received from inception up to January 1, 1921, $3,475,275,716.

Payroll, January 1, 1920, 11,165 employees, $21,678,733; January 1, 1921, 7622 employees, $15,345,509.

Ships sales, 1920, 246 vessels of 735,460 tons; price, $298,041,251; paid, $120,067,796; unpaid, $167,896,150; past due, $11,943,206.

Estimated total funds to meet all requirements during calendar year 1921, $395,245,522.

As we contemplate the progress of trade unionism among the workers of the world even the millennium seems not impossible of attainment.

As we see in the rainbow the harbinger of fine weather, so labor may see the glories of its future through its tears.

UNFRUITFUL EFFORTS

Jim Taylor of Utah, Idaho and points west, is a cattleman from the heels on his boots to the crown of his Stetson which rises four or five inches above his perspiring brow. When he wants to go anywhere he rides; walking he regards as an insult to tender feet and expensive boots. Recently he sailed for England to dispose of a shipment of polo ponies.

He booked passage on one of the palatial Atlantic liners, but once on board he was thoroughly unhappy. No, he wasn't sea-sick. Cow camp grub and pitching ponies had given him a stomach nothing could disturb.

"What I need is exercise," he moaned to an English acquaintance who had crossed a dozen times. The Englishman suggested there was ample room for brisk walks along the spotless decks. His suggestion was received with a look of scorn and loathing, and the information by exercise, Jim meant exercise in the saddle. Without a word the Englishman led him to the ship's gymnasium and pointed to a contrivance bearing a saddle.

"That machine," he said, "will duplicate any motion you can possibly get while riding a horse. All you have to do is get on and press one of those buttons."

"Whoopee," yelled Jim. "Gear her high, for I sure aims to ride wide and handsome." He surged into the saddle and the Englishman fled.

A half hour later the Britisher again found Jim leaning disconsolately on the rail.

"Did you have a good ride?" he asked.

"Naw," replied the westerner. "I rode that machine on everything from a fox trot to a gallop but I didn't arrive nowhere."

Failure to save a regular portion of what they earned and invest it safely in sound securities has placed thousands of people on the riding machine. They get all the bumps, all the jars, all the chafing and soreness they could acquire in covering a financial life road, but they never arrive anywhere. If you are working for exercise, you can afford to spend all you make. If you are working to arrive somewhere, put a certain part of your pay every week in Government Savings Stamps and Treasury Savings Certificates.

Governor Kilby after every attempt by big business failed to break the spirit of the coal miners.

To Adjust Disputes

Before his retirement President Wilson appointed Secretary of Labor Wilson as a member of the International Joint Commission which adjusts disputes between this country and Canada. The salary is $7500 a year.

Preference to Wages

Governor Miller of New York has signed a bill which provides that wage claims of employes must be given first consideration when a corporation or partnership is placed in the hands of a receiver.

Labor News

Two hundred electrical workers recently walked out at Muskegon, Mich., when a 20 per cent reduction in wages was announced.

Members of the Tidewater Boatmen's Union of New York are on strike in protest against a proposed wage cut. About 2000 men are affected.

Approximately 10,000 workers in misses' and children's dress factories in New York went on strike March 10. It is asserted that the industry in Greater New York is practically tied up.

At Pueblo, Colo., the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, announced that, owing to improved conditions in the steel industry, 1000 additional men will be employed, starting immediately. Four idle mills will reopen, running two eight-hour shifts.

At Youngstown, Ohio, reductions of 13½ per cent in wages of union sheet mill workers and of 7 per cent in those of tin workers were recently made at the bi-monthly settlement between manufacturers and the Amalgamated Association. This reduction is in addition to one of 9½ per cent two months ago.

Information received at headquarters of the Railroad Labor Department of the American Federation of Labor at Chicago, Ill., indicates that virtually every large railroad in the country is preparing to put wage reductions into effect for all their employes. B. M. Jewell, chairman of the committee, made this statement while discussing the proposed reduction announced by the Pennsylvania lines.

By a vote of 3,398 to 115 the members of the Actors' Equity Association have declared in favor of the "equity" shop. This means that beginning next September no member of the association will play in companies with non-members of the association. The Actors' Equity Association includes practically every theatrical star in this country. The association is affiliated with the A. F. of L.

Governor of Alaska Thomas G. Riggs has taken charge of relief work for the residents of Unga, Alaska, reported destitute because of the short fishing season last year. A message to the Governor from Marshal F. R. Brenneman at Valdez, Alaska, stated the inhabitants of Unga were "in deplorable condition." In reply to a query, Governor Riggs received a message from Manager Greenbaum of the Alaska Codfish Company at San Francisco, stating that the company is now loading vessels for Unga and expects to resume operations soon.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, recently [illegible] to call to account the Detroit Federation of Labor for what he termed support of the Russian Soviets. His interference, however, was followed by a vote that representatives of the federation be sent to Moscow to attend a [illegible] labor congress on May 1. In his letter Gompers charged members of the local with being "servants of the Soviet government" and "spreading the doctrines of Lenine and Trotzky." The criticism was the outgrowth of a request by Frank X. Martel, business representative of the Detroit organization, that the American Federation of Labor use its influence for removal of trade restrictions against Russia.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Anyone knowing how Eugene McNulty, coalpasser, met his death recently at Boat Harbor, Newport News, Va., while employed on S. S. "Colquit," will confer a favor on his mother, Mrs. Frances McNulty, 511 Hemlock street, Scranton, Pa., or Silas B. Axtell, 9 State street, New York City, by communicating with either one.

Ole Toreson, born in Trondhjem, Norway, age about 30. His cousin, Tryggve Hagen, would like to hear from him. Address, Sailors' Union, San Francisco, Cal.

Father and mother of Nicolay C. Monsen, a native of Bergen, age 43, last heard from in San Francisco, are anxious to ascertain as to his whereabouts. Kindly communicate with Nicolay Monsen, Sjomandenes Aldershjem, Haugeveien, Bergen, Norway. 2-9-21

Frank K. Sofsky is desirous of knowing the whereabouts of his brother, Carl McCormick Sofsky, who was last heard from while returning from France on the U. S. Army Transport "America" at Norfolk, Va. Anyone knowing his whereabouts will please communicate with the above named party at 9 N. Washington Street, Stanton, Va. 7-7-20

It has just come to my attention that Silas B. Axtell has published the following concerning me in his weekly report: "I beg to announce that Mr. Arthur Lavenburg has left my employ to go into private practice for himself. There is a need in this port of honest, capable lawyers like Mr. Lavenburg, who will take up and prosecute seamen's cases. I do not believe that it is Mr. Lavenburg's intention to handle seamen's work exclusively, but I trust that seamen will give Mr. Lavenburg the support he deserves. His office will be at 116 Broad Street, New York City." While I appreciate what Mr. Axtell has said about me, nevertheless in order to dispel any intimation that I am in any way connected with Mr. Axtell, I wish to state most emphatically that I have no connection or association with him, and I am in practice for myself. Furthermore, I have been for the past five years, and intend in the future, to specialize in seamen's claims exclusively. Arthur Lavenburg, New York, N. Y.

Domestic and Naval

Business conditions, with particular reference to the shipping division, have not in years appeared so stagnant as at present, in the opinion of George A. Armes, president and general manager of the Moore Shipbuilding Company, who returned to San Francisco recently from New York. More than 600 vessels are tied up at New York alone, Armes said.

After a recent conference with President Harding, Senator Cummins, Republican, Iowa, chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, announced he would introduce a resolution when Congress reconvened providing for investigation of the railway situation. The inquiry, he said, would go into the question of rates, wages and management with a view to determining primarily if there had been gross mismanagement and whether present rates were justified.

Half a hundred junior engineers and deck officers are wanted by the Coast and Geodetic Survey. It's a high-class job, according to the civil service announcement, and only college men or experienced practical engineers and scientists need apply. Examinations will be held April 13 and 14, May 25 and 26 and July 6 and 7, the subjects for test being higher mathematics, modern languages, astronomy, physics and surveying. The entrance salary is $2000 a year and sustenance similar to that given Army and Navy officers. The salary is increased to $2240 a year after a month of satisfactory service. The pay is the same as in the Navy, with the same retirement salary.

Welcomed with a terrific din from whistles and sirens of scores of warships and escorted by the big blimp B-18 and a squadron of ship planes, the surviving unit of the Pacific air force's history-making flight to the Panama Canal and back, returned to San Diego March 10. Unfavorable weather conditions, motor troubles and other mishaps resulted in a straggling finish. The air craft ending the last "hop" of their 6000-mile cruise winged their way to the harbor in small groups. To No. 5 of the F 5-L seaplane squad went the honor of being the first to return safe. This machine was the first to take off on the morning of December 30 from San Diego on a trip whose perils had not been tried by an aircraft. On the flight from San Diego to Balboa the planes traveled 3209 miles in fifty-one hours and forty-eight minutes, actual flying time. On the voyage north the planes, due to changes in fuel bases, traveled 3300 miles in fifty-seven hours and seventeen minutes. The total time spent in the air for the 6500-mile round trip was 109 hours and five minutes, an average speed of approximately a mile a minute. The fastest leg of the entire round trip was made between Balboa, Canal Zone, and Cape Mala, when the planes averaged eighty-six knots an hour for the 250-mile "hop" from Balboa to Bahia Honda. Captain Mustin said he is not satisfied with the types of machines used. He said the F 5-L's are not so seaworthy as ships used in such long flights ought to be, while the NC planes, both of which were wrecked on the way south, were hopelessly underpowered.

Domestic and Naval

Mare Island employes have been advised that the fight to secure the $240 a year bonus for the coming fiscal year has been lost in Congress. The bonus was paid during the period of the war. The bonus added 75 cents a day to the wages of the employes. This they will lose after the first of July.

The Bank Line freighter "Halrick" recently arrived at Boston, Mass., with a $1,500,000 cargo of jute from India, after a fight with fire and fumes which lasted four days and nights through the Red Sea and the Mediterranean. Seven hundred bales of the cargo were destroyed, but further damage was prevented by the efforts of the crew.

Announcement is made by the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. that Corinto has been made a regular port of call for its freight steamers plying between San Francisco and Baltimore and New York. This means a direct service of 15 days to Baltimore and New York without transshipment at Cristobal, which change formerly resulted in a loss of time often amounting to a month.

The United States Navy has broken the world's long-distance wireless record. Messages were sent from Cavite, Philippine Islands, to Washington, D. C., a distance of 10,000 miles, in less than three minutes. The record, which surpasses that of the Washington-to-Paris wireless relay used during the war, was made possible by an automatic control invented by Lieutenant U. S. Fanning of the Twelfth Naval District. Besides the Goat Island radio, the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company and the North Island radio the record-breaking message sending.

Suit in behalf of the Australian government to compel the handing over of a mortgage for $1,685,000 as compensation for eight motorships is on file in the United States Court. The defendants are the Pacific Steamship Company, Pacific Freighters' Company, Anglo - California Trust Company, Anglo, London and Paris National Bank, W. L. Comyn & Co. and ten John Doe defendants. According to the complaint, it was agreed that the Australian government should turn over the eight vessels, which are each of 3500 tons, to the corporations mentioned, in return for the mortgage. It is set forth that the mortgage has not been delivered, the probable reason being the shrinkage in shipping values since the deal was arranged.

The "Bear," once reported on the "retired" list and subsequently the butt of several conjectures from semi-official sources as to her disposition, will make another trip into northern waters with the flag of the U. S. Coast Guard Service flying at her masthead. Captain C. S. Cochrane is in San Francisco for the purpose of fitting the "Bear" for her northern cruise. He arrived several days ago and has made an inspection of the craft which he found in very good condition. The "Bear" spent part of the winter in port in the North and then was in Seattle and left [illegible] at Seattle she was at that time reported to be on the way to San Diego to join two other Coast Guard cutters as a training ship. Captain Cochrane has been in the Coast Guard Service for many years. He started his sea career in the days [illegible] switched to the Coast Guard while a youth.

Demobilization of the Costa Rican army, which crossed the Panaman frontier and drove forces of that country back for upward of twenty-five miles, has been ordered by the Government.

According to Moscow advices, the latest revolt in Petrograd against the Soviet government has failed. The uprising was brought about by adventurers financed by allied [illegible]. Dissolution among the insurgents is increasing.

The Japanese naval program is declared to be the "most ambitious scheme of naval expansion ever undertaken in peace times by any modern nation," by the Japan Advertiser, English language newspaper published in Japan. The paper carried a detailed analysis of the naval plans.

During 1920 a total of 35 American ships with an aggregate net tonnage of 115,645 entered and cleared the port of Santander, Spain, according to Consul Stafford of that city. During the year the total number of ships entered was 1,819, with a total net tonnage of 1,232,196.

John Robert Clynes, Labor member of the House of Commons, in a recent argument with Premier Lloyd George challenged the Premier's change of front. Clynes contended that the Allies acted precipitately in refusing to grant Germany delay to make fresh proposals; he thought they should have invoked the aid of the United States as arbiter.

Seaplanes from the Jericho Beach station will co-operate this year with Dominion Government fishery patrol gasboats and steamers in patroling the fishing grounds of the British Columbia coast. It is expected the planes will considerably facilitate the department in detecting illegal obstruction in streams. Air machines will also be used to visit the inland lakes.

The seaport of Porti, Georgia, on the Black Sea, north of Batum, has been occupied by the Bolsheviki. The retiring Georgians burned the coal sheds and left the port on steamers in a storm. The Turkish Nationalists, who recently occupied Batum, are said to be disarming all incoming Georgian soldiers. Georgian civilians have been executed in Tiflis by the Bolsheviki in reprisal for the execution of the Bolshevik mission there by the Georgians before the latter retired.

Plans are under way for a great building to be used as general headquarters for the London Labor party. It will be constructed close to Oxford street or the Strand. The building will cost $2,000,000 and will serve as a rallying-point for trade unionists and co-operators, who will use it both for business and social purposes. Department stores, selling all kinds of food, clothing and merchandise, will occupy the ground floor, while the second floor will have a large hall seating 1500 persons that can be used for meetings, lectures and motion picture shows. Club rooms, a restaurant for members, a library and statistical bureau and bedrooms for the accommodation of visitors will be provided and palatial decorations will adorn the interiors. Such a scheme is in keeping with the position which organized labor holds in England. The labor leaders are trained thinkers and organizers, and are well represented in Parliament.

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

A JUDGEMENT REVERSED

Difficulties of Obtaining Compensation for Injuries Revealed

On June 7, 1920, in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, before Judge Garvin sitting in equity, a jury brought in a verdict for $3000 in favor of Frank Brandt, A. B., in a suit for damages against the schooner "George D. Edmonuds." The case was noted in the Journal, issue of June 23, 1920. The owners of the vessel appealed the case, which resulted in a reversal of opinion. The record follows:

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, for the Second Circuit.

Before Ward, Rogers and Manton, Circuit Judges.

Silas B. Axtell, Attorney for Defendant-in-Error.

Bertrand L. Pettigrew, Attorney for Plaintiff-in-Error.

Walter L. Glenney, of Counsel.

This cause comes here on writ of error to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York.

The plaintiff-in-error was the defendant below and is hereinafter referred to as the defendant. The defendant-in-error was the plaintiff below and is hereinafter referred to as the plaintiff.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Rogers, Circuit Judge. The plaintiff is an alien, a subject of Holland, and a resident of the State of New York in the Southern District thereof. He brought this action to recover indemnity for an injury which he sustained while serving as a seaman on the three-mast schooner "George D. Edmunds." The defendant is one of the joint owners of the schooner, a citizen of the State of New York and a resident of the Eastern District thereof.

It appears that on May 24, 1918, the plaintiff signed certain shipping articles as an able-bodied seaman on board the schooner at the port of Philadelphia for a voyage to Cuba. The injury occurred on July 16, 1918, while the vessel was in port at Manzanillo, Cuba, and it was caused by running a needle into his eye while he was sewing the main sail which he had been ordered by the chief officer of the schooner to mend. The allegation is that while he was mending the sail with the aid of a needle and yarn, and while in the exercise of due and proper care and without any negligence on his part, and by reason of the defective, old and chafed and rotten condition of said said, the needle and yarn were caused to go through the sail, striking and penetrating the plaintiff's right eye, necessitating its removal and the consequent loss of vision in the eye.

The plaintiff was an experienced seaman, 32 years of age and with sixteen years' experience as a sailor. He had been sewing sails a good many times during his sixteen years at sea, and he had been at work sewing this particular sail for about eight days prior to the accident. On the way down to Cuba the schooner ran into a period of rough weather, lasting about three days, during which she was running with only the main sail and the reefed fore sail. This main sail of the main mast had been used throughout the voyage from Philadelphia to Manzannillo. When the vessel reached Cuba the plaintiff and another one of the seamen were set to work putting necessary patches on this mainsail, which had been taken down and was spread out on top of the cabin. At the moment of the accident the plaintiff was engaged in what was known as roping the main sail, which consisted of sewing a rope to the edge of the sail, using a needle about four or five inches in length, for sewing material. At the time of the accident Brandt had just started with a new needleful, and after passing the needle through the rope and through the sail, he held the needle in the palm of his hand with the point sticking out about two inches. He pulled the thread through the rope and canvas until the knot pulled tight, and it is claimed that the knot was intended to pass between the strands of the rope until it reached the sail, and then it was supposed to hold tight, but on this particular occasion when the plaintiff pulled it tight the knot came through the canvas and the needle stuck into his eye.

The plaintiff's testimony is that ordinarily he would have pulled the thread out away from him, but the other man who was working on the sail was sitting close to him so that he was afraid of sticking his needle into the other man and therefore pulled it toward his own face. He was asked and testified as follows:

"Q. How did Hutchinson happen to be near you?

"A. Because he was mending; he was mending a small hole in the sail.

"Q. He was mending a small hole in the sail and was right near you?

"A. Yes.

"Q. Could you not have moved and got around to one side so as to avoid him?

"A. No. I couldn't because the sail was close together; the place that he was sewing was close to me. I couldn't move or pull it away from him."

The plaintiff was removed to the hospital at Manzanillo, and he remained there for three months. The inside of the eye ran out and the eye had to be removed. He was returned to New York by the American Consul, as is customary with seamen in our merchant marine. He was paid his wages until he left the ship and went into the hospital.

The complainant states two causes of action. In the first the plaintiff alleges that the vessel was unseaworthy and was not a safe place in which to work, and that he was not furnished with reasonably safe tools and appliances, and he seeks to recover damages in the sum of $10,000.00 for the loss of his eye. In the second the plaintiff alleges that he has expended and will have to expend large sums of money for his maintenance, board and lodging until he is able to perform work and for that he makes claim in the sum of $500.00. No claim was made in the case for medicinal expenses, and none for wages.

At the close of the case counsel for the defendant moved for a non-suit, and for the direction of a verdict on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to show that the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury was any dereliction on the part of the owner. The motion was denied.

The case was submitted to a jury which brought in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $3,000.00.

The plaintiff urges four claims as to the vessel being unseaworthy:

1. That there was not an extra new main sail which could have been put in place of the sail which they were repairing.
2. That the canvas in the sail was worn and weak so that the knot on the thread pulled through the canvas.
3. That the sail was not wide enough to permit doubling over the edge of it so that the rope could be sewed to a double thickness of canvas, as was the customary manner of doing.
4. That the mate ordered him to proceed in haste as the sail had to be bent the next day, and there was no time to sew on a new piece of canvas along the edge of the old sail, so as to make it wide enough to allow the edge to be doubled over.

As respects the first of these grounds it is sufficient to say that the question whether the vessel had or had not an extra sail is not material because the only importance of an extra sail was that it might be used in case the sail which was actually used blew away. If the ship had become unmanageable as the result of not having a new sail to take the place of one which had blown away it might be said that the vessel was unseaworthy for want of a substitute sail. But that situation never arose, and the fact that the main sail was used all the way from Philadelphia to Cuba and that it withstood three days of heavy weather shows very clearly that it was not unseaworthy. The plaintiff's own witness admitted that it must have been in pretty good condition to stand a three days' storm around Cape Hatteras. The sail was only two years old and the plaiantiff's expert testified that a sail that was only two years old was not too old to use. The plaintiff's accident was not due to the failure of any appliance on the ship to perform its proper function.

The testimony shows without contradiction that there were several large rolls of canvas in the locker in the capitain's cabin suitable for making patches on sails. The following is an excerpt from the plaintiff's testimony and it sheds light on the second, third, and fourth grounds assigned for the claim as to the unseaworthiness of the vessel:

"Q. Then you don't claim that there was not canvas enough there if you had wanted to take the time to fix it. Is that right? A. I think there was enough for that patch.

"Q. So that if you had taken the time and if the mate had not told you that you didn't have time to do it, you could have gone to the locker and got a piece of canvas and sewed it onto the edge of the sail? A. No, he would have given it to me.

"Q. Well, if he had given it to you you could have done it? A. Yes, it was not just exactly necessary.

"Q. You say the way that you had it you could not do it safely, because you couldn't turn it over far enough? A. Of course, but you are not so particular with an old said, though.

"Q. But you say it was not wide enough to turn over in the proper way? A. No, it was not.

"Q. If you had sewed a piece on it would have been wide enough, would it not? Yes, it ought to be then.

"Q. And the only reason you didn't was because the mate told you that they wanted to sail the next day, and you didn't have time? A. Sure thing."

The rules of law which govern the relationship between master and servant on land are not applicable to seamen. From early times they have been considered a peculiar class and unusual protection has been extended to them. But we know of no rule of the maritime law which imposes upon the owners of a ship liability for an accident such as this. The unfortunate accident of which the plaintiff complains was the result of the plaintiff's own manner of doing his work. If it could in any manner be attributed to the negligence of the mate in improvidently hastening the work the shipowner would not be liable therefor in a suit to indemnity the seaman for the injury. In Chelentis v. Luckenbach Steamship Co., 247 U. S. 372, the court held that by the general maritime law the vessel owner is liable only for the maintenance, cure and wages of a seaman injured in the service of his ship, by the negligence of a member of the crew whether a superior officer or not. And in the particular case before us the plaintiff had received his wages and his expenses for "maintenance and cure" had been met.

In Erickson v. Roebling, 261 Fed. 986, this court applied the rule of the Chelentis case and held that the owners of a ship were not liable in damages for an injury to a seaman through adoption by a master of a dangerous method of discharging caro.

In this argument in this court counsel for the plaintiff sought to distinguish the Erickson case from this on the ground that in the former case the vessel was itself unseaworthy while in this the shipowner provided an unseaworthy vessel. But as this court is satisfied that there is no evidence of unseaworthiness of the vessel to be found in this record the distinction does not exist. No dereliction of duty on the part of the shipowner has been shown. Whatever caused the accident was a condition known to the plaintiff, and resulted from his own careless act, and was not due to any negligence or lack of care on the part of the owner in making the vessel or its appliances seaworthy.

Judgment reversed.

VALUABLE RESEARCH

The Carnegie Institute of Washington has made public some interesting data obtained during the voyage of the non-magnetic ship "Carnegie," which recently arrived at San Francisco. Experiments covering all the waters of the globe were made in observations of the compass and other magnetic variations. The variations were traced in the atmosphere by two specially designed instruments called a deflector and magnometer. These tracings later will be shown on a chart, and will be made available to every navy and merchant marine on earth as a guide to navigation. These charts will be as nearly exact as it is possible to make such a guide. Many corrections to old time charts have been discovered.

So intensively and penetratingly did the instruments work, aided by the utter absence of magnetic attraction by everything else on the vessel, that certain degrees of magnetic in the Indian ocean were found to be radically different from the best charts and projections available. In some instances these differences amounted to several minutes.

Research Work Necessary

There is a constant play of these variations over the magnetic orbit. And the cause of this play or change although extensively theorized upon, never has been exactly explained the Carnegie scientists said. These magnetic changes make the utilization of the non-magnetic ship and its instruments and the preparation of new charts constantly necessary. For instance, a mariner using a magnetic chart prepared by the institution ten years ago could not steer as accurately as if he consulted a chart prepared but a year ago.

The magnetic ship made an absolute myth out of the general belief that the compass always points directly north. It added convincing proof to the scientific theory that there are only two longitudinal lines, one of them extremely irregular, where such a thing occurs. Whenever a ship crosses one of these lines the compass will get the direct polaric influence. Everywhere else it will point either east of north or west of north.

Traveled 300,000 Miles

In the taking of these figurative X-rays and the compilation of its data, sometimes interestingly geographical as well as magnetic, the "Carnegie" has traveled more than 300,000 miles since she was launched June 12, 1909. She is the only vessel credited with having circumnavigated the globe in the sub-Antarctic regions. In this voyage, entirely within the confines of the Great Southern Ocean, which has come to be the scientific name for the Antarctic, she stopped but once, that being at the island of Georgia, a whaling station in the South Pacific.

On the present voyage, which began in October, 1919, she touched at French West Africa, Buenos Aires, the island of St. Helena, where Napoleon was exiled; Capetown, Ceylon, Australia, New Zealand, Papeete, the Fanning Islands and San Francisco, from whence she will go to Samoa and the Panama Canal, and then home to Washington.

The "Carnegie" was compelled to use her auxiliary gas engine a number of times to take her out of equatorial calm belts and to help drive her through storm-tossed seas when the sails were in danger of blowing away. This engine contains the only magnetic influence on board, but it is so far away from the recording instruments that it has absolutely no effect on them.

The "Carnegie" carries a complement of twenty-three persons. Captain J. P. Ault of Washington has full charge of both the navigation of the vessel and the recording of the magnetic data. He is assisted by a second in command, Lieutenant H. F. Johnston of the British navy, who resides in Toronto. Andrew Thompson, Toronto; Robert M. Nills, Washington, and H. R. Grumann, Lincoln, Neb., act as observers.

The "Carnegie" is not a Government enterprise, but is solely under the direction of the Department of Terrestrial Magnetism of the Carnegie Institute.

WEST HOLDS RECORD

Capturing the United States Navy district banner for wireless records established in February, 1921, Lieutenant Commander Scott D. McCaughey, radio chief at Tewelfth Naval District headquarters, announced the following achievements for the four weeks of February:

First—Two ships 7000 miles apart in the Pacific ocean communicated with and messages from one to the other exchanged through the navy radio at San Francisco.

Second—More than 1,000,000 words shot through air during the four weeks, received and sent through space a distance that would encircle the globe almost 300 times.

Third—Ship lost in fog off the coast guided by radio bearings and enabled to make port safely under conditions that otherwise would have baffled the most intrepid and adventurous sea captain.

Fourth—Bride of navy officer, isolated with her husband on the Farallones, administered first aid by navy doctor, who prescribed treatment by radio wireless.

The ships joined together by wireless were the "Ecuador" and the "Los Angeles," the "Ecuador" being off the coast of Japan, 5310 miles from San Francisco, and the "Los Angeles" at Tampico, Mexico, 1690 miles distant from this station.

The ship lost in the fog was brought into San Francisco bay, for which service the skipper in charge sent his thanks to Lieutenant Commander McCaughey.

The navy bride was the wife of Lieut. Charles Glass, suddenly stricken with appendicitis. Following treatment directed by radio she was brought to San Francisco for hospital care and recovered.

A big card in the winning wireless hand of the navy radio was Electrician First Class Irving Kaufman, in charge of the beach wireless station at San Francisco, who handled all long distance messages.

PLANES VS. DREADNAUGHTS

The army air service is preparing to gas a battleship.

When the army planes sail over an obsolete battleship next June to demonstrate that surface craft is helpless under a shower of bombs, the air service also intends to show that a battleship can be forced into virtual submission by the use of gas.

Colonel A. E. Fries, head of the chemical warfare section, who is co-operating with Brigadier-General William Mitchell in the proposed gas attack, stated:

"The possibilities of gas bombs are so astounding as to make one wince. Any form of gas, varying from the kind that puts men gently asleep to the poisonous mustard variety and the tear gas, can be placed in explosive shells and dropped by airplanes on an enemy fleet below. The gas would permeate a battleship, some kinds continuing their effect for several days. The crew of an enemy ship, presumably, would don gas masks and rubber suits, but this would greatly incapacitate them for work aboard ship, and some gases are so powerful as to defy artificial protection."

Liquid gas, Fries explained, could be showered on a battle fleet by a host of airplanes so that it would descend in a steady mist. Progress by the United States in chemical warfare, Fries said, also has reached the point where floating bombs can be dropped in the water, creating a smoke cloud both poisonous and obstructive to a ship's visibility.

The air battle probably will take place the first week in June. Mitchell plans to employ 100 planes, raining bombs as great as a ton in weight upon a battleship which will be sacrificed for the science of war.

Organized labor too often commits the common error of neglecting its friends in order the more sedulously to cultivate its enemies.

Weekly News Letter

Where Might Is Right

Forces that have been thundering to labor on law observance and contract obligations are silent when big business ignores law and and breaks pledges that are intended to maintain industrial peace.

These buccaneers, booted and spurred, are today violating law, smashing wage agreements and repudiating solemn compacts with the government itself.

The first general move was made when the railroads asked the railway labor board to set aside certain labor provisions of the Cummins-Ech act, which the railroads so strongly urged. The purpose of the request was to have a clear field for wage reductions and not be hampered by such details as proving their case to the board or permit employes to have a voice in the proceedings.

The railroads were told that they must obey the law. Then they began wholesale wage reductions—doing the very thing the railway labor board said they should not do without a hearing before the board.

To evade the law the Atlanta, Birmingham & Atlantic railroad was placed in the hands of a receiver, on application of a bank. Federal Judge Sibley appointed the president of the road the receiver and the first order issued by that official, with the sanction of the court, was to cut wages 50 per cent. A strike followed this flouting of the law, which the public is ignorant of and which may be used as a precedent by other roads and other courts.

The meat packers entered an agreement with their employes and the government to run until the war was ended and peace was officially declared. In 1919 the packers asked the government to extend the agreement for one year after peace was declared. This was done and now the packers smash the agreement, destroy arbitration machinery that operated so successfully, reduce wages and lengthen hours.

While there is nothing new in the law-smashing, contract-breaking tactics of these modern Captain Kidds, the silence of those who are continually advising labor is sinister.

It seems to make a difference whose ox is gored when some people talk of law observance.

Has big business sufficient "pull" that certain newspapers overlook its anarchy?

The organized workers believe in orderly procedure and they must maintain this policy.

The chaos that big business favors cannot justify workers in abandoning methods that are supported by the experience of man.

Temporary gains, through treachery and deceit, are futile before the long, steady pull of intelligence, order and a cool head.

Cossack Plan Explained

Senator Jewell, of the forty-third district of Illinois, has issued a public statement to his constituents in which he asks for instructions on how to vote on the cossack bill, pending in the Illinois Legislature. The law maker urges voters to read the bill and then express their wishes to him.

"The bill," says Senator Jewell, "contemplates bringing into your county a non-resident constabulary. It does not provide that any of them shall be citizens of your county, or even of the State of Illinois. They are given authority to arrest the citizens of your county without warrant, and yet they are not required to give any bond for the faithful performance of their duties, or to protect the people against an abuse of their power. The sheriff of your county, whom you know, and whom you select by your vote, is required to execute a bond, and I do not believe that non-residents should be clothed with such power without a bond.

"The public press of New York has lately exposed the fact that a wave of crime is sweeping the State and that the people there are demanding 'better police protection' and that some are even advising the formation of vigilant committees. If the State constabulary don't function there, why will it function in Illinois?"

Pleads for Teachers

In a message to the State Legislature at Nashville, Tenn., Governor Taylor urges action in behalf of public school teachers and especially those in rural communities. He says that the bulletin issued by the State Department of Public Instruction in October, 1920, is a severe indictment of the educational statesmanship of that State.

"Its revelations are appalling," says the Governor. "That document shows that the average term for rural elementary schools today is only 104 days, and that the term is 10 days less than it was 10 years ago. Only 75 per cent. of the total school population is enrolled in the public schools; only 66 per cent. of such enrollment is in actual attendance and 34 per cent. attends irregularly. Only 5 per cent. of the school enrollment in Tennessee is in the high school, whereas the average in the whole United States is 9.3 per cent. It is shown that during the late war 2,600 out of the 2,900 men drafted in one of the leading counties in the State had not attended school beyond the third grade. It is further shown that in another leading county only 20 per cent. of the drafted men could read and write."

Veto Anti-Labor Bill

Governor McRea of Arkansas has vetoed a bill that would permit labor unions to be sued and would hold individual members liable for judgment secured against the organization. The bill slipped through the Legislature on the claim that it was for the relief of an apple growers' association. The workers asked the Governor to veto it and their reasons were sustained by the Attorney-General. Sixty members of the Legislature signed a petition requesting the Governor to reject the bill.

Associated Press despatches state that negotiations looking to the formation of a coalition government for Soviet Russia have been opened by Nikolai Lenin, Bolshevist premier, with leaders of the Menseviki and Social Revolutionaries, says a despatch from Reval to the Berlingske Tidende.

The Danish co-operating trade unions have called a strike, to commence March 29, in the steel and metal industry, the textile, shoe and brick factories and in the sawmills. The strike will involve about 200,000 workers and was called in retaliation to a lockout declared by the employers' organizations.

A recent cablegram from Buenos Aires states that with the intervention of the Minister of Public Works, an award was arrived at between the representatives of the Mihanovich Steamship Company, and its employes. Work will be resumed at once and steamship service will again be operated for passengers and cargo with Asuncion and Salto; other services will be resumed as ships are repaired after a long period of idleness.

Ten million Russians are suffering from malignant malaria, and the available supply of quinine consists of about 5,000 pounds, according to letters received by the Seattle Central Labor Council from the Soviet Russia Medical Relief Committee, with headquarters in New York. The available quinine is declared to be a mere drop in the bucket as compared to the quantity needed, and the committee urges all friends of humanity to contribute money to be used in the purchase of the drug.

Ballots of the employes at packing centers throughout the country by latest tabulations showed a vote of 44,799 to 618 in favor of a strike if the union leaders fail to obtain revisions of the packers' recently instituted wage cut and rearrangement of working hours. Secretary Lane of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen's Union, announced that official count of the vote in the Kansas City yards showed 5224 men authorizing a strike and seventy-nine voting against one. Other vote results announced recently follow: St. Joseph, Mo., for, 1614; against, 17. Wheeling, W. Va., for, 522; against, 2. Cleveland, for, 1769; against, 42.

Railroad unions throughout Mexico have decided to resume work immediately as a result of an agreement reached between national leaders of striking railwaymen and government officials. Virtually normal passenger and freight train schedules will be restored by the first of next week. [illegible] statement by the leaders of the men announcing their determination to call off the strike was issued and government officials are silent as to the details of the settlement. The government was represented in the [illegible] conference by President Obregon and Adolfo de la Huerta, Secretary of the Treasury.

If you are an American or want to be one, or if you don't know, get Axtell's book and find out what America stands for today. What are you doing to see that equal opportunity to each Citizen of the United States in this great land, is preserved? The Seaman's Act, the Emancipation Act of seamen, a bloodless victory for the organization of workers, freeing more men than the Civil War of 1865 and without bloodshed, is fully explained in this book. Postpaid retail price, $1.00.

Silas B. Axtell, author of the book, has been attorney for the International Seamen's Union, Eastern & Gulf Sailors' Association, Marine Cooks & Stewards' Association, Marine Firemen & Oilers' Association and for seamen of the world, of all countries and nationalities for twelve years; has probably argued, tried and appealed more cases for seamen than any other single attorney in the United States.

You Want the Truth

This year there will be stirring times in the Nation. Under government censorship it is increasingly difficult for the average man to get the real meaning of the social and political movements of the day.

LA FOLLETTE'S MAGAZINE

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong — on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

Pacific Coast Marine

The navy transport "Hancock," 3840 tons, has sailed from Philadelphia for San Francisco to enter the navy transport trade on the Pacific.

The motor schooner "Caroline Francis" has returned to San Francisco after a five-months' cruise in Lower California waters, with 1750 barrels of whale oil and 56 whales.

The "Nashaba," 9400-ton cargo vessel, will be launched at the Pacific Coast Shipbuilding Company yards at Bay Point this week as the last steamer for the Shipping Board. The shipyard will close after the completion of the "Nashaba."

The first charter for lumber from the North Pacific to the west coast of Italy in weeks has been in the fixture of the Norwegian schooner "J. W. Clice," which will load on Puget Sound for Callao. The Owens Commercial Company is the charterer.

Fred Doelker, manager of the steamship department of W. R. Grace & Co., agents for the Johnson Line, announced yesterday that the "Canada" departed from Antwerp for San Francisco and coast ports on March 12 with a full cargo. She was compelled to leave 500 tons of cargo in her sheds.

The schooner "W. F. Jewett," reported overdue, has arrived safely at San Francisco from Suva, Fiji Islands. Captain J. Olsen reported sighting floating wreckage, including a piece of deck rail, side of a lifeboat, spars and timbers, about 100 miles west of San Francisco. It is thought this may be wreckage from the schooner "Harvester," whose loss at sea now seems to be well confirmed. The "W. F. Jewett" was unable to identify the floatsam.

The Northwestern Fisheries Company definitely announced three vessels for southwestern Alaska cannery service this season. The ship "St. Paul" is to be dispatched to the Chignik cannery, the ship "Benjamin F. Packard" to the Naknek cannery, and the bark "Guy C. Goss" to Nushagak, Bristol Bay. All three vessels, which have been laid up at Port Blakeley, will ship to Seattle early in April to outfit. They are expected to sail between April 15 and 20.

Scarcity of fuel oil for steamships continues to exist on the Pacific Coast despite an apparent storage at Atlantic ports. Increased consumption here was caused by the demands of vessels of the Merchant Marine and the U. S. Navy. The whole Pacific fleet, which at present is quite extensive, operates entirely on California fuel oil, and steamers of the U. S. Shipping Board also use the fuel of California production. While there has been a slight falling off in consumption, due to slump in trade, the demand has not decreased to the extent that a reserve can be built up.

Direct from Santa Rosalia, Mexico, under tow of the W. R. Grace and Company's steamer "Santa Rita," the former German ship "Egon" has arrived at San Francisco. Twelve days and eight hours was consumed by the "Santa Rita" in towing the craft up from La Paz. The 'Santa Rita" brought 437 tons of silver ore from southern ports for W. R. Grace and Company. She was out 32 days, 10 hours, from Valparaiso and found it necessary to put into San Pedro for fuel. According to marine surveys, the "Egon," above her water line, is in excellent condition. She is reported to be foul below.

The steamer "Washington," from Eureka, arrived in San Francisco on her last trip with her deck load of lumber slightly shifted as the result of an experience on the bar at Eureka which nearly caused the loss of the deck load. According to the story told the "Washington" headed out to sea in a mild gale and in coming over the bar she received such rough treatment from the sea that for a time it was feared the lumber cargo would have to go by the board. The passage was negotiated safely, however, and the steamer made port listing slightly, but otherwise all right.

Recently four of the fleet of "Steel" ships of the Isthmian Line were in port at San Francisco working cargoes. This is the first time that four of the fleet have been in port at the same time in many months. The "Steel Worker" was taking on cargo from New York. She arrived from the north March 19 to finish loading eastbound freight. The "Steel Ranger" was discharging eastern cargo and preparing to go north to take on part return cargo. The "Steel Maker" is bound for London, and the "Steel Mariner" is bound north after discharging some eastern freight. All of the ships were fairly well loaded with general cargo, a good percentage of which was steel in bars and plates. The eastbound cargoes consisted mostly of canned goods, fruit, California produce and lumber.

Acting under instructions from Washington, United States engineers have begun a survey of the bar outside the San Francisco heads preliminary to extensive dredging, which is aimed to reduce the shoal and afford a clearing so vessels of deep draft may have easy access in and out of the port through mid-channel. Under present conditions ships drawing much water are compelled to utilize the North Channel and make two turns before reaching the lightship. The use of the mid-channel would save these craft about four miles. It would also prove valuable to war craft in war time in that it would save these battleships from exposing their broadsides to an enemy from off shore. The mid-channel is to be deepened from 32½ feet to 40 feet and the survey is being made now to determine the scope of the work which will be done by Government dredgers.

Service from San Francisco to the small ports south of the Golden Gate has been resumed with the departure from San Francisco of the gas schooner "Coquelle" of the Santa Cruz and Monterey Steamship Company, for which the Charles Nelson Company are agents. The "Coquelle" takes up the run of the motorship "Margaret," which ceased to operate several weeks ago. Santa Cruz, Monterey and San Simeon are the ports of call, and semi-weekly sailings from San Francisco on Tuesdays and Fridays, will be maintained. General merchandise comprises the outbound freight offerings, while sardines form most of the return freight. There are no accommodations for passengers. The "Coquelle" will carry 200 tons of cargo. It is the intention of the Charles Nelson Company to thoroughly exploit the possibilities of this short coastwise run.

Surprising activity in the chartering of large steamers for the movement of grain and lumber from North Pacific ports has arisen recently, and it was announced that the Shipping Board steamer "West Hartland" had been taken by Dingwell, Cotts & Company to carry ties from British Columbia to Bombay under terms not made public. At rates slightly above that foreigners have closed for, the Shipping Board steamers have been fixed for grain movements. The first, at $12, was taken by M. H. Houser for full tonnage from the Columbia River to the Mediterranean. The second, at $10.50, was fixed by the Northwestern Grain & Warehouse Company for Columbia River to the United Kingdom. These fixtures recall the occasion when the Shipping Board rate was sliced to $16, and many operators declared they could not be run profitably at this rate. The "Canadian Traveler" and "Canadian Prospector" have been taken at $27, Canadian money, by the Canada Overseas Trading Company, for ties from British Columbia to Alexandria, Egypt.

Steamship operators are interested in the public announcement by the Holland-American Line that their new 32,000 gross ton passenger liner, now being built, would be equipped with Diesel engines. It is stated that these engines will develop a speed of 17 or 18 knots an hour and will consume far less oil than engines now utilized in large steamships. Director-General von Doorn of the Holland-American Line also announced the new passenger steamer will be christened the "Statendam" and will be available for service within two years. She will be 800 feet long with accommodations for 3000 passengers. Motor-ships are now becoming common in so far as the freight trade is concerned, but their use for passenger service has not heretofore been attempted. Marine surveyors believe this form of engine will be the factor of the future. The engines are to be built by Harland & Wolfe under its license granted Burmeister & Wain, the Danish patentees. The craft is to be built at the Harland & Wolfe yards, Belfast. Inasmuch as the fuel oil situation of the future will play an important part in steamship operations, both as to cost and supply, local maritime officials intend inquiring thoroughly into the Diesel type of engines.

Direct evidence that the Japanese steamship lines are getting in unwarranted share of the transpacific business merely because Japanese buyers are insisting on having their goods shipped in Japanese bottoms has been uncovered by San Francisco operators. The local men admit freely that the Japanese have beaten them in putting into effect what the Americans have tried to do through the appeal for "American cargoes for American ships." Unconfirmed reports that the Japanese have been employing this method in getting cargoes have been circulated for some weeks, but it has been impossible to find a direct example, but now, according to San Francisco steamship men, the shipment of cotton to Japan is revealed as an exact case in point. Large consignments of cotton have been going out on Japanese steamers recently, while the American vessels have got next to nothing. Only this week a Japanese liner departed from this port with a capacity cargo of which the bulk was Texas cotton. The consignors say they are instructed to deliver to Nipponese lines. It is alleged that the Japanese who buy on a c. i. f. basis insist on having the merchandise consigned via Japanese bottoms. While there is no established evidence in this connection, it is believed that rebates may be paid in Japan in consideration for this assistance.

ONE TOUCH OF NATURE

Golden Gate Park in San Francisco is one of the most beautiful of people's playgrounds in the world. Any fine day, especially on Sundays and holidays, thousands of workers enjoy the natural beauties and other attractions within the boundaries of this splendid park. There are many whose week-end excursions would not be complete without a sun-bath on one of the verdant lawns. In the vicinity of the bandstand, during regular concerts, can be seen men, women and children, of all types and ages, the elders strolling promenades or resting on benches or lawns, while the children play their games with innocent abandon.

Since the evolution of waterfront workers from the rollicking carefree character of old to staid and ambitious citizens, quite a number of sailors find their way to the parks and beaches for recreation. Recently one of these (a character known as "Brocky Alec") wandered to a lawn in front of the park museum, where he threw himself upon the grass to enjoy the sunshine and music. All around him people [illegible] and children played, shrieking with glee in their abundance of health and happiness.

Alec never was considered a person of [illegible] appearance, and his forty odd years of hardship coupled with ravages of smallpox and fevers have left him with a countenance which would be repellant but for a pair of clear blue eyes. In addition to other injuries, while a beachcomber in Callao, where he had once [illegible] from an obsolete "hell ship," he had acquired a disfigurement of features from somebody's knife during a brawl. He had honestly earned the title of a "hard case," but something that smouldered in his heart at times found expression through eyes which precluded [illegible]. He was garbed in accordance with his submerged station in life, but the Bohemian spirit engendered [illegible] the little child [illegible] took slight notice of outward appearance.

There was one little bright-eyed tot with soft golden curls whose father had crowned with a hand-made paper hat, and she looked around to see upon whom she would bestow the prize. After scrutinizing many an attractive young lady and handsome gentleman, her eyes lighted upon the face of the recumbent Alec, who seemed interested in the children's frolics. In a few jumps she was at his side, and as she placed the paper on his iron-grey curls she cooed into one of his damaged ears the childish whisper, "nice mans." It has been said in everlasting truth that "a little child shall lead them," and sacred was the flood of emotion which the chubby arms of the little one around his neck brought forth; as she showed her confidence in a man who the toughest mates had failed to conquer during his loveless life as a world wanderer. The refining influence of that childish faith seemed to make of Alec a better man. Perhaps it brought memories of a mother or sister, who can ever tell. When he arose to lead the baby back to its father there was a softer light in his eyes, his shoulders seemed to square and the poise of his head was higher. Reflecting upon the peculiarity of choice, the fact seems self-evident that with unerring instinct the child trusted the sailor because the sailor loved little children, and the marvel of this one touch of nature leads to other thoughts.

There are numbers of fine fellows with the qualities of good husbands and fathers who are denied their rights and opportunities by unnatural conditions resulting from imperfect regulation of our social and industrial life.

In the various seamen's unions which are striving to higher and higher ideals are thousands of ambitious young men, endowed by nature with all the hopes, aspirations and emotions of other men. Many of them have not yet gone through the mill that crushes or refines; therefore, well for their peace of mind, they do not see the obstacles and tragedies ahead. In the flush of youth they seek adventure, the impelling force of which is romance, engendered by a desire to love. They start the long trail with hope, spurred on by ambition, and believing that all leads are to fulfilment. As the cruel force of circumstance and events check and hurl them back, hope fades and ambition dies away. It is in these hours of depression that the spirit becomes susceptible to recklessness, and the trail too often leads downwards. The parting embrace of a mother or sister is too often the last real true expression of love they ever receive. As they drift from country to country, the ribaldry and tinsel of the gay ports only burns the deeper, and as years go by thwarted hope makes the drifter more hopeless and resigned to his fate. Sometimes as in the instance of the baby in the park slumbering emotions are awakened; but as a general rule the men grit their teeth and stifle their emotions.

The course of life might be burdensome but the migratory learns to grin and bear it. He does not weaken or plead for quarter. The exigencies of the seamen's calling require men that can face adversity with unflinching mein; but conditions which deprive of natural heritage will not be forever tolerated. Until we reach the station where life shall be the same with us as with other men our duties are unfulfilled.

Truly the organized seamen have a heavy task to perform and we are far from the final goal.

"IT DOESN'T MEAN ANYTHING"

Perhaps employers should not receive all the blame for their aggressions upon labor unions. There is a possibility that to some extent they have been indirectly invited by the extreme conservatism displayed by a number of our reputed leaders. Within the last few months labor has been brought face to face with elements that reveal a determination to break down the system of collective bargaining entirely, and it was not until confronted with this menace that these ultra-conservatives bestirred themselves or failed to nullify the efforts of more progressive factors in the labor movement. A certain quality of conservatism is beneficient, but when it develops to a degree of reaction tempered with fear it is a discordant and ruinous element in a progressive movement.

Seafarers have at all times been moderates; the very nature of their calling, which is the last to adopt anything new, probably influences that condition. But there are times when the limits of conservatism are reached, and we have nearly attained that limit. It has now become necessary for us to look with more progressive view upon the happenings around us. Due to the peculiarities of our particular craft, we have been less affected by the collosal shakeup which resulted from the world war. Our mode of living and working was not as forcibly or thoroughly thrown out of the rut as that of workers ashore. Innured to hardships and the discomforts, with very little of the world's goods in our possession, and that little subject to immediate transfer at any and all times; we have not felt the changed conditions with the same effect as those in other industries. Therefore our line of thought has not undergone the same radical changes as resulted elsewhere.

A tendency towards carelessness or reaction invites attack from unscrupulous and predatory employers; vigilance and progressive views are the best safeguard. The recent revolt of organized labor's rank and file against the dictation of their leaders has probably further encouraged the employers to attack.

They may as well be made to understand now as at any other time that insofar as the spirit of unity is affected, contempt for ultra conservative leaders "does not mean anything," unless it be practical illustration of the fact that the workers are tired of having their efforts nullified by reactionary tactics of leaders who have long since outlived their usefulness to the labor movement, and who prove the same by pursuing a course which gives aid and comfort to their enemies.

Opposition to the regular leadership does not mean discontent with the unions; if anything, it is the expression of a desire on part of the workers for constructive accomplishments.

BENSON ADVISES

The following information has been issued by the United States Shipping Board:

Admiral Benson in a telegram to the Pacific American Steamship Association, has advised against arbitrary action by either side in the effort to reduce operating expenses.

The marine working agreements on the West Coast, having been terminated by 30 days' notice given to the labor unions by the operators and steamship owners on the West Coast, the Shipping Board was asked to join in a notice to the labor unions of a reduction and a change in working conditions effective immediately.

Admiral Benson, however, believing that the subject could be better approached in a spirit of co-operation and fairness and that some method might be worked out with labor whereby to meet the present industrial depression, sent a wire to the steamship operators Monday, March 14, urging that the matter be handled in a broad manner.

It is hoped by the Shipping Board that the men effected will realize the necessity for the strictest economy in all departments and will meet with the employers in a spirit of co-operation, always keeping in mind the maintenance of a permanent American Merchant Marine.

NAVY BOYS ARE O. K.

Forcefully declaring that ex-navy men cannot be induced to act the part of strike-breakers, an indignant "gob" has directed the attention of the JOURNAL to a press report which he claimed implicated the Naval Y. M. C. A. with an alleged seaman who shipped under wages on the steamer "Wilpolo" in the harbor of San Francisco.

We were pleased to assure our naval friend that no such construction as he had given could be placed upon the press notice. The entente cordiale existing between all seamen, both of the navy and mercantile marine, precludes any adverse opinion as to the principles of the average "gob." Although there may be black sheep in any flock; there is every evidence that the quality of honor, which constitutes the make-up of real men everywhere is strongly manifest in the character of the average American naval seaman. Therefore ridiculous stories of imaginative newspaper reporters receive slight credence; and, inasmuch as the matter of wages, etc., was amicably adjusted between the operators of the steamer in question and the seamen, the press comment of that particular affair has proven "so much hot air."

AIDS TO GOOD GOVERNMENT

The Legislative program of the People's Reconstruction League, with headquarters at Washington, D. C., includes immediate restoration of the railroads to unified Government operation, packer control legislation, progressive taxation of estates, incomes and excess profits, and a vigorous fight against a retail sales tax and other consumption taxes. Federal control of natural resources, changing our banking and credit system so as to make it serve the people instead of the big finaciers, and opposing universal compulsory military training.

Always demand the Union Label!

WATCH YOUR SIGNING

The ever present necessity for vigilance upon the part of seamen while signing Articles is elucidated by the following opinion of Learned Hand, Judge of the District Court, Southern District, New York:

United States District Court, Southern District of New York.

George V. Cohan, et al., against British & South American Steam Navigation Co., Ltd.

Learned Hand, D. J.

The first question is whether the ship's articles were actually signed as required by the British Mercantile Shipping Act of 1894. They were regular except for the fact that instead of being physically present the Vice-Consul, who signed them, was in an adjoining room and deputed his duties to his Chief Clerk. The Act, Section 124, requires the seaman to be engaged "before the officer," i. e., a British Consular officer, and requires the officer to attest that the articles were signed "in his presence." It appears to be the uniform practice of the British Consul in this Port to "sign on" seamen in this way. In view of this construction of a British Statute by a public officer of Great Britain, it is extremely questionable whether I ought in any case to consider the matter as open for a contrary interpretation in the courts of another country. But it is independently clear that the statute admits of the construction placed upon it by the Consul since it is in general within the powers of a public officer to depute ministerial duties to subordinates for execution, St. Margaret's Parish Burial Board v. Thompson, L. R. 6, C. P. 445, 458; Clark vs. Warner, 4 Moore & Scott, 121, Parker vs. Kett, 1 Ld. Raymond, 658, 660. I conclude therefore that the articles were regularly executed.

It is well settled that no oral contract will prevail over the articles if these be regular under the statute, especially if read and explained to the seamen before signing. The Lakme, 93 Fed. R. 230; The Triton, Fed. Case 14, 181; The Quintero, Fed. Cas. 11,417. But the articles will be set aside more easily than ordinary contracts, and probably it is enough to show that they were not so read over. The Quintero, supra, so that if it were true that the clause in question had not been read over or explained, that would be enough. Upon that issue there is a dispute. The Consul's chief clerk remembers nothing of circumstances which is quite natural, but says that it is his practice always to read over that part of the articles which describes the voyage before the seamen sign. It seems to me unlikely that he failed to do so in this case. Moreover, the libelants do not agree upon that point. Coombs says that the articles were not read and that the chief clerk said that the libelants would be paid off in the United States. He also attributes to the chief clerk a statement that they need not trouble about being paid off in England, as they were not wanted there and would not be allowed to stay. If so, the clerk must have been positively concerned to suppress the phrase in the articles because, being written in his own hand, he cannot have been ignorant of the clause in question. That he should have done so is improbable. Samuels also says that the chief clerk told him he would be paid off in the United States. Both say that the articles have been changed by the addition of the word "do," meaning ditto, which they now contain. This also is improbable because if there was a dishonest scheme to ship them fraudulently, it would have been completed at the time. Moreover, Samuel's name is included in the bracket which the chief clerk certainly wrote, and as to him there was no ditto sign. On the other hand Jones says that the articles were read by the clerk but not the phrase "if the ship returns." Possibly the stories may be reconciled upon the theory that when Coombs and Samuels said that the clerk told them what the voyage was, he was reading it. Yet it must be remember that they distinctly swore that the articles were not read. There seems to me to be a conflict, especially as Jones was later uncertain just what was read.

Wellington's version is more explicit as to the clerk's connivance in the scheme. He says that when the mate suggested that they might be discharged in England, the clerk intervened and said that they could not be expected to accept that, as they were not wanted there. Yet after saying so he allowed them to sign articles which he knew would make that right conditional upon the ship's return.

Therefore, the libelants' story necessarily presupposes, and indeed they avow, that they were the subject of a deliberate fraud, in which the Consul's representative participated, to deprive them of a right which they especially bargained for. This was accomplished by suppressing a part of the articles which if discovered they would at once have repudiated. I cannot see any motive for such a device unless the clerk had been corrupted by the mate or wantonly favored the ship against the seamen. On the other hand, there is an explanation which seems

APPRENTICE BILL DEFEATED

The State Legislature of New Jersey has rejected a bill that would make it unlawful to limit apprentices in any occupation. Trade unionists insisted that industry is so specialized that employers in many trades are now demanding handy men and not apprentices. That this view is correct is shown by the lack of interest in the bill by employers.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

Pickets Declared Unlawful

Commenting at a hearing on the application of Schwartz & Jaffee for an injunction to restrain the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America from interfering with the workers of the company, Justice James C. Van Siclen of the Supreme Court in Brooklyn expressed the opinion that there can be no lawful picketing, because picketing is interference and intended "to injure some one." The Justice made his remarks after Meier Steinbrink, counsel for the company, had recited some of the alleged disorders which have attended the efforts of the manufacturers to maintain an open shop.

Justice Van Siclen asked Robert Szold, who appeared for the union, if the Amalgamated did not control the locals. The lawyer replied that it did not.

"To my mind there can be no lawful picketing, because if it is lawful picketing it can be of no use to the union," said the Justice. "The purpose of picketing is interference one way or another. The only reason human beings do it is to try to injure some one.

Employers' Intolerance

"For the next five years," he continued, "I imagine the workers will find difficulty in getting work. The worm is turning again. The trouble with the employers is, apparently, the workers can't work if they belong to a union. Have these employers put out notices that there is a strike there?"

"No, sir," replied Szold.

"Have they done anything to prevent workers from getting work? If they have, they won't get an injunction," said the Justice.

Mr. Szold referred to a written contract between the company and the employes which pledged the latter not to join any union during their employment. He held that the manufacturers were determined to break up the union.

"It is not a question of hours and wages but of 60,000 people who cannot get jobs," he said.

The officers of the Amalgamated named in the application for an injunction were Sidney Hillman, President; William Drubin, assistant manager of the New York General Board, and Jacob Potofsky, Assistant General Secretary. The strike began in December, and the manufacturers charge the pickets and sympathizers with all kinds of criminal acts since that time. Further briefs will be submitted by both sides.

Transport in Collision

In a dense fog off Little Egg Inlet, N. J., recently, the Shipping Board steamship "Invincible," bound for Norfolk, collided with the army transport "Madawaska," incoming from Manila, damaging the transport severely and necessitating radio calls for immediate assistance. The "Madawaska," carrying passengers, was struck amidships. First messages said she was taking water rapidly.

However, a later radio from her commanding officer said he had all boats safely out and would await daylight, when he would transfer his passengers to the "Invincible," which apparently was not seriously damaged. The "Invincible" reported she was standing by.

First messages indicated that the "Invincible" had drawn alongside the "Madawaska" and that the latter's passengers were being transferred, but subsequent information showed that the transport was in no immediate danger and that the transfer would not be effected until daylight.

The "Madawaska" finally was compelled to drop anchor when the water reached her fireroom.

A Convincing Argument

Editor, SEAMEN'S JOURNAL:

In your issue of March 2 I noticed an article in the Atlantic and Gulf department entitled "Seamen's Wages Threatened."

It says, in part, that "at an important meeting" of the American Steamship Owners' Association, held in New York on February 8, it was unanimously decided to reduce seamen's wages, eliminate overtime, and discontinue all agreements and collective negotiations with the Seamen's Unions of the Atlantic and Gulf after May 1, 1921."

As a member of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, I wish, through the medium of your publication, (which I have no doubt, the ship-owners read at certain times, when seeking information as to the actions of the various seamen's unions) to call the attention of the American Steamship Owners' Association to a few of the facts in the case, and the effects a 20% reduction in wages would have.

Seamen Are Underpaid

First, the present rate of pay is not excessive, when we consider the fact that the purchasing power of a dollar is now less than 50 cents, as compared with a few years ago, when the wages were half what they are now.

While subsistence is now computed at the rate of $3.00 a day, the board and lodging that we get on board ship is not actually worth, by any stretch of the imagination, over $40.00 a month; so that our actual rate of pay, $85.00, plus $40.00 for board and room, is not more than $125.00 a month. And few men would be willing to pay $40.00 a month for a room and board on shore if they had to "bunk" in a room with 8 or 9 other men.

The most common form of labor on shore at present is paid at the rate of $4.50 to $5.00 a day, or $135 to $150 per month.

Wages Small Factor

Second, according to the best statistics obtainable, the wages paid the crew, officers included, represents only about 7% of the total operating expenses of a ship.

Therefore, a reduction of 20% in wages would mean only 20% of 7%, or 140% of the operating expenses. And I notice there is to be an increase in freight rates, averaging 1%, from this port. So the actual saving to the ship-owners would be only .40 of 1%. Can the ship-owners afford to tie the ships up, at a loss of millions of dollars a day, to effect so small a saving?

Harm Might Result

Third, if the ship-owners should succeed in reducing wages 20%, there are very good reasons to believe that a great number of our foreign-born seamen will return to the countries of their birth, where the wages in comparison will be higher. Such action on part of the shipowners would be sure to put a stop to the trend of American youths towards the sea, and those native Americans at present sailing will refuse to go to sea any longer for such a low rate of wages.

This will mean that the ship-owners will either have to go out of business, or transfer their ships to foreign registry, which would be a costly and laborious process. The saving, in face of high wages on the other side, would be slight; almost negligible, in fact, when foreign exchange returns to normal, as it surely will, and it would end the dream of an American merchant marine, manned by American seamen.

It would also result in the loss of the billions of dollars spent by the United States during the war to secure an adequate merchant marine, and I don't believe the United States Government and the American people will stand for it.

So, it would be well for the American Steamship Owners' Association to think seriously before taking any such drastic and unpatriotic action.

H. G. TAYLOR, JR.

"JOHN D." SPLITS WITH U. S.

The greater part of John D. Rockefeller's income for 1920 will probably go to the Government through the operation of the Income and Sur Taxes, according to the Hackensack, New Jersey, Record. The Record roughly estimates Rockefeller's gross income for 1920 at $43,000,000.

"No one outside the Treasury Department, however, need take any great satisfaction in the situation," the Record continues.

"With all due regard for the use Mr. Rockefeller makes of his wealth, which is on the whole beneficial, it must be admitted that it is far better for 20,000 families to get $2000 apiece, or for 10,000 to get $4000 apiece, than for one family to get it all. It would be better socially.

"Also, provided the practice of stock investment were spread around along with the money, it would be far better economically. The 10,000 or 20,000 families, by pooling their savings, could provide capital for big undertakings just as Mr. Rockefeller does, only democratically, without any dangerous centralization of power."

The surest way for America to develop $2,000 incomes and to develop capitalists among its citizens is through saving and safe investment. That way is open to all. The only steps needed are to set aside a certain sum from each pay check and put it into safe, profitable, renumerative Government Savings Securities. These are on sale day in and day out at all post offices and most banks.

EXPLOITING OUR BABES

Owen R. Lovejoy, general secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, publishes some startling facts in the current number of The American Child, in answering to the question of the El Centro Progress, "Is Child Welfare Report a Libel on Imperial Valley?" Lovejoy says: "The National Child Labor Committee is not responsible for the bad conditions existing in the Valley and other rural sections of California in regard to child labor and school attendance. We are responsible only for the description of these conditions in our recently published report entitled, 'California the Golden.' Instead of our being unfair to California, California is unfair to herself in permitting the conditions that we have described. The fact that other states have failed to protect children against rural child labor does not relieve California of her responsibility for her own children.

"Evidently the editor of The Progress did not read the report carefully," continues Mr. Lovejoy, "else his comment would not have been made up so largely of misquotations. We did not say that 'children three years old are made to pick cotton' or that 'children five years old are compelled to pick all day.' The statements as they appear in the original report are as follows: 'All kinds of children pick—even those as young as three years,' and 'Five-year-old children pick steadily all day.' These absolutely correct statements do not imply a majority of workers of these ages. They simply call attention to the fact that in work done by family groups children as young as three can be and are utilized. Their presence in the hot fields for long hours does constitute a bad phase of the child labor situation.

"The Progress takes exception to the statements that 'school attendance and child labor laws are violated more in Imperial Valley than in any other part of the State' and that 'between 2500 and 3000 children are out of school picking cotton.' These statements in the article are based upon statements by officials of the state government of California and can be verified from the records in the Capitol at Sacramento. If it be true, as the Progress implies, that the school and labor laws are as much violated elsewhere in California the conditions generally must be pretty bad, and I say it is the duty of The Progress to help make these conditions known.

"As for the number of children out of school The Progress says: 'Deduct the children of Mexican contract laborers—thicker than bees in a hive—and the number would not be any greater than in other sections of the State.' This, as our report shows, is very doubtful. But why deduct the Mexican children? Isn't a child in this enlightened country entitled to an education and a happy childhood, free from toil, even though his parents may be laborers and Mexicans at that? The fact that conditions may be worse in the country from which they come is not a valid excuse for denying a foreign-born child his right to an education so that employers or parents may profit from his labor. The Progress gives the impression that in its opinion Mexicans and Hindoos and negroes don't count, anyway. But every individual within our borders is a part of the American population. Unless we give him our best, he will give us his worst.

"California had a child labor law which should be enforced but is very poorly enforced in the Imperial Valley and elsewhere in the State—for reasons given in detail in our report. Shortage of schools is not the whole of the explanation. Children are not attending even where there are schools—many of them are working. We understand that a bill is pending in the Legislature appropriating money for the enforcement of the Child Labor Law in rural districts. We learn also that more attendance officers for rural California may be provided for in another bill before the Legislature. Hopeful also are the plans of the State Department of Education for the employment of traveling teachers to follow the migratory families in their seasonal occupations and take charge of their children. In general, the solution of the rural child labor problem in California and through the United States is schools where the children are and children in the schools where the schools are.

"There is more child labor in rural than in urban America," continues Mr. Lovejoy, "and some of it is just as bad as in the cities. The idyllic conception of country life stands in the way of popular recognition even of its existence. The conspicuous feature of rural child labor is its interference with school attendance. The average school term in the United States is 140 days, while the city term is 180 days. Of every hundred children enrolled in city schools, the daily attendance is 80, while of every hundred enrolled in rural schools only 68 are in daily attendance. So that for every hundred days of schooling received by the average city child, the average country child gets only 65. Studies made by the National Child Labor Committee show that child labor on farms and ranches causes as much absence from school as illness, bad weather, bad roads, distance of home from school, and indifference of parents or children all combined—and sometimes even exceeds the absences caused by all these other factors. Is this situation democratic—this inequality of educational opportunity as between the children of the city and the children of the country, and as between the children of the well-to-do and the children of the poor? Does it help prepare children for citizenship and democracy?"

BEACHCOMBERS IN MANILA

The number of destitute seamen at Manila have been unusually numerous during the past year; over eleven hundred American seamen being discharged from their vessels at that port.

Of this number 488 were discharged by mutual agreement, 158 on account of sickness, 295 owing to termination of contract, and 159 were discharged for cause. During the year subsistence and lodging were provided for 375 destitute American seamen; this number being unusually large, due to the fact that American Consulates at various Asiatic ports shipped the destitute seamen in their respective jurisdictions to Manila. Another reason for increase in the number of seamen furnished help is the marked increase in the number of American vessels calling at the port.

ECONOMIC PROGRAM OF CHILI

In a recent address before the Chilean Chamber of Deputies the Minister of the Interior discussed the aims and policies of the new administration, referring especially to the economic world crisis and its present obvious effects in Chile. These conditions have brought about a situation in business and in industry which calls for the co-operation of labor, capital, and the Government in order that prosperity may be restored.

The definite measures recommended to the Congress by the administration, aiming toward economic betterment, were the following:

1. The creation of a new department of the Government to be devoted to the encouragement of agriculture, the promotion of commerce, the improvement of the condition of labor, and the social welfare of the people.

2. The passage of acts re-forming the tariff, increasing the revenue tax on tobacco and its products, and defining taxes on property, inheritances, and income.

The two measures above enumerated form the basis on which the incoming administration will found its economic program. That pertaining to a new Ministry of Agriculture, Commerce, Labor, and Social Welfare is now being discussed by Congress. This department of the Government will have in its care the fulfillment of the social reforms expected by the people; its objectives will include the scientific encouragement of agriculture, the conciliation of capital and labor, the effort toward greater productiveness in industry, the reduction of alcoholism, the fight against social diseases, the protection of national industry against foreign competition, minimum wage and insurance for the workmen, and the improvement of the legal status of women.

In spite of the vigor of its people, the population of the country has not grown rapidly, because of the high infant mortality and small immigration. (Official figures place the total population at 1,819,223 in 1865 and 4,127,138 in 1919.)

THE NOME GOLD FIELDS

The famous Nome placer gold fields discovered in 1898 have now produced gold worth nearly eighty million dollars. Much of the gold mined in this region is won by the use of dredges. Twenty-two of these machines were in operation in 1919 and made a total gold output of $450,000, and open-cut and deep mining in that year brought the value of the total gold output of Nome and other districts of the Seward Peninsula up to $1,360,000. In addition to the gold, about 56 tons of placer tin and 20 ounces of platinum were produced on Seward Peninsula in 1919.

Farmers of the wheat growing sections were hard hit by the collapse in prices of grain, and a number of young people who had provided for educational work defaulted in payment as a result of the crash. Notwithstanding these conditions which seriously affected over one hundred of his students at the school for Lecturers and Organizers, Mr. Mills made good on all his contracts. The Mills Training School has completed its Winter Session and is making ready for the Summer Session.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

New Officials Inherit Trouble

Washington, March 11.—Secretary of Labor Davis has been called upon by President Harding to take up immediately the question of whether the Government shall intervene between the meat packing combine and the 200,000 employes in the industry who have received notice of a 12½ per cent. reduction in wages and the abolition of the basic eight-hour day.

Davis has before him the full history of the relations between the packers, the packing plant workers and the Department of Labor, which was the third party to their wage agreement made during the war. Secretary Morrison of the American Federation of Labor called upon Davis yesterday and explained the need for prompt action if a serious strike is to be avoided. Morrison also left at the White House a copy of the telegram sent by the stockyards workers to the President, asking his mediation. Thus far, no mediation by the Government has been promised.

The point at issue is the right of the packers to force the workers to take a reduction in wages or to go on strike, with the prospect of creating a shortage of fresh meat throughout the country, when by the terms of their agreement made through the Department of Labor they are bound to maintain the existing scale until one year after the declaration of peace. Peace has not been declared; the packers claim that they never intended to wait three years after the armistice, and that they are not obligated to do so.

Packers Keep Strong Lobby

There is a powerful lobby representing the packers in Washington. That lobby can be trusted to get the ear of the Secretary of Labor and to tell him a persuasive story of the sufferings of the poor Armours and Swifts and Morrises at the hands of the greedy stockyards workers. Mr. Davis, who is a bank president, may be expected to listen most respectfully to the packers' side of the argument.

In view of this situation the American Federation of Labor officials here have called a meeting of all the A. F. of L. internationals represented in the stockyards, to be held March 14 in Chicago to discuss plans for resisting the packers' program.

The most hopeful phase of the unions' appeal to the President rests upon the paragraph in his inaugural speech in which he declared that industrial differences [illegible] before they developed to the stage of a [illegible]. He now has an ideal opportunity to make good on this suggestion.

Railroad Workers Interested

[illegible] are likewise interested in the proof which Mr. Harding may offer that he really intends to [illegible]. With the entire railroad world now involved in a fight over wage reductions, and the workers firmly [illegible] the increased cost of living implied in the wage cuts, it is [illegible] the White House will soon see the entire railroad problem deposited [illegible]. He can take [illegible] to deal with the matter, or recommending to Congress the [illegible] rates, or the purchase of the railroads by the Government in order that they may continue to keep open the channels of trade and travel. By refusal to interfere, he will doom the country to a railroad strike, because the railroad workers will not accept a drastic reduction in pay. By recommending higher freight rates he will merely cause a further increase in the cost of living and will check the shipment of many commodities that now are taxed too much for transportation. By coming out for public ownership he will have met the demands of the workers, but he will have backed completely down from his position of hostility, which he has held throughout his public career.

It will be a difficult choice, but Mr. Harding is President, and he cannot escape it. He must meet an actual economic situation with something besides political platitudes.

Responsibilities Are Heary

Herbert Hoover is said to be Mr. Harding's main reliance in facing the growing storm in the railroad industry. Friends of Hoover claim that he is to be Director General of Railroads, and that the advance guard of railroad executives is already here, discussing the probable welcome that will be given an offer from them to sell the roads to Uncle Sam. It is pointed out that the roads claim that they are making only $10,000,000 a year, at the present rate of earnings, on a capital of $19,000,000,000. As this rate of earnings is ruinously low, the big investors in railroad securities are inclined to think that they had better unload on the public.

As Dr. John A. Ryan has indicated in a speech, that American employers must finally recognize the fact that American workers will not be made to take a real interest in their work unless they have some sense of ownership and self-direction in their industries or in the tools with which they produce the wealth of the nation. Efficiency in many of the industries is to-day lower than for many years past. The refusal of the workers is due very largely to the feeling that efficiency merely leads to greater profits and to greater advantages for the employer in dealing with the worker.

Glenn Plumb and the executives of the sixteen railroad labor organizations have said, from the outset of the controversy over the return of the railroads to private control, that there would never be efficient railroading until the men secured benefits such as would be given by Government ownership and democratic operation. Time has proven them right. The railroad companies are now at the threshold of general bankruptcy, and Senator Cummins promises an immediate inquiry into the reasons for their collapse. President Harding will have to ask Congress to furnish the remedy.

In the tug of war between the violent prejudices of the Republican leaders against public ownership and democratic operation, on the one hand, and the break down of transportation finance on the other, it is quite possible that Mr. Harding may forget his suggestion of peaceful settlement of industrial disputes, and let the quarrel over the wage reductions drift into a nationwide strike.

Labor to Fight Reaction

Secretary Morrison of the A. F. of L. is beginning a series of public speeches in industrial centers, in answer to the "open shop" propaganda which is being circulated at heavy cost by the organized employers. He addressed a big crowd in Baltimore last Sunday night, and is going into North and South Carolina, Ohio and Pennsylvania. He is showing the directing hand of Judge Gary and the United States Steel Corporation in the anti-union drive, and is pointing out that the next step will be an attempt to empower Congress and the President to draft labor whenever a strike is threatened.

This activity on Morrison's part is stimulated in part by the expected decision of the United States Supreme Court that the property of all labor organizations is subject to seizure in payment of damages claimed by employers when the unions attempt to organize their employes. Such a decision, in the Coronado Coal Company case, is anticipated within a few weeks.

Moreover, the Supreme Court has decided, in the case of the Milwaukee Leader, that the right of any paper or magazine to the use of the mails can be revoked permanently by the Postmaster General when that official is convinced that the paper has violated any of the laws against publication of forbidden matter—lottery, obscenity, anarchism, sedition or fraud. In case of a big strike, every pro-strike publication might be shut out of the mails completely at a nod from the Postmaster General, on the pretense that it had printed something "anarchistic." This decision puts the whole freedom of the press in the hands of an official who is chosen for his political bias. Fear of losing the mailing privilege, as Justice Brandeis pointed out in his dissenting opinion, will itself restrict the liberty of expression of opinion by publishers.

Commercial Interests Aggressive

Philadelphia business men, through their Chamber of Commerce, have published in the Public Ledger a half-page advertisement charging that the American Federation of Labor seeks to "become a special privileged class—setting up a labor dictatorship."

They print, in big black headlines, the issue: "Laws, Courts and Constitution, or American Federation of Labor?" Below this they quote the proposals made by the A. F. of L. emergency conference here on February 24 toward establishing some degree of industrial freedom—the right to work and to cease work collectively, and to collectively bestow or withhold patronage, and exemption from collection of damages from union funds, as well as the removal by Congress of the usurped power of the courts to declare unconstitutional laws enacted by Congress. They quote also the demands for repeal of anti-strike and anti-combination laws, and the denunciation of the misuse of injunctions, with the pledge to ignore these illegal injunctions in labor disputes.

These Philadelphia employers and financiers pronounce the power of the courts to nullify acts of Congress to be "one of the Nation's bulwarks," while the violation of injunctions "would make the Constitution a 'scrap of paper'," and the repeal of industrial court and anti strike laws "would give immunity from the law."

to me adequate. The ship probably expected to return to the United States at the time and the mate very likely gave some assurances that she would. The seamen probably accepted these as enough, and assumed from them that the condition attached was too unlikely of fulfillment to be of consequence. After the event they very naturally translate the assurances into a positive engagement by the ship to discharge them in the United States. The original probabilities of a return here would account for their willingness to ship upon the condition imposed.

It may be that in this way they have suffered an injustice; it was certainly a grievous loss to them to be discharged in England where no work was to be had. Yet it would be a serious precedent, disregarding the fact that they are British subjects suing a British owenr and charging a British official with fraud, upon such testimony to set aside articles signed in conformity with the statutes drawn for the protection of the seamen. Of course, I recognize the possibility that such officials may prove faithless to their trust, and when they do, the breach is doubly serious, just because the seaman is so helpless. Yet if the articles are to be lightly ignored, the very safety which they are meant to insure disappears. The whole plan of the statute presupposes that the articles shall be a final memorial of the contracts, and their official execution is designed to prevent their abuse. It is a necessary correlative of this that as against both sides they must be enforced in the absence of convincing proof.

The libel is dismissed without costs.

A WORLD CONSCIENCE AT LAST

WALTER THOMAS MILLS,
President The School of Social Service.

Mr. Wilson's former Secretary of State, Mr. Colby, now his partner in the practice of law, struck the high water mark in the ebbing and flowing of the tides in international affairs which are leading on to an international conscience, in a certain remark of his in his refusal to trade with Russia.

Mr. Colby said that such trade ought not to be undertaken for the reason that the Russians had nothing with which to pay for American goods except gold and that the gold did not belong to the parties who were offering it to American maufacturers. He strongly intimated that to accept it would be a serious blot on the well known moral character of American profiteers, that it would be accepting unclean gold in exchange for American goods, produced under faultless moral conditions prevailing in this country. In this he may have been in error as to his facts, but the moral principle is sound—that trading in stolen goods is not really a nice thing for nice people to do.

In this connection, there is a further announcement that also strongly suggests the coming of an international conscience as related to international trade. Mr. Colby had before him the proposal of the conscienceless Bolsheviki. To trade Russian gold for American goods, but the Bolsheviki had stipulated that the goods must bear the union label. They intimated that the products of the American "scab" shops would not be acceptable.

The czar had robbed the Russian people of the gold. The Russians had overthrown the robber and had rescued the stolen goods which they proposed to exchange for stuff which they could use to a better advantage than they could use gold. But Colby said "no."

The American manufacturers were then exchanging American goods made with non-union labor on credit with Great Britain and France. The Yankees were delivering their goods immediately, but were and still are waiting for payment until France could get its gold bricks from the German working people who were required to produce them without straw and to deliver them without reward and no question of conscience had arisen in Europe as to the moral cleanliness of the American "scab" made goods or as to the German gold yet to be obtained by force.

The Americans never hesitated to take the Russian gold as long as it was in the czar's hands. To be sure, he had taken it by force, but it was his gold anyway. It became unclean only when the people had rescued the stolen property and offered it in exchange for goods to be produced under conditions fair to union labor.

Mr. Colby was in a very embarrassing position. He could not accept the Russian gold in exchange for union-made goods without seriously reflecting on the morality of the "scab" shops in this country. The Bolsheviki were in a like embarrassing position. They could not accept the "scab" made goods of this country without lowering their standard of justice for the workers of all countries.

Possibly neither Colby nor the Bolsheviki were sincere in their utterances, but that does not matter. The word has been spoken. There is to be a conscience in international trade. Labor in all countries is to be protected by raising the standards of living in all other countries.

The workers of Germany cannot be compelled to produce a hundred billions of dollars worth of goods in excess of their bare subsistence—not even for war indemnities, without filling the world's markets with the products of unpaid labor. That would mean, first, a glut and then disaster to all countries. The workers of France, of Great Britain and of America cannot consent to accept on any terms any goods produced in Germany or anywhere else under conditions which are unjust to labor, not even if the indemnities remain unpaid—not even if American foreign loans must be cancelled.

Colby and Lenin are quite right in their agreement as to principle. But if so, the conclusion must be that wealth, whether in the shape of Russian gold or German coal or the products of American "scab" labor, must arrange to come into the world's markets unstained by oppression or it has no business there. The products of slave labor—and all labor is slave labor when performed under compulsion—the products of slave labor like the spoils of piracy must be denied a decent standing in the decent markets of the world.

The yarn about Bolshevism trying to break up the home got back to Russia, where it still causes loud laughter. For the first time for centuries Russia has real homes—homes guarded from the bitter want that made prostitution the hideous heritage of the beautiful poor.—Maori Worker.

Labor News

Organized bricklayers and plasterers of Mobile, Ala., have voluntarily reduced their wages from $10 to $8 per day, giving as the reason the reduction in livinug costs.

The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad has announced a conference of additional classes of employes to discuss a downward revision of wages, effective April 15. Approximately 22,000 employes will be affected by this revision.

The New York Central Railrod, whose wage revision proposals have been rejected by unskilled labor, have forwarded a petition to the Railroad Labor Board in Chicago asking that tribunal to make the proposed reductions effective tentatively on April 1.

A 48-hour week for women in the State of Nevada is provided in a bill submitted to the Legislature by Senator Kenney of Storey. Women engaged in harvesting, nurses, women employed in canning, curing or drying perishable fruits and vegetables are exempt.

Working forces for all lines of the Union Pacific system have been reduced by about 17,000 since the middle of last December, according to announcement of E. E. Calvin, vice-president in charge of operations. The total number of employes before the process of reduction began was about 50,000, Calvin said.

Wage reduction proposals affecting thousands of men have been officially anounced by practically every Western railway headquarters in Chicago, among them being the Santa Fe; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul. Chicago and Great Western; Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, and the Chicago and Northwestern. The roads will first hold meetings with their employes in an effort to reach an agreement regarding a wage reduction. If the roads and workers were unable to reach agreements the disputes are to be allowed to go before the Railroad Labor Board.

Reductions in wages of common labor, put into effect by the Erie Railroad on January 31, have been rescinded and the former wage schedule restored, according to the company's announcement. The company statement said that a "slightly improved condition of business" permitted payment of the old scale. The Railroad Labor Board recently condemned action of the road for not first submitting the proposed reductions to it for approval and ordered restoration of the former scale.

In a recent address Samuel Gompers voiced organized labor's opposition to wage reductions and the open shop movement. He warned "enemies of rational labor unionism" against driving too hard the bargain of wage revision; said that labor regarded aspiration as a guarantee under the constitution and interpreted that in terms of "We want [illegible] and asserted that [illegible] added that the men of [illegible] fought to protect the country [illegible] themselves against a political autocracy, would not submit to an industrial autocracy. He declared that the time was ripe to try men's souls and "deal with the matter of wages and profiteering still going on, the people of [illegible] have [illegible] to answer for."

Domestic and Naval

While maneuvering off Rhode Island the submarine "N-2," a coastal type boat, struck the Watch Hill reef and ran up on the rocks high and dry. According to latest reports no lives were lost, and the boat will be salved.

The Iowa House of Representatives has defeated the Kime anti-strike bill. In defending the bill, the author made the usual claim by this brand of "statesmen," that officials of the Iowa State Federation of Labor "do not represent the labor movement."

A resumption of immigration from Ireland to America has become evident and the Irish republican army is taking steps to prevent it. An immigration agent in Listowl, County Kerry, has been threatened with death if he books any males between the ages of 16 and 45 for passage to America.

The decline in manufacturing activity in New York State appears to have passed its climax, according to the preliminary tabulation of manufacturers' February reports to the State Industrial Commission. It is shown that there is a 2 per cent. gain in employment over January. This is the first increase reported for manufacturing as a whole since March, 1920. The revival appears chiefly in those industries hit hardest by the depression in the past months, while most of the industries less affected by the decline continue to show reductions in employment.

In connection with the reported aggrandizement of operations of the United States Navy in Pacific waters, some significance is believed to be attached to the expansion of both army and navy transport service, particularly between San Francisco and Honolulu. The navy transport "Hancock," 3400 tons, en route to San Francisco from Philadelphia, will make a few trips between San Francisco and Hawaii, and then probably supplement the "Newport News" and "Pensacola" in the Honolulu-Guam-Manila run out of San Francisco. The "Hancock" is one of the largest navy transports and carries more passengers than the two now operating. Definite decision has been made by the army transport service to keep the "Buford" in the San Francisco-Honolulu "shuttle" run, a new service to which the "Buford" was tentatively assigned a few weeks ago.

The real major policies of American naval plans have not been determined by the new administration. No decision has been reached as to whether the Atlantic and Pacific battleship fleets shall be united into one main fleet or continued as separate units, as at present. Nor have any steps been taken toward framing a new policy of military and naval defense on the basis of changed conditions in the Pacific. Reports that Major General Leonard Wood was being sent to the Philippines with an idea, among other things, of reporting on the advisability of making a so-called Gibraltar out of the Island of Oahu in the Hawaiian group have been denied. The declared purpose of sending General Wood to the Philippines was to obtain from him a report on conditions there, especially with a view to determining what the attitude of the present administration should be toward the movement for Philippine independence.

Domestic and Naval

According to the latest ruling of the United States Navy Recruiting Department, a revision has been made in the enlistments of practically all branches. All enlistments must be for not less than four years, while the minimum age of enlistment is 18 years.

The Department of Commerce has been advised that the American steamer "Vincennes Bridge" collided with and sunk the British steamer "Fredville" off the coast of Holland on March 14. All of the crew of the Fredville were rescued and the "Vincennes Bridge" proceeded to Dover, England.

The San Francisco office of the Immigration Department is receiving groups of undesirables, mostly Chinese, Japanese and Mexicans, from all the Western States, to be deported March 30. About 80 are expected to be sent back to their native lands who are now public charges in this country.

Built for the government engineering service, the snagboat "Bear" was launched recently at the Schultze & Schultze shipyards. The vessel will take the place of the steamer "Seizer," which for years has been employed in keeping clear the channel of the Sacramento river. The "Bear" is a steamer of about 500 tons, with 157-foot keel and 23-foot beam.

Japan has determined to stand firmly on her mandate over the island of Yap, according to declarations of Viscount Uchida, foreign minister. Viscount Uchida stated further that the Japanese government was adopting every possible means to prevent the passage of laws similar to those adopted in the State of California.

Battle in the interest of the California dried fruit packing industry has shifted from San Francisco to the Shipping Board in Washington, D. C. After having been deadlocked on the question of granting preferential rates to packed dried fruit for several weeks, the North Atlantic, Pacific Coast and Eastbound Conference, comprised of eight intercoastal shippers, referred the matter to Washington at the request of the Shipping Board. Notices were forwarded by J. H. Todd, conference chairman, to the officers of the dried fruit associations affected, advising them to forward briefs of their cases to Washington. A full transcript of the proceedings of the conference in San Francisco also will be forwarded.

Secretary of the Navy Denby has withdrawn the order of Secretary Daniels forbidding representatives of the Navy League from entering naval stations or ships. The league has no governmental connections. In 1917 its president, Colonel Thompson, [illegible] the Navy Department [illegible] to "labor influences" in connection with an explosion at the Mare Island navy yard. Secretary Daniels demanded [illegible] at this result. When this request was not complied with the [illegible] the league's activities, as far as navy property was concerned. Women who were knitting articles for sailors under its auspices were compelled to distribute their gifts through other agencies. Secretary Daniels' prompt action put an end to the [illegible] baiters in this department of government.

News from Abroad

Indians living in the high tablelands of Bolivia have risen against the Bolivian government and a native chief has proclaimed himself president of the Indian tribes.

The coal crisis, which threatened to tie up Victoria's industries, has been averted as the result of the efforts of Mr. Hughes, Australian Prime Minister.

Dispatches from Amsterdam state that exports from the Rhineland to Holland have stopped altogether. Neither buyers nor sellers are willing to risk imposition of the allied tax levies.

On advice of the British Government France has refused passports to eight members of the Chamber of Deputies who intended to leave for Upper Silesia to watch the progrss of the plebiscite.

News that a treaty of peace between Poland and Soviet Russia had been signed in Riga has been received at Warsaw. It was immediately transmitted to President Pilsudski and the cabinet ministers, who were attending a gala performance in the opera house at the time.

The students of Naples University recently went out on strike in protest against the ever rising price of scientific text books. Marching round the city to the bookshops they presented a demand that each publisher should grant an all-round 50 per cent. reduction. Those who refused had their stores raided and their stock tórn to pieces or pitched into the streets from balconics.

British factories are humming turning out products for Russia. Conclusion of a trade agreement with the Soviets was marked by immediate activity in several indutries. Although warning had been given that greatly increased trade will not be possible immediately, manufacturers hastened to prepare for the future. Mineral and oil from the vast Russian resources were expected to be available to British subjects. Completion of the treaty was regarded as a British victory.

Sir Harry Brittain, member of the British Parliament, recently returned to London from a tour in Germany, Austria and Czechoslovakia. "The Austrian," he said, "is waiting to be spoonfed at every angle. The German is pulling and in many cases has pulled himself together and the great machine is getting into full swing right across the country. In villages and small towns in Eastern Prussia and Bavaria, as well as in Berlin and everywhere one could not put down the feeling that this once great and powerful nation would be great and powerful again."

The Chita government has filed a protest with the Japanese government against the notification of the latter sent to the Validvostok authorities on Decemmer 16, that the Japanese had decided to place the Saghalien fisheries under Japanese military control. The government of the Russian Far Eastern Republic considers that the notification of the Japanese government relative to placing the Saghalien fisheries under the control of Japan a step to deprive Russia of her rights. The Japanese proposal is tantamount to an encroachment on Russia's suzerainty and is, therefore, inconsistent with the oft-repeated solemn declaration of the Japanese government to respect the rights and interests of the Russian government and the Russian people.

With the Wits

Said Beezlebub: "Welcome below! You have aided me more than you know,
The Blue Laws are swell,
They have surely raised hell—
My business is booming. What ho!"
—Life.

"Well, Bill," asked a neighbor. "Hear the boss has had a fever. How's his temperature today?"

The hired man scratched his head and decided not to commit himself.

"'Tain't fer me to say," he replied. "He died last night."—American Legion Weekly.

The bashful petty officer was on leave and was having a hard time making conversation.

"I suppose you've been in the Navy so long you're accustomed thoroughly to sea-legs," she suggested.

"I wasn't lookin' at 'em at all," he blurted, blushing.—American Legion Weekly.

A Pleasant Client.—He was a horrible looking man, even for a murderer, and he smirked evilly at the magistrate as he pointed at the counsel who was to defend him, and asked:

"Is that the bloke who is to defend me?"

"Yes," replied the magistrate, "he is your lawyer."

"If he should die?" asked the murderer, "could I get another?"

"Yes," doubtfully replied the judge.

"Can I see him alone for a few minutes?" asked the murderer.—Answers, London.

"Why do you turn out for every road hog that comes along?" said the missus, rather crossly. "The right of way is ours, isn't it?"

"Oh, undoubtedly!" answered he, calmly. "As for our turning out, the reason is plainly suggested in this epitaph which appeared in a newspaper recently:

"Here lies the body of William Jay,
Who died maintaining his right of way;
He was right, dead right, as he sped along,
But he's just as dead as if he'd been wrong."

—Boston Transcript.

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

THE OPEN SHOP

A. Furuseth Debates Labor's Early Struggles and Industrial Evolution

The following able address was delivered by A. Furuseth at New York, Sunday, March 13, 1920, in a debate on the Open Shop.

ORIGIN OF THE TERM

Strictly there is, there can be, no such critter in our industrial jungle. The shop belongs to the employer and he can and does determine who shall be permitted to work in it. At the best the shop can only be open to such as the employer is willing to admit. If he cannot in his own vicinity find men willing to work with those whom he prefers, then he has the entire United States in which to search for such men and under some conditions the whole world. The open shop is a misnomer. The contending forces do not agree upon any definition. The term was, I think, invented by the Anthracite Coal Commission some time about 1902, and was then adopted by former President Roosevelt, who was a master at seizing upon and using words, which meant different things to different people; but which carried within them both an accusation and a decision. To debate such a term standing by itself is futile. I shall not try any such thing. I shall try to deal with it as part of a policy, which may or may not be in furtherance of evolution based upon principles—fundamentally Christian and American. From the employer's point of view the open shop is a defensive measure in his struggle to maintain a system of industry and a view of labor, that has come down to us from pre-Christian times. From the workman's point of view it involves the right of the worker to determine with whom he will or will not associate in his work. It is part of that question or that struggle, which we know in a general way as the Labor Question or the Labor Struggle.

The Labor Question

What is this thing called the Labor Question, what does it mean? In what relation does it stand to Social Evolution based upon the teachings of Christianity? The status of the laborers in pre-Christian times was that of a slave. The concept was part of the religion, the view of life, the origin of human life, and the duties arising therefrom. Substantially there was in the Roman period but two kinds of men. The Master—the heaven-born—who was sent from the Gods to govern, to teach and to pray. That is, as then understood to commune with the Gods through certain ceremonies, to ascertain their will and to announce it to those, who were born of the earth—earth-born—and who had no souls to be saved or damned. To the master class—the heaven-born—the worker was about the same as the domestic animals are to us, and so, at about the time of the advent of the Nazarene, there was roughly about seven per cent. of free men—men from the Gods—and about ninety-three per cent. of slaves or at best freedmen. Rome had conquered all possible enemies. It had made slaves of the conquered people and had used them to destroy the old Roman system of labor, which had made Rome the mistress of the then known world. It had suppressed three serious rebellions. It had the great mass of humanity—as we should say—at its absolute mercy and mercy there was none. Into this society—autocratic in religion, autocratic in the State, and autocratic in industry—a society in which equality and freedom of all who had the shape of men was unthinkable, came the Nazarene with his teachings, which are laid down in the Lord's Prayer. In place of the many Gods there is but one. In place of a few being the sons of Gods all those belonging to the genus homo are the sons of God. He is the Father of all. He recognizes no distinction between his children.

Brotherhood of Man

They are brothers by virtue of their common fatherhood. God, their Father, has given to them the earth with all there is in it. And He has given to them a free will to act as they shall think best, accepting the consequences of their own action or non-action. The Nazarene taught us to pray, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," and again, "Thy kingdom come."

The human family was taught to look upon itself as one brotherhood, being equal to each other, as having equal right to what God had given, as being equally free, as being equally responsible to their God and to each other for their conduct and their actions. Such a concept was in fundamental opposition to things that were. It was an attack upon the then existing society in all its aspects. It is no wonder that He said, "I come not to bring peace but a sword." What else could He bring into society as it then existed? Nor is there any wonder that He said, "I have come that ye shall have life and have it more abundantly." Surely there was to be more and more abundant life for the slave. He also said, "Peace on earth to men of good will." He gave to the world a concept of life and of conduct, over which and about which, the world has quarreled ever since. No wonder he was crucified. Necessarily, the chief attack was on the religious plane. But the Christian ideals did not restrict itself to this plane, it sought to reconstruct the whole of human society, and kept on growing until it was accepted as the State religion. Whereupon it became respectable and the patricians became again part of the priesthood. New wine was poured into the old bottles and, of course, was flavored accordingly. It was in fact relegated to the religious plane after being made the State religion, and it took some thirteen hundred years of struggle, carried on by organizations based upon religious discontent, to compel an unwilling world to give acceptance on the religious plane to this fundamentally revolutionary ideal. When finally accepted—about 1650—men began to think and to ask why not in the State? And there began a struggle to extend the Christian ideal in and upon the political field, and the struggle was carried on by political organizations based upon political discontent.

Party Political Struggles

As part of this struggle we find the American War of Independence, the French Revolution, the Peace at Vienna, the Holy Alliance, the insurrections of 1830, 1848 and 1860. We owe such political equality and liberty, as we now possess, to the struggle carried on during those times and by those men. The principle being admitted the Christian ideal moved on to the industrial field and now seeks to transform it into its own image. Religious organizations to conquer the religious field, political organizations to reconstruct the political field; it follows, that the industrial field must be reconstructed through organizations industrial in their nature. The labor question or the labor struggle is the Christian ideal seeking to enter upon the industrial field to transform it into its own image. The Roman society was like hammered steel. It was difficult to bend, more difficult to break, but bent or even broken, it remained steel. It would not accept the new ideal. The new ideal acted upon it like acid upon other steel. It dissolved it. It vanished, and there is said to be more real Romans in Roumania than in the whole of Italy. Rome rejected the message. Rome died. The tree carried no fruit appropriate to its nature. It dried up, was cut down and cast into the flames to give place to others.

If we were to look upon this evolution as a river having its source in Nazareth, broadening and deepening as it progresses, we will understand the power that the stream may have acquired by now. We shall also be able to understand, that it has been fed from other sources that it has moved through difficult country and has sometimes been swift, at other times sluggish, that it has carried on its bosom much that was living and much that was dead, and that it has absorbed many other streams in its wanderings. I shall try to indicate some of the most important ethical tributaries, that have helped it to grow and to become what it now is.

Liberty a Nordic Ideal

Perhaps the most important is the high conception of human worth and human liberty contributed to it by the so-called barbarians from the North. They had passed out of the period of ancestor worship, when they began seriously to impinge upon the Roman world. Many of their own religious concepts made it easier for them to accept the Christian ideal. Be that as it may, they did accept it, and brought to it their sincerity and courage. In conquering the Roman world they brought with them their own ideals and then accepted much that was Roman. The Roman law was constructed more especially to make it possible for rich men to live among poor ones—for masters to live among slaves. Their own—the barbarian law—was more calculated upon the idea of how to make it possible for good men to live among bad ones. The fundamental concept of the barbarian was a government by the bravest. It was aristocratic. It met and mingled with the theocratic ideal of the Roman church and out of that came a historical struggle known as the struggle between the spiritual and the temporal powers. It raged in Europe for centuries.

Rise of the Guilds

The combatants needed help from wherever it might come and the clergy organized the Guilds. That is, they carried the principles involved to the common folk using the old Roman collegia as their model. As this new power grew it was, of course, observed by the temporal powers, and when the Guilds had reached a certain development they were permitted to organize into free cities. It has often been said that this period of the Middle Ages, from the fall of Rome to the discovery of America, was the Dark Ages. Nothing could be more untrue. It was a period of intense activity. The landowners recognizing that men must live from the land sought to appropriate to themselves as much of it as possible. Hence, the fighting among themselves. Land was of no use unless there was labor to till it, hence, the effort to fasten the tiller to the soil. In the early stages this was done in a perfectly human way through mutual agreement. Protection to the tiller. Food to the fighter. The theocratic idea—the clergy—seeking to impose itself upon all in the interest of peace. Between the two main combatants the Guilds went on organizing and developing handicrafts and trade, laying the foundation for modern industrialism. It was at this period that swamps were drained, forests cleared away and the soil made to bear the grains and fruits needed to sustain the steadily growing population. Labor and women were given a higher status. Cities were built, churches grew into cathedrals and castles were erected. The Guilds laid the foundation for modern sciences and civilization. These things were possible, because men felt themselves free. They felt that the products of their labor came mostly to themselves and their families. They had not yet readopted the Roman law as their particular guide in life. They knew fairly well how to bridle the profiteer. Their industrial ideal was honest work, and they determined what was honest and also the price. They gradually grew to such power as to become dangerous to the real combatants. This became recognized and the two combined.

Decline of the Guilds

The Guilds' property was confiscated, their schools taken from them, their right to govern the free cities was taken away after the upland folk had tried to share in their freedom by resisting the imposition of serfdom. The end of the struggle between the temporal and the spiritual power, through their union, brought freedom in the Middle Ages to a close. The buoyantly pulsating life of the people ceased. Substantially, it must be said that for more than four centuries the European world was governed, and badly governed, by the combination of the nobility and the clergy. The reformation came, but was hardly any more than a promise. The stream was sluggish and muddy, but the common folk remembered the better days, and from among them came at times religious teachers and political champions, sometimes as religious orders, sometimes as individuals, who had ceased to fear for themselves, and sometimes as warriors, who could sense realities, and who thus obtained the needed following.

The Wars for Trade

A tremendous stimulus was given to the spread of knowledge by the invention of the printing press and to the imagination by finding the seaway to India and the discovery of the American continent. Wealth undreamed of was to be had for the taking in both these new worlds. The adventurers took it in one way or another. It set new standards, developed new hopes, created new ambitions. The wealth, of course, could not help being distributed at least to some extent. But the more important fact is that the trade routes were altered as well as the visible wealth increased. Nations in Europe fought over the trade and the routes and especially over the terminals of the routes.

The terminals were in fact determined at the same place and in the same treaty that gave to the world the final acknowledgment of men's equality before God, or on the religious field. The terminals having been agreed upon, it had to be defended and utilized to the fullest extent. The wealth of the trading class in Western Europe increased with leaps and bounds. The old centers went into decay and their wealth diminished. The increase was especially in Spain, France and England. With wealth came desire for power. It was not granted. Nay it was taken away. This was successful on the continent; but failed in Britain. England became the country where the aspirations toward political equality were permitted to grow. The House of Commons maintained the power over the purse and had, therefore, the basis upon which to bargain with the King. It, the House of Commons, laid down the maxim, "First redress of grievances then furnish supplies." Thus, was opened the way for peaceable political evolution. On the continent the peaceful way had been closed, and there it had to come through revolution and bloodshed. Through it all the third estate was rising into power and to burst through all obstructions in the French revolution. A new power—the mass power—was rising and trying to take charge of the world. A temporary success then a temporary suppression, then the peace and the Holy Alliance—built to close the way for the new power.

The Rise of Capitalism

It then became necessary to appeal to the common folk, as in the Guild times, and since the new power needed freedom of speech, in order to agitate, freedom of the press, for the same reason, freedom of association, to meet and consult, freedom of locomotion in order to escape and right to asylum, in order to live and continue the agitation, the common people were endowed with these weapons, which now, when the struggle is practically ended, may be safely taken away, so they seem to think. The late war seems to have finished the struggle between the old and the new governing class, and so the Moor having done his duty, the Moor may go. We see in fact an effort in every country to destroy those weapons, which we were permitted to look upon as rights so sacred, that nothing could happen to them. The third estate has the power. It feels it. It desires to protect it. Swollen with power it seeks to erect barriers against any attacks upon itself. It meets in Paris and organizes a second Holy Alliance. It seeks to dam the river at or near its mouth, because it considers itself the legitimate heir to the political power—of the castle—and the industrial power of the Guilds.

When the spiritual and temporal powers came together and shackled all else, especially the manual workers, the Feudal magnates insisted upon having right over life and death of the peasants, who were on their lands. Of course, land was of little use without workers on it, and since the masters had the power, why indeed, should they not use it to tie the worker to the soil in real fact? It was done. Why not? There was none to defend the workers, or to show them how they might defend themselves. Their old leaders had for the time being turned against them. Just then there opened, at least a slight chance of escape through migration to the new world. Of course, they would be serfs there too. They would be working under a binding contract to labor, but at least, there was some hope, some perhaps. At least they might worship God in their own way and then perhaps they might be able to buy themselves clear in some way at some time. Others went to the new world for other reasons, but mostly they went to find more freedom. The government—the system—however, followed them. But they—the workers—were not the only ones to complain. The condition became more and more unbearable, and so the settlers came together and issued the Declaration of Independence, that document, in which we find all that is really American and also much that is really anti-American—that is, things of which they complain and to remove which, they entered upon the Revolution, which was to end by the world accepting as American those things or ideas, which the Americans in their hour of travail had promised to themselves were to form the foundation of the new Nation. And behold, it is the fundamental Christian ideal, that men are born free and equal, that there is no distinction before God, nor ought there to be any in the State, nor properly speaking, ought there to be any in industry. It is quite true that they failed to recognize the negro as a man, and that they could not quite see how the Indian could be a real man; but some did. Their best and bravest saw it and felt it. It took considerable time to realize the antagonism between the fundamental American principles and negro slavery. The penalty for delay was the Civil War with all its suffering. It may take some considerable time to attain to a full understanding, that the labor power of a man is the man, and that hence all the laws and decisions, which treat man or man's labor as property, are in fact anti-American; but if America is to last, if she is not to suffer the punishment of Rome, or the punishment for sin against the Holy Ghost, then she must absorb and understand this thought, which is difficult only because of its simplicity.

Era of Corporations

The policy of America is built upon individual freedom and equality of rights. America has, for economic reasons and probably very wisely, permitted the creation of supermen—corporations—substantially omniscient, omnipresent, omnipotent and immortal. Through this creation it has been possible for the men controlling them to get possession of the Nation's natural resources and such natural forces as the inventive genius of man has harnessed for man's use. It has resulted in immense fortunes, in political control and in such absolute industrial control as to destroy American liberty and equality of rights. This power, sometimes called the money power controls the press through advertising and stock ownership, it controls, alas, too many of the churches through the pew, the legal profession through fees and place, the universities through endowments, and the common school through the school boards. It is rewriting the posts of the pasts, or suppressing them through the great publishing houses. It is reaching out for the spiritual power through control over public opinion. It seeks to prevent any general organization of labor through the so-called American plan, which is borrowed from the Feudal magnates of Europe, invented by them and imposed upon a helpless people some two hundred years before Columbus found the West Indies. This power seeks to segregate labor into groups which can be cajoled, chloroformed or bludgeoned into submission pending the imposition of some philosophy, possibly from India, that shall take away even the desire for an independent Christian life.

Reaction

They resurrect the tribunitian power, invented in Rome to protect the weak against the strong, and they, the strong, now use it against the weak. They go to Rome also for anti-combination laws and in order to supply them here, they set up, and so far they have succeeded in maintaining, that one American freeman may not associate himself with one or more other American freemen to do together, what each may do by himself alone, that the labor power of men is property, while they know perfectly well, that this is a legal fiction, and that in fact the labor power of man is the man, and that man cannot be bought or sold here, since Appomattox. They speak of buying and selling labor power. Why speak they not of buying and selling God? They can if they so desire buy and sell that which God created—the result of the creative power in activity. The labor power of a man is the creative power in man, and if the Nazarene be right, then that power is divine, because man is made in the image of God and is the son of God. So much from a Christian point of view. What of the American polity? It says than man is free, that freedom is unalienable, that the State cannot deprive any person of freedom except as a penalty for crime—that is, he can be prevented from transgressing again, and by so doing endangering the freedom of others. He has the right "peaceably to assemble," to worship, to freely speak and print, and none may say him, nay, he being held responsible for what he may say or print. Thus, it was ordained by America prior to the creation of the Superman, who being himself the creature of the American people now seeks to enslave the American people and to tempt it to violate the solemn promise which it, in its hour of travail, made to itself, and thus to incur the penalty visited upon those who sin against the Holy Ghost. They—the money power—fearing that the worker may resist too strongly, if organized to assist each other, to practice mutual aid, and to bear each other's burdens, seek to deprive the workers of their rights as citizens by denying to them the full use of the rights and the freedom guaranteed by fundamental Americanism. In their efforts to prevent the workers from choosing their shopmates—recognized as a right by the Supreme Court in Coppage vs. Kansas, and other cases—they appeal to the selfishness and cowardice of the unsupported individual. The captured lion may be alternately starved and fed into submission; how much more may not be accomplished with the gregarious animals deprived of their natural support. They—the masters—feel themselves to be the legitimate heirs of the castle and the Guild and act accordingly.

Drift to Absolutism

That is to say, the Kingly power which touched the common people only intermittingly and in spots, and the industrial power which controlled men at their work. But the changed industrial condition, has extended this power almost beyond human imagination. By controlling wages it determines whether the toiler shall marry or not, and if he has the temerity to marry, it determines the kind of food that the wife and children shall eat, wherewith they shall be clothed and how they shall be sheltered. By controlling the hours of labor it determines how often the toiler shall see the wife and children, if he hath them. In other words, it is in his home, it sleeps with him in his bed, sits with him at his table, and follows him to the friendly society and watches over him there, follows him to his trade union and watches over him there through the employment of detective agencies, or otherwise. It follows him to the polls, because it is very important how he votes, and it exercised such control that at last America was compelled to establish the secret ballot. It goes with him to the Church and watches over him, endeavoring to control the preacher's sermon. The power of Kings were as nothing compared to this, and the so-called Open Shop is an important part of this by isolating the individual, the American plan is part of this by isolating the group.

As an expression, the open shop is a misnomer. Standing by itself it would not be worth discussing; but as a link in a chain with which the money power is seeking to bind the American working people, it is of such importance that it ought not be given the support of patriotic men, not even for a moment. It is a fraud, but so cunning and plausible that it is dangerous to human freedom and a hindrance to Christian evolution.

Industrial democracy, if permitted to develop peacefully, is following the lines marked out by political democracy in England. The shop belongs to the employer, so do the tools and raw materials; but they are useless without the workers. So, the employer seeks workers and the workers answer, yes, we will work for you, but before beginning we have some grievances which we desire to have redressed. First redress grievances then furnish supplies; such was and is the road to political democracy. But then there must be organizations with which to barter, and that organization must have the power to withhold the needed supply or labor.

Students Expose Sophistry

In a joint debate between teams representing Princeton and California universities on anti-strike legislation, the Californians, who opposed the plan, showed that anti-strike advocates offer nothing but well wishes to workers who have lost their rights.

The question was: "Resolved, That Congress should pass laws prohibiting strikes in essential industries."

The claim that a fair wage will replace labor's right to strike, was riddled by California, who was declared victor in the contest.

"What is a fair wage?" asked the westerners. "Without an answer to this question the whole plan resolves itself into one of mere platitudes and generalities. We have analyzed the reports of many wage adjustment boards in an effort to find any statement which defines a living wage with any degree of accuracy. We have found none. In most of the decisions the judge has frankly admitted the impossibility of giving a wage award upon any scientific basis. Judge Alschuler, in the packing house case, says: 'Budgets are of very little assistance, all reflecting the point of view of those who compiled them.'

"The proponents of this law, before they have established a semblance of a case, must show that it is desirable to standardize progress and change the labor movement from one of vital dynamic growth to one of static repose. Impossible of determination, with no basic economic assumption for either a living wage as a minimum or a fair wage as a maximum, how will the commission be able to guarantee the workman a fair exchange for depriving him of the strike. The enactment of this law would take from labor its only effective weapon and give it nothing in return.

"We have pointed out continually that the plan presented by our opponents is a makeshift remedy, that it does not strike at the real roots of industrial unrest. What is the cause of strikes? The time has come when we must think in terms of causes, and subject any suggested remedy to this criterion: will it help solve the problem of industrial unrest by removing the cause? If it does not it is worse than futile, it is a positive evil in that it delays any real settlement of the problem, and only serves to irritate the sore of industrial unrest.

"Compulsory arbitration would deprive the laboring man of the power to work out his own destiny and give that power to a small body of men. This is not democracy. Our government might be operated with less friction if the management of it was taken out of the hands of the people and placed under the control of experts. We have always believed, however, that democracy means letting the people work out their own destiny, that the justification of government is found not so much in efficiency as in the increased power and ability it gives the people in solving their own problems. Whatever may be said to be the advantage of compulsory arbitration, it certainly can not be said that industrial democracy is one of them. It leads straight to industrial autocracy, not democracy.

"Democracy must come from within, and be the self expression of the whole working class. It can never be handed down from above and given to a class deprived of its economic power and chained to industry under an economic system that recognizes it only as a commodity.

"The labor movement is a living, vital thing. To cement it into one status decreed by governmental authority is to destroy irretrievably the whole movement."

Bill of Rights Filed

In filing 11 proposals with the Railway Labor Board, B. M. Jewell, president of the railway employes' department, A. F. of L., declared that the attitude of labor in its controversy with railroad managers has been in accord with President Harding's announced policy of adjusting differences before they result in conflict.

The trade unionist declared that the following principles were the minimum in labor's bill of rights:

Eight-hour day and adequate wages; proper rates for overtime; arrangement of working shifts to permit of reasonable working conditions; reasonable rules for health and safety; definition of the work of each craft; proper apprentice rules; four years' apprentice; the right of the majority of each craft to determine what organization shall represent them; right to select grievance committee; protecting seniority of workers; right to organize without discrimination.

White Men Barred

Officials of the Phoenix division of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad have ordered section and gang foremen to cease employing white men.

This logical development of the so-called "American plan" is found in Circular No. 629, which notifies foremen:

"When you need more men for your gang, write the Home Supply company, railroad mail, addressed to them at Prescott, Arizona; tell them how many men your gang is allowed; how many men you need (state whether singe or men with families wanted) and state where you want these men sent.

"When a man is discharged or quits, the Home Supply company should be notified immediately, giving the man's name and the date he quits or is discharged.

"Relative to using white men on sections, please be advised that any white men now in the service will be allowed to remain in the service, but under no consideration should any more white men be hired by you, even if you are authorized by the Home Supply company to hire men for your section.

"These instructions appear to be very definite and concise, but they must be followed closely. Failure to comply entirely and exactly with these instructions will result in severe discipline to the foreman concerned."

World's Workers

The threatened general strike in Brazil has, for the time, been averted, but conditions are very unsetled, mainly due to the steady rise in cost of living in the country.

More than 20,000 men are out of work in Montreal, according to J. T. Foster, former president of the Trades and Labor Council, of that city.

A statement issued by the Amsterdam municipal Statistical Bureau shows that about 20 per cent. of the members of trade unions affiliated to the State Unemployment Insurance Fund in that city were out of work in January, 1921.

The estimated loss due to the recent marine stewards' strike in Australia is £5,000,000. Coastwise shipping was not resumed by many of the vessels affected until three weeks after the settlement due to port congestion.

Continued arbitrary lowering of wages in Spain is being met by syndicalist strikes and disorders. Factories in Bilbao and Barcelona are closing down and there are an approximate of 1,500,000 unemployed in the country.

Distribution in Italy of unemployment donation by the State ceased on January 1, 1921. This step was due to the fact that unemployed persons otherwise qualified are entitled to receive out-of-work pay under certain other laws. Several Italian papers claim the decree deprives a large percentage of unemployed from monetary assistance as very few have kept up their necessary contributions.

By a decree issued by President Obregon of Mexico all foreign laborers are barred from that country. The reason assigned was that an influx of foreigners would prevent the full employment of native labor during the period of scarcity of work. It is believed that the decree is more directly aimed at the situation in the oil fields. Certain exceptions are provided for those showing sufficient sustenance for a specified time.

Latest information from Mexico shows that labor conditions are unsettled, with unrest and strikes on the increase. The serious strikes which have been reported on the railroads threaten to spread to all industries in the Federal District. The port congestion, which labor troubles have aggravated, is somewhat improved, although the dispatch of vessels is slow. A reduction of wages is generally noticeable, while higher taxation seems probable in the form of import duties.

Unemployment is believed to be much less in evidence in France at present than in the United States or in Great Britain. The labor federation estimates that the total number of unemployed is between 120,000 and 150,000, of which 50,000 to 60,000 are estimated to be in the Paris district. The metal working and furniture trade are experiencing dull periods, the latter showing 40 per cent unemployed. Textile trades are anticipated to show considerable unemployment during the coming month owing to overproduction. An attempt is being made on the part of the Government to induce farm workers to return to the country districts. At present, about one-third of the men out of employment are receiving subsistance from the Government.

If you are an American or want to be one, or if you don't know, get Axtell's book and find out what America stands for today. What are you doing to see that equal opportunity to each Citizen of the United States in this great land, is preserved? The Seaman's Act, the Emancipation Act of seamen, a bloodless victory for the organization of workers, freeing more men than the Civil War of 1865 and without bloodshed, is fully explained in this book. Postpaid retail price, $1.00.

Silas B. Axtell, author of the book, has been attorney for the International Seamen's Union, Eastern & Gulf Sailors' Association, Marine Cooks & Stewards' Association, Marine Firemen & Oilers' Association and for seamen of the world, of all countries and nationalities for twelve years; has probably argued, tried and appealed more cases for seamen than any other single attorney in the United States.

You Want the Truth

This year there will be stirring times in the Nation. Under government censorship it is increasingly difficult for the average man to get the real meaning of the social and political movements of the day.

LA FOLLETTE'S MAGAZINE

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong — on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

The gasoline schooner "Mae Hyman," which plys between San Francisco and Point Arena, lost her rudder off Saunder's Reef, seven miles out of Point Arena last week and was towed to port by a passing steamer.

On arrival in San Francisco, officers of the "China" reported transfer of thirty-four Chinese stowaways to the steamer "Nile" in midocean. The "Nile," which was destined for China, will land the "Celestials" on their native soil.

The French steamer "Utique," bought by Thomas Crowley and A. F. Mahony from the French government has arrived at San Francisco from Bordeaux with 1000 tons of ore as cargo. The vessel was built on this Coast as the steam schooner "Lucinda Hanify" and purchased by the French for war service.

For the protection of the fishermen, whom they take north each season, the Alaska Packer's steamers "Kvichak" and "Nushagak" have been equipped with wireless apparatus by the Radio Corporation of America. Both ships will leave for the north in April. They are being overhauled at the company's yards in Oakland.

The North Atlantic and Western Steamship Company, operating between Atlantic and Pacific ports in the freight trade, will hereafter make Oakland a direct port of call, applying the same rates as at San Francisco. All vessels of this line will dock at the Parr Terminal. Principal ports served by this line are Boston, Philadelphia and Portland, Me.

After much dickering between navy officials and private interests for the allocation of the big United States Shipping Board freighter "Hollywood," decision has been made by the board to lay the vessel up at the Alameda mud flats. The "Hollywood" has been towed to her mooring across the bay, where she will remain until the present slump in cargoes revives.

The Bethlehem shipyards are doing considerable repair business in spite of the fact that there is practically no new keels being laid. Among the steamers which are being handled at the yard are the "Alaskan," which was on the rocks off the Lower California coast and which was delivered four days ahead on contract schedule.

Two boilers on the steamer "Cape Henry" of the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Company blew up on the way into San Pedro from the Panama Canal. The vessel sailed from San Pedro, and made the trip to San Francisco with only two boilers working. The damage, it is said, will amount to about $12,000. No injuries were reported.

Maurice L. Leehey, special counsel for the Alaska Territorial Shipping Board, has arrived at San Francisco for the purpose of interesting local shipping firms in the possibilities of Alaskan trade. With the opening of Alaska's coal mines, there will be a big increase in trade between San Francisco and the northern territory.

The "West Keen" developed engine trouble on her way from Kahului to San Francisco and put back into Honolulu for repairs, according to a wireless from the islands received recently by the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce. No details of the difficulty were given, but it is not thought that it is serious. The "West Keen" is operated by the Matson Navigation Company for the Shipping Board. She has a cargo of sugar aboard.

Three hundred and eighty American-built automobiles are lying on the wharves at Singapore, deteriorating in the sun and rain. The cars were shipped to India before the reverses were met in the Orient. The buyers were unable to accept their purchases, and the agents could not take delivery because the banks would not give credit, it is said. Only one company was able to release its shipments.

The "Northern Pacific" and the "Southern Pacific," which were recently returned to the Shipping Board by the United States War Department at the termination of their service as transports, are to be offered for sale. The Shipping Board believes that the ships will be snapped up quickly for service in the passenger-carrying business across the Atlantic. It is understood that the passenger business has improved considerably in the past three months.

Al Levy has been appointed commissary chief of the new Los Angeles Steamship Company, which will operate the steamships "Yale" and "Harvard" between San Francisco and San Pedro. The "Yale" and "Harvard" will dock at pier 7, close to the Ferry Building. The "Yale" will start northward on her first voyage May 2, arriving next day. Due to repairs the "Harvard" will not be put on the run until ten days later. There will be a sailing from each port six days a week.

Shipping interests express concern over the non-arrival of the British motor ship "Tagua," which left Rarotonga, Cook Islands, December 21, for San Franciso. She is now out 95 days. An ordinary passage for a motor vessel is 50 days, and for a sailing ship 75 days. The "Tagua" has a cargo of copra, consigned to Atkins Kroll. Like the schooner "Harvester," which is out over 140 days from the Tonga Islands, the motor ship is believed to have met with disaster at sea.

Varying reductions in the water freight rates eastbound from the Pacific Coast to the Atlantic on cable, glass, matting, raw silk, wool, mohair and wooden pipe, as a result of reclassification, were announced recently by the Pacific Coast-North Atlantic Conference, composed of steamship companies operating between the two seaboards of the United States. In the case of lead-covered cable in reels the reduction is 50 per cent. These articles are carried as commodities under the new rules, where previously they took class rates.

Mariners who have visited Coos Bay of late note an obstruction in the ship channel just west of the Southern Pacific bridge which crosses Coos Bay at the mouth of Pont inlet. Two craft have been stranded on this shoal within the last two weeks—the Standard Oil tanker "Atlas" and the sailing schooner "North Bend" under tow. Neither vessel sustained any damage. The Southern Pacific is obliged to remove such shoals, according to the permit granted the company by the government for constructing the bridge, but makes no move toward doing so until many protests have been filed.

The Shipping Board steamer "West Camak," which has been operating between San Francisco and Europe under allocation to E. C. Evans & Sons, with an arrangement with Williams, Dimond & Company, by which the latter returned it to this country in the European-Pacific Line, has been reassigned to Williams, Dimond & Company. The vessel will make its first trip eastward in the European-Pacific Line, sailing from San Francisco April 25. Since Shipping Board vessels have been laid up recently as soon as they were released by one company, this is the first reassignment in months.

Full up with passengers, many of whom have been delayed in Australia and New Zealand for weeks because of the strike which paralyzed the Union Line service to Vancouver, but with one of the poorest cargoes to arrive in months, the Union liner "Marama" arrived at San Francisco last week. The vessel carried only 503 tons of freight, consisting largely of frozen meats, butter and copra. Among the passengers who were held in Australia and finally obtained passage on the Marama was J. T. Greaney, of San Francisco, who has been investigating conditions in the Antipodes for the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation. The "Marama" came from Sydney, via Wellington, Rarotonga and Papeete, although the usual run has been from Wellington.

Business on the east coast of South America is showing a decided improvement, according to officials of Swayne & Hoyt, who have two ships on the way to San Francisco with capacity cargoes. The longshoremen's strike and the marine employes' strike of the Mihanovich Company, which paralyzed 200 vessels for more than a year, has been settled, according to the latest word from Buenos Ayres. The "Palace" and the "Rotarian," both Shipping Board steamers operated by Swayne & Hoyt, are bringing 60,000 sacks of coffee each, besides considerable hides and linseed. They loaded at Buenos Ayres. The "West Netus" of the same pany is loading in the north at present for South America. She will carry a full cargo of lumber, rice, canned goods. She is to sail from San Francisco April 8. Business is taking great strides toward normalcy and the prospects are very good for full ships both ways from now on.

Although there have been published reports that the passage of Chinese coolies from Hongkong to Havana had been halted by the Hongkong authorities because of the surplus of agricultural labor in Cuba, this movement of Chinese on the former large scale will shortly be resumed, according to Tam Ho Yu, "No. 1" comprador on the Java-Pacific steamer "Tjisondari." The "Tjisondari," which on former voyages has brought upward of 1000 Chinese in transit to Cuba and Mexico, had only a few on the last voyage. However, there will be another large consignment on the next trip from Hongkong, the comprador declared. The "Tjikembang," another of the Java-Pacific ships in this run, will have 200 or 300 coolies on board. That the Java-Pacific steamers with passenger quarters are carrying between 1000 and 2000 Chinese from Hongkong to Batavia, and vice versa, on each trip, was the declaration of Comprador Tam. There is a continuous and heavy movement of Chinese passengers between these ports, he said. The compradors travel on the vessels in charge of the Chinese passengers and also assume certain responsibilities as to the cargoes.

CAPITAL SHOWS ITS HAND

It is apparent to even the most simple-minded individual that the drive on labor by the combined commercial interests is world wide in its scope.

The following from the current issue of the Marine Caterer, official organ of the National Union of Ship's Stewards, Cooks, Butchers and Bakers of Great Britain, reveals a few suggestions of ruthless conspiracy:

THE SHIPPING FEDERATION, LIMITED

Exchange Chambers,
24, St. Mary Axe,
London, E. C. 3,
23rd Feb., 1921.

G. A. Vallance, Esq.,
General Secretary,
National Maritime Board,
10, Basinghall Street,
London, E. C. 2.

Dear Sir:

As the Joint Secretary of the owners' side of the National Maritime Board, I am desired to give notice that the shipowners wish to have a meeting of the full board summoned for Wednesday, the 2nd prox., to consider an immediate reduction of £4 10s per month in the pay of navigating and engineer officers and other members of the deck and engine-room department, and £5 10s. per month in the catering department, together with proportionate reductions in the case of crews of weekly vessels, and the entire revision of the conditions of overtime for all ratings.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) MICHAEL BRETT,
Secretary.

"We are not in the least surprised at receiving the above communication. The capitalist class of this country must imagine that the workers are in their dotage; that they cannot see things. The latest move of the shipowners is part and parcel of a mad policy to smash trade unionism. The Seamen's Unions are not the only ones affected. Dozens and dozens of smaller unions have been attacked during the last few months. Capitalism is on its trial. The present wages reduction movement, and the locking out of men under the pretext of unemployment, shows that they are getting to the end of their tether; that the capitalist system, both during the war and at the present time, has proved itself an abject failure. The workers' time is fast approaching. Whether they will tolerate being starved to death, or shot to death, seems to be the question that they have got to answer. We therefore suggest to our members to carefully study the position for the future, and any comments they have to make we should like them to put on a postcard or letter, and address same to this office, 14-16 Central Buildings, 41 North John Street, Liverpool. We want to know from you direct what you are going to do. During the next few weeks attend your branch meetings. If the rooms won't hold you, get the officials to engage bigger rooms. We want as far as possible to get a full expression of opinion as to whether the men in the catering department will agree to a reduction in wages and overtime. This matter is too important for a handful of paid officials to deal with at present. Every man and woman in the union must take their share of the responsibility. If there is going to be a fight, let us fight as an organization 100 per cent. strong. If we do this we shall have little to fear from shipowners or anyone else.

"Immediately after the meeting with the shipowners on this important question the General President will visit all the branches and address the members. Therefore, take this as a warning and prepare for action. Remember, we found our souls in 1911; don't let us lose them in 1921."

The spirit and sentiments of the foregoing apply with equal effect on this side of the water. Our situation and requirements are identical, and we know that when the attack occurs we must be prepared to meet it 100 per cent. strong, and that 100 per cent. as nearly as possible in every port of the world where the water is deep enough to float a vessel.

We are not surprised at the recent loud wail of Lloyd George against labor in England in view of the spirit of solidarity amongst the British workers. Representing the classes, he can see the threat of an intelligent understanding amongst the masses, especially when they reveal a tendency to protect their rights and liberties.

Capital which is international and scientifically organized, has determined to attack and subjugate labor which is also international, but not so efficiently combined. To meet the shock the defense must be as compact in an international manner as the attackers. Let us get busy.

LET VISION BE WIDE

The present world-wide industrial situation can be likened to a citadel which is attacked from without and doomed to fall.

Imprisoned within the fortress are three characters occupying adjoining cells. They have been unjustly incarcerated and their whole system is permeated with the bitterness of miserable fate. The spirit of each, however, is not affected alike and to each the situation assumes a different aspect.

The first, vigorous healthy youth, impatient of restraint, chafes at the very thought of bondage. With restless mien he paces the cell, looking within and looking out. He can see his merciless warders, physically, mentally and morally his inferiors; the hard floor, the walls, and the forbidding bars which stand between himself and the better life, while the blood runs through his veins like molten iron. At every crack of the warden's lash he struggles at his gyres, unconquered and untamed. Again he looks out and sees only the limitless sky or the stars overhead, while hope and faith return. Again impetuous as he looks within and realizes his degradation and present helplessness. So the emotions combat as understanding of injustice is more pronounced, and the prisoner becomes more impatient and less susceptible to discipline or control.

This character exemplifies the red-blooded radical.

In the adjoining cell is the second prisoner, a character of strength and maturity. Never once does he look within. His lifted eye is forever towards the heavens, and the beautiful world without. With a faith that never wavers, a hope that never dies, and with love for the great outside, he awaits with patience and confidence the hour of redemption. Neither blows or cajolery ever cause him to falter.

He is represented in the number of moderates or progressives.

In the third dungeon, the most pitiful and dejected, without hope or ambition, cowers the oldest victim, disregarding every cheerful sign. His vision never reaches beyond the confines of the prison. He gazes always within, seeing only the cell, the cruel bars and the hated walls. He shrinks from the curse and writhes at the stroke of the warders. Resigned to fate with the overwhelming belief that there can be no change, he whimpers as the lash is laid over his shoulders, and kisses the hand of his tormentor; vainly desiring to avoid the present suffering, for he sees no future, living only in the past.

His attitude is characteristic of reactionaries.

But the fortress shall be stormed. A great army of new ideas will overwhelm the citadels of greed, and the hour of release draws near.

The subjects of long oppression do not look out in vain. We have been heirs to industrial servitude which has chained our natural proclivities and suppressed our freedom. Too long has the scales of justice been warped by the servants of greed. The struggle may be fierce and progress slow, but the end is as inevitable as the tide that creeps over the shore. Advanced ideas are sweeping on and the end of industrial despotism is assured.

IMPORTANT MEETING CALLED

The People's Reconstruction League has called a "national town meeting" unique in the history of the national capital, to be held on April 14th and 15th in the LaFayette Hotel, at which men of national prominence will discuss "What Congress Should Do Now."

The announcement of the League says that "the seriousness of our agricultural, industrial, and economic situation is generally admitted. The progressive farmer, labor, and women's organizations united in the People's Reconstruction League, believes our legislative program is essential to remedy this situation." This program includes restoration of the railroads to unified Government operation, packer control legislation, taxation of wealth, and privilege instead of poverty, and Government control of natural resources.

The announcement continues: "Outstanding Senators and Congressmen in the fight for the people's rights, including Senators La Follette, Borah and Norris, and Congressmen Frear, Sinclair and others will address the conference on the League's program. Leaders of both Senate and House, and chairmen or ranking members of important committees such as Finance, Ways and Means, Agriculture, and Interstate Commerce will tell the conference what they propose to do about the League's program.

Among the representatives of labor who will address the conference are William H. Johnston, president of the International Association of Machinists, and James P. Noonan, international president of the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Representatives of farm, labor and women's organizations are invited to send delegates to this conference, and the general public is cordially invited to attend all the sessions.

TENACITY REWARDED

The International Brotherhood of Teamsters—Local 85 of which was one of our allies in the waterfront strike of 1901—has on more than one occasion demonstrated the fact that it is an organization which is strong in accomplishment. Perhaps the effective character of this union was never more strikingly proven than in its fight against the Jewell Tea Company.

After a long struggle in which every effort was made to injure or destroy the teamsters' unions in more than 100 cities of the United States, this concern has been compelled to close out its business, in many instances selling its stock to rival concerns. In the inception of the enterprise the treatment accorded to its employes was fair, and by close application to business the company made remarkable growth. To such extent did this prosperous condition develop that a magazine of nation-wide circulation made the subject a feature story illustrative of American opportunities. If cordial relations had continued between employer and employes of the Jewell Tea Company there is slight doubt but that it would be one of the large commercial concerns today.

But as the company expanded it grew arrogant, and a dispute with its employes resulted in a lockout of the drivers.

From that date the fortunes of the company were doomed.

The Jewell Tea Company as a solvent concern is now only a memory. Its fate should be a solemn warning to other arrogant employers who might lean towards use of unfair tactics, or disrespect for the rights of their employes.

The Brotherhood of Teamsters has set an example of solidarity and tenacity of purpose that would be profitable for other labor organizations to emulate. By their splendid fight against, and complete victory over, an anti-union corporation, they give considerable strength to the organized labor movement.

The White Star liner Olympia set a new record for turn around on her last voyage to New York. The vessel docked at 2:11 p. m. Thursday, and sailed for Cherbourg at 1:59 p. m. Saturday of the same week, thus occupying a port lay in of less than two days.

PROFITEERS ESCAPE UNDER SALES LAW

By JAMES A. FREAR

The following instructive article was written by James A. Frear, Congressman from Wisconsin. It appeared in the current issue of La Follette's Magazine, with an editorial note which stated: "Propaganda for the passage of a consumption sales tax by Congress is vigorously being waged. The stakes are $800,000,000, now paid from corporation excess profits that would then be shifted to the backs of 100,000,000 people who must consume in order to live."

If during the war any one had suggested that within a few months thereafter the American Congress would be asked to repeal the excess profits tax on corporations which reach about one billion dollars annually, and then load that burden on the backs of the consumers of the country; if it had been then proposed that the army of profiteers during war and peace were thereafter to retain their gains whether honest or illgotten without paying any corporation tax or other contribution toward their support of a government which had made their profits possible; if young soldiers who sacrificed during the war in France and whose mothers and fathers back home bought Liberty Bonds until it hurt, if they had been advised that thereafter they were to be called on to pay or make good the excess profits tax of corporations, that they had saved from German indemnity; if all these improbable fantastic things had been whispered during the war, any one proposing that plan or that purpose would have been hauled before a lunacy commission in order to determine his sanity.

Yet that astonishing proposal, however improbable three years ago, has been made and if possible is to be enacted into law. According to repeated press announcements, a member of the Senate Finance Committee and a member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, two of the most influential men in Congress, will each offer bills at the coming extra session repealing the excess profits tax on corporations; also reducing the surtax on personal incomes and will substitute a consumption tax on everything we eat, drink and wear to make up the revenue deficit caused thereby. The principle influences behind this movement have been fully disclosed to the American Congress, the propaganda proudly admitted and predictions of success repeatedly made by high authority. Their purpose is no idle threat, but a plain legislative proposal advocated by powerful financial interests that during the past year have organized one of the strongest and best financed propaganda ever pressed on Congress.

Game of Millions

A thousand million dollars collected last year from excess profits of prosperous corporations and from surtaxes on individual incomes, are hereafter to be shifted on to the backs of the general public—that is the plan and that is the stake. It is a game for an annual prize of upwards of a billion dollars and it justifies the employment of many tax experts, newspaper comments, editorials and press education on the beauties of a sales tax and other expenditures for propaganda without limit.

Any expense would be warranted if the billion dollar tax now paid by less than 5 per cent. of the population, those best able to pay, could be shifted over to the

DIED

Ragnvald, E. Juell, No. 1672, a native of Norway, age 39. Died at San Francisco, Calif., March 25, 1921.

A three-masted schooner is a derelict in the Pacific about 500 miles east of the Japanese coast, according to a report filed with the United States Hydrographic Office by Captain H. D. Clarke, skipper of the Standard Oil tanker "Algonquin," which recently arrived from Oriental waters. Captain Clarke reports the derelict as having been sighted by him on February 15 in latitude north 31-33, longitude 153-47. He described it as a three-masted schooner with decks awash, stump of one mast showing and bulwarks and upper works carried away. Local maritime officials immediately began to check over records in the hope of ascertaining the identity of the craft. Many are inclined to believe it an American vessel and one of the many schooners operating in the trade to the South Sea islands.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

Editor SEAMEN'S JOURNAL:

I am forwarding a clipping from the Galveston News dated March 19, 1921, which carries a report of the proceedings of the Texas Cotton Association Convention held in the port of Galveston. The report contains copy of an address by Mr. Maco Stewart, a local attorney. Mr. Stewart has no other interest in the American Merchant Marine than that of a patriotic citizen, inasmuch as his business is confined to real estate transactions in addition to his law practice.

However, Mr. Stewart has proven himself competent, in every way, to air his views on this important subject, and his quality of Americanism is given in facts and figures, which I believe express the sentiments of every ordinary, all day American in this country. He deals with a serious condition in our shipping business from just one angle—that of patriotism—at a time and place, and under conditions that compel attention and consideration.

The sooner that the every day American realizes just what is happening to our shipping, by whom these things are being done; for just what purposes they are accomplished, and the manner of their performance, the better it will be for American shipping and all it affects.

In substance that means every legitimate interest in the country.

JAMES MURRAY,
Galveston, Texas.

Mr. Stewart's address follows:

It is not my purpose to attempt to make a speech, but merely to lay before you, at the instance of the local representative of the Shipping Board, certain facts that are of great concern and therefore necessarily of much interest to you and to me and to every one of our fellow-citizens, who are all co-partners in one of the greatest business enterprises now in existence in the world; in fact, it is to be doubted whether there is any one business in the world that even approximately, in magnitude or in capital, compares with the carrying business of the Shipping Board. You and I and our fellow-citizens have already invested in the enterprise several billion dollars. Four years ago no one had ever dreamed that there would ever exist any such gigantic organization as we have brought together since April, 1917, nor would it have been believed possible that such a vast amount of capital could have been gathered together to invest in any character of business, nor would it have been believed that within such a short period of time there could have been constructed the two thousand ships now owned by the American people and now operated by the Shipping Board as their agent. These ships are routed from various American ports to every port on the globe, carrying all manner of American products. The commerce of the world would be stagnated today were it not for the fact that these ships were brought into existence, and not only were these ships brought into existence, but you and I and our fellow-citizens created and still maintain the greatest world financial organization, the Federal Reserve Bank, which alone is stabilizing the finances of the world, and it is through its instrumentality and aid that the commerce of the world is moving today. These banks belong to the American people and these ships belong to the American people and the produce of the United States which is now being shipped abroad would not and could not move were it not for the fact that shippers are able to secure necessary accommodation from the Federal Reserve Board to move the products of this nation.

I am not here to excuse the mistakes of the Federal Reserve Banks nor am I here to minimize the mistakes that have been made by the Shipping Board, but you and I and our fellow-citizens are here to discuss the question as to whether or not our agents are properly carrying out the duties imposed on them and so far as we can, to suggest means to make these ten great businesses the greatest in the world of actual benefit to our people. The Shipping Board has placed for the use of shippers in the Southwest 200 vessels, worth not less than $200,000,000, and it is for you and our fellow-citizens to say whether or not these ships, in which you and I and our fellow-citizens have so much invested, are to be used, or whether these ships are to be tied up to the wharf and allowed to rot. There is no lack of produce to be moved, and while it may be true that there is some question of the ability to get the money with which to move the crop and the ability of the foreigners to pay for same, it is nevertheless true that it is to be determined by you and by me and by those associated with us and those with whom we come in contact whether or not American goods are to be shipped in American bottoms. Some of you may ask what difference it makes to the American people whether you patronize American ships or whether you ship American products in foreign bottoms. The answer is plain.

The American ship has its home port on the American seaboard. American ships buy their supplies in America. The paint, ropes, and all supplies of every character required on a ship are bought by American ships from American producers, and thereby industry is enhanced and employment given to our people and general prosperity brought about. The fact of the matter is that during the past twelve months American ships plying out of Texas ports have actually paid in money for supplies purchased at these different ports and in labor expended and repairs made at these ports the enormous amount of over $20,000,000. During this same period of time these American ships moving out of gulf ports have moved but one-fourth of the cotton and but one-fifth of the grain exported from this section. Now, who has moved the other three-fourths of the cotton and the other four-fifths of the grain? The answer is that these products have gone forward in foreign bottoms.

Now the question arises, what difference does that make to me and to you and to the American people as a whole? It makes just this difference, that if all these products had been shipped in American bottoms and not in foreign bottoms, instead of having left in this country in this immediate vicinity $20,000 000, there would have been left in this State $60,000,000 to $80,000,000, and this vast sum of money in turn would have been distributed generally throughout various parts of the United States, thereby helping this country at large and enabling us to reduce the terrific war debt placed on us by the very foreigners who now are competing with our ships.

I have nothing to say against the foreigners. I am merely here to discuss the matter from the standpoint of the American people. Some one may ask, why would not foreign ships leave as much money in this country as American ships The answer is simply this: Foreign ships pay wages almost exclusively on the other side, buy supplies on the other side, all repairs are made on the other side, and in consequence a foreign ship loading on this side, exclusive of stevedore charges, leaves not 10 per cent. of the amount that would be left by American ships of the same capacity loading in this country at their home port.

No one knows better than I the annoyances and troubles that beset every bureau of this Government, and I do not minimize the trouble that necessarily arises in doing business with any governmental agency. The practical question for you and for me and our fellow-citizens who have invested in this carrying business several billion dollars is to find some practical way in which to utilize the ships on which we have spent and already invested so much money. It would be unreasonable to suppose that the construction, organization, commanding and directing of 2000 ships could be perfected in the short time that we have had in which to bring about this organization. We have made a good start, and it is for you and our fellow-citizens to say whether or not American goods, financed by American capital, are to be loaded into American craft in order that we may save this vast sum that we have invested, or whether it be better business to abandon this amount of two or three billions of dollars that is now invested in these ships and concede that we are unable to find any practical way in which to operate these ships, and either sink same or turn them over to foreigners because they know better how to do it than do we.

I have here a telegram from the director of operations of the Shipping Board in which he wants to know squarely what the people in this section of the country are going to do about furnishing cargo for the American merchant marine. If we let these bottoms become worthless, what will be the result from two points first from the financial standpoint, next from the political side? We will lose several billion dollars, and that amount we must make up in taxes. On the political side we will be in this situation: that, no matter how great a navy we may have, in the event we get into foreign complications, we will be right where we were four years ago, and must again build up a great fleet of carriers, which we know by experience can be done only at much delay and enormous cost. The grain shippers of this country have indicated and stated squarely to the Shipping Board that it is their purpose as American citizens to give their best efforts to working out this problem, and it is for you, as citizens of this section of this great country, to in some way determine in what practical way this great question is to be handled. You must either say squarely that we want no merchant marine and are willing to junk all these ships and lose this vast investment, or, on the other hand, you must help work out some constructive plan by which these ships can be operated. There is no way that these ships can be operated without cargo, and this can not be secured without the shipper's direction.

The truth of the matter is that most of the cargoes are booked through brokers and, unfortunately, many of these brokers placing cargoes see fit to place same otherwise than in American bottoms, and the result is that we today are losing the benefit of this great fleet of ships, the like of which the world has never gotten together in one organization. There moved out of the port of Galveston during the past twelve months, in round numbers, 2,000,000 bales of cotton, of which one-fourth, or 500,000 bales, were carried in American bottoms and the remainder paid tribute to foreigners, and during the same period of time there moved out of the port of Galveston about 45,000,000 bushels of grain, of which one-fifth, or 9,000,000 bushels, were carried in American bottoms, and four-fifths were shipped out by American shippers, who paid freight to foreign shippers, who in turn spent it on the other side.

What are you going to do about co-operating with the representatives of our people in furnishing cargo for this fleet, in which we have so much invested?

OCEAN SECRETS

Notwithstanding modern inventions, which have added materially to the science of navigation, the many new facilities for safety of life at sea, including ability to keep in touch with shore and other vessels by radio, no less than fourteen ships were recorded by underwriters to have been lost at sea through unknown causes during the year 1920. It is significant that of this total, ten were steamships and only four were sailing vessels.

In spite of everything that man has accomplished to date, the sea continues to envelop many of her tragedies in mystery.

A total of 277 vessels have been reported lost during the last year. There were 1788 collisions which sent down thirty ships. An equal number were destroyed by fire and explosion, while grounding claimed the greatest toll of 109 vessels.

The element of mystery regarding those ships which are recorded lost through unknown causes compels conjecture. Perhaps a stray floating mine, broken away during the war, has been run down during the dark hours of night. An unseen iceberg, or hidden derelict may have torn the bottom out of another. Two vessels may have collided with such impact as to rip the vitals out of each or caused boiler explosions of immediate destructive force. Combustible or explosive cargo could have accounted for other accidents by spontaneous combustion.

Out in the vast stretches of the Atlantic or Pacific oceans there may have occurred sudden seismic tidal waves large and sweeping enough to engulf the finest vessel afloat. There are hundreds of possibilities, and when we review only a few of them realization of the limitations of man before the forces of nature become strikingly apparent.

ESCAPE UNDER SALES TAX

remaining 95 per cent. who do not understand excess profits or frequently any profits at all but live from hand to mouth and are now to pay through a turnover tax on the shoes, shirts, bread, butter, milk, sugar, coffee, tea and everything they consume. An extra burden of several billion dollars placed on the general public through profit pyramiding is the program in order to release capital that fears investment because the government takes part of its excess profits over 8 per cent. and because capital wants no restrictions on profits. That is the plea and that is the threat. It is pressed by great New York financiers like Otto Kahn, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., Julius Semon Bache, banker and broker representing a score of large business interests, Rothschild, Goldsmith, Leo Hahn, representing a National retailers' organization, all want a sales tax and so do many other interests, to whom the shift in tax incomes present and future profits without taxation will be of great personal moment.

Reason for Sales Tax

The reasoning of these sales tax experts who are now seeking to educate Congress and the public regarding the beauties of their system and necessity for its enactment in order to revive business is about as follows: "The government has permitted us to make enormous unheard of profits, but the government has wrongfully taken away part of those profits after allowing us an exemption of only $3,000 and only 8 per cent. on investment. Thereby the government destroys initiative and any further investment because we ask to make profits without limit. Notwithstanding many billions have gone into our private coffers through such net profits we will allow our plants to deteriorate if not given this business relief.

"We shall invest our money in 6 per cent. tax exempt securities and allow the plants to fall down if you do not repeal the excess profits tax. When you do repeal that tax we demand further that you permit us to retain all our gains honest or illgotten which we have accumulated during and since the war and let 'business' move on 'unrestricted and undisturbed.' We demand that you transfer the excess profits tax and other objectionable taxes reaching a billion dollars annually over to the backs of men, women and children who are least able to pay or if not again we threaten to invest our gains in tax exempt securities and let business go hang. Business must live. That is the ultimatum."

When asked what a 1 per cent. proposed sales tax would bring in they say anywhere from one billion dollars to five billion, or over ten times the proportionate amount realized in the Philippines. When advised that French collection estimates for January, 1921, realized only 35 per cent. of the amount predicted by French government experts they say we will collect taxes better here. When informed that our luxury sales tax here is largely avoided they answer, that will not occur with a sales tax and while asserting they have passed all taxes on to the ultimate consumer they indignantly protest against the excess profits and income tax because it taxes and burdens the rich. The system and logic of the sales tax champion is wonderful in its complexity.

Nation's Financial Condition

Getting down to concrete facts, the public debt in round numbers reaches $24,000,000,000, of which $9,580,923,677 represents war loans to European governments, all of which failed to pay any interest last year. Expenditures for the fiscal year 1920 reached $6,403,343,841, while total government receipts for the amount in round numbers $323,000,000 was collected from customs; $39,945,000,000 from income and excess profits tax and miscellaneous $2,426,000,000. Expenses of government for 1921 fiscal year will fall far below those of last year and on the other hand income and excess profits taxes will fall far below the 1920 figure, which reached nearly four billion dollars.

As stated the item of excess profits and reduction of surtax will reach less than a billion dollars in 1921 according to estimates. While tax experts assert the excess profits tax is right in principle it is not always easy to ascertain invested capital, takes a good share of the excess profits out of the business and backed by a powerful propaganda it is slated for repeal. The high surtaxes on personal incomes take so much of individual profits or income that such incomes are being placed in tax exempt securities that cannot be reached without a constitutional amendment, so the higher surtaxes are likely to be reduced. That briefly is the situation. Some governmental authorities declare that if the one billion dollars revenue from excess profits and reduced surtax is not paid that the government through economy and reduced expenditures can make ends meet from other existing revenue sources and also make substantial payments on the floating debt.

Many Plans Offered

Many plans are offered for raising the billion dollars lost by repealing the excess profits tax law if additional revenues are needed. One is to increase the normal tax on corporation profits from 10 per cent. to 15 per cent., which will add nearly $400,000,000 annually. Another plan is to tax undistributed profits of corporations 20 per cent. By compelling such distribution treasury experts estimate this tax will bring in $190,000,000 annually and the amount thus released and passed into personal income tax statements would add another $400,000,000 annually according to the same authorities. Many other plans of taxation are proposed, but these offered by the Government Treasury would more than meet any deficit, because an increase in tariff rates proposed this session will add $300,000,000 more or almost double the amount now received from customs.

These figures are from the highest Government authorities and are set forth in order to show the untenable position of consumption tax propagandists whose main purpose is to escape tax, if possible.

They predict in favor of a turnover sales tax that with a one per cent. tax on everything we eat, drink and wear collected in every turnover it will raise between $1,000,000,000 and $5,000,000,000, providing all taxes are collected. One of the greatest tax experts in the country told me that the ultimate purpose of the sales tax propagandists is to displace and replace all income taxes with a sales tax so that the efforts of years to compel those best able to pay under an income tax would then be wiped out by a turnover sales tax. This belief is now quite general.

With that situation we learn from high authority:

"1st. That a sales tax is dangerous to business.

"2nd. That a sales tax is unjust to the people.

"3rd. That it is a political liability of prodigious size."

Consumers Pay Tax

Two great business concerns have made an exhaustive tax investigation during the past year with the understood purpose of advocating a sales tax. The National Industrial Conference Board is composed of 25 affiliated industrial organizations representing cotton, woolen, metal, boot and shoe, pigiron, copper and other industries with a total capital reaching into billions of dollars and employing many hundreds of thousands of men. Proceeding from another angle the United States Chamber of Commerce tax committee, representing all the Chambers of Commerce in the country, conducted a separate investigation. Both committees came to the same conclusion that a sales tax would be disastrous to many lines of business where the tax could not be passed on the ultimate consumer because it would then become a tax on gross sales, and with numerous turnovers this would destroy smaller concerns, whereas "integrated" industries that had the advantage of covering all stages from the raw product to the finished article would only have one turnover tax to pay and a consequent great business advantage.

Cotton goods, woolen, leather, steel and finished articles generally have many turnovers, all of which would be taxed by this plan; for illustration:

Cotton—1st tax, raw cotton to gin; 2nd tax, gin to spinner; 3rd tax, spinner to mercerizer; 4th tax, mercerizer to dyer; 5th tax, dyer to weaver; 6th tax, weaver to finisher; 7th tax, finisher cloth to wholesaler; 8th tax, wholesaler to retailer; 9th tax, retailer to customer.

If the tax could not be shifted in some cases it would threaten the life of that particular business, or in the words of Seligman, a well-known international tax expert: "A sales tax on the sales of capital would ruin New York City as a financial center of the country."

If the tax was passed on to the ultimate consumer he would eventually pay the tax from the time the raw cotton or leather hide started on its journey until it was finally sold to the ultimate consumer in the form of shirts, socks, or shoes. Every turnover would add the tax and also a liberal profit, and when the retailer finally passed it on to the consumer the article would have pyramided in price until its cost would be double its cost without the tax. The Government would only receive 9 per cent. tax on nine turnovers, if it was ever paid to the Government in fact, but the profits on every turnover would abnormally swell the price of everything, judging from past experience.

(By Laurence Todd)

Strike Clouds Gather

In the few weeks since the Harding administration took office the country has drawn closer to a general railroad strike, has seen a steady increase in unemployment and an equally steady decrease in the savings of wage workers, and has witnessed the agreement of the big meat packers to meet in conference with the packing house employes and the Labor Department to discuss the cut in wages which the packers have already made effective in the face of a strike vote by the men.

A Reversal for Good

On the other hand, Postmaster General Will Hays has reversed the industrial policy of Burleson in his department, and has had a cordial meeting with the national officers of the postal employes' unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Congressman John I. Nolan of San Francisco, who will be chairman of the House Committee on Labor in the new Congress, accompanied the union officials to the Department and introduced them to Hays. The latter, during their interview, took occasion to say repeatedly that his ideas on the labor issue were in full accord with Nolan's. He also told the union men that he hoped to be able to establish in the Department some sort of council or conference in which he might have the advice and help of the chosen spokesmen of the employes, in order that any grievances among the postal workers may be promptly adjusted.

The officials making this call were Edw. J. Gainor, president, and Edw. J. Cantwell, secretary, of the National Association of Letter Carriers; Gilbert E. Hyatt, president, and Thos. F. Flaherty, secretary-treasurer, of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks; Wm. N. Collins, secretary of the Railway Mail Association, and J. C. Stambaugh, legislative representative of the National Federation of Rural Letter Carriers.

"The one most important element of any service," said Hays after the interview, "is the spirit of the men doing it. The battle is won in the heart of the soldier. Three hundred thousand men are engaged in this enterprise. We are going to have 300,000 partners. I know that with 300,000 men and women pledged to serve all the people and honestly discharging that duty, fairly treated and properly appreciated, we can do the job."

Next day the Postmaster General shook hands with the 2,000 employes in the five bureaus at headquarters, and repeated his pledge of co-operation and desire to adjust grievances. His official press agent sent out a statement that "Tears and smiles mingled with the expressions of appreciation of Mr. Hays' interest in their welfare."

Railroad Situation Chaotic

More serious is the news from both the railroad labor organizations and the railroad executives' association, this week, of the drift toward a tie-up of transportation. All of the railroads are joining in the wage-cutting movement, and the Railroad Labor Board is swamped with appeals from the refusal of the railroad workers to agree to any reduction in pay. The union men say frankly that they will not accept a reduction, even if the Board should decide that one is justifiable. The railroad managers, on the other hand, are expected to insist on cutting the men's pay, and on getting rid of the mileage basis of payment, even if the Board decides that the wage should stay where it is.

In either case, then, the danger of a railroad strike is acute, due to the deadlock over wage rates. The companies think they can now break the unions and restore the former conditions of servility and intimidation through the use of spies and gunmen. The railroad workers think they can maintain a solid front against any attack that can be made. They frankly say that the railroad strike will soon involve the coal supply, and that by winning their own fight they may help the coal miners to clean up the black regions of West Virginia, where conditions are more highly explosive than ever before.

Maritime Workers Threatened

Now comes word from New York that the port workers and the coast and deep-sea sailors, firemen and marine cooks and stewards are threatened with a wage cut of 25 per cent. It is reported also that the unions of these seafaring crafts are finding the shipowners unwilling to meet them to discuss a renewal of agreements running out on May 1. How far this hostility will extend has yet to be determined by the International Seamen's Union of America. Just at a time when the new administration is trying to identify itself with a policy of putting the American Merchant Marine on a permanent basis, the shipowners have gone out to break the wage scale and thereby break the unions on the sea.

Drive Is International

But the fight against the organized seamen is not confined to American ships. A cablegram from J. Havelock Wilson, secretary of the British Sailors and Firemen's Union, to Andrew Furuseth, tells of a conference in which the union committee was informed by the shipowners of Britain that the sailors and firemen must take a cut in wages of 4 pounds 10 shillings, from a monthly wage of 14 pounds 10 shillings. That is a wage reduction of about 30 per cent. It is noticeable that the British shipowners were quite willing to meet with the committee of the union. They are past the non-recognition stage in England.

A vote as to policy in meeting this demand is to be taken by the British seamen, during the 30 days of delay of further action which the committee secured from the owners.

An expert on operation of merchant ships has been looking into the actual cost of the American wage scale to the American shipowner, in comparison to the other items of operating cost of a ship, and he has found that the wages of the master and crew amount to about six per cent. of the total operating cost, without figuring the overhead charges at all. Bunker, or fuel charges are the biggest single item of operating cost. Labor is a mere trifle in comparison. Hence the hypocrisy in the claim that American seamen's wages must come down if the American merchant marine is to survive.

What is much more likely to bring the American merchant marine to grief is the putting of shipowners' lawyers and managers on the Shipping Board, as President Harding is being implored to do. It is understood that he has refused to appoint W. E. Humphrey, former Seattle Congressman and present lawyer for the Steamship Association, to the Board, but he has some other reactionaries slated for the jobs.

Living Costs Grade Downward

Cost of living is slowly going down, along with earnings and bank savings of the workers, according to latest statistics gathered by the Department of Labor. Retail prices of food articles reported from 51 important cities on February 15 and January 15, this year, were 9 per cent. lower in February than in January. From February, 1920, to February, 1921, the decrease in average retail prices for 44 standard items of food was 21 per cent., as averaged from these reports.

This does not mean that the cost of living is anywhere near normal, since the percentage of increase in average retail prices of all food items was 63 per cent. for February, 1921, over February, 1913. Meats and eggs are from 73 to 97 per cent. above the prices of eight years ago.

The railroad managers will seize upon these figures to justify an immediate cut of 20 to 30 per cent. in wages, on the theory that all that labor can rightly claim is a subsistence wage. But the new conditions that have been won by the labor movement since 1917 change all that. The War Labor Board announced the principle that wages must provide a standard of living which will include comforts for the adults and education for the children in the worker's family.

Labor's Enemies Legion

Another flank attack on the workers' position was attempted, but failed, this week, when a designing group headed by Ralph Easley of the National Civic Federation, John B. Rose of the National Guard Association and President Orth and Secretary Harvey of the National Security League called a conference here to "coordinate patriotic work" for Americanization of America. Sixty delegates met in the ball room of the Willard Hotel. The insiders met at night in secret committee sessions, to frame up a program of reactionary propaganda under the guise of "education."

It happened that President Stillman of the National Federation of Teachers was on hand, and in open session he told the super-patriots that they had better not try to cut out of the heart of the naturalized citizen or the resident alien the last bit of loving memory of his native land, but instead should set him an example of unselfish idealism and service to humanity. He warned them that it was idle to undertake to punish the immigrant worker for comparing, in his own mind, the industrial conditions here and abroad, and freely criticising conditions here that in fact were bad. It did no good to threaten an exploited worker with deportation if he were honest enough to recognize injustice in this country. On the other hand, the teachers of the country would be only too eager to help in true Americanzation.

His advice was not appreciated.

To bear is to conquer our fate.—Campbell.

That tax paid by the ultimate consumer would be unjust and wicked because the farmer with a wife and five children would have seven people to feed and clothe, whereas Rockefeller with his bowl and milk without children to provide for would pay less tax than the man who is working 16 hours a day to support his family. Those urging a sales tax do not ordinarily work one-quarter of 16 hours per day, it is safe to say, and yet travel in private cars and limousines.

Quoting Seligman again: "The sales tax represents an attempt to put an undue, an extravagant burden upon the consumer instead of on the producer or the possessor of wealth."

H. C. McKenzie summed it all up in one paragraph when he said: "I want to say that the farmers who are represented in the American Farm Bureau Federation will never in the world stand for that proposition." And George P. Hampton of the Farmers' National Council says: "American farmers who this year have lost billions through the slump in farm prices will fight to the end the plan of selfish privileged interests to saddle the huge war debt upon our people."

Would Protect Profits

What is true of the farmer is equally true of the miner, the blacksmith, the bricklayer, the clerk, the woman and child dependent upon their own labor. The section men and engineers under this plan will pay the same as the $50,000 salaried railroad president, and the ironmolder will pay the same as J. P. Morgan for what he eats, drinks and wears. That is the way a turnover sales tax works, and that is the purpose of the bill to be placed before Congress.

The political liability is obvious, but what do those who have their profits gained from the war care which party is in power so long as they chew the persimmon? In the words of James Good, chairman of the Appropriation Committee: "It is a tax on the backs and the bellies of the people, and any party passing the tax law is doomed to political defeat." Quoting Seligman again: "A sales tax on the necessaries of life would evoke a political struggle the like of which we have never seen in this country."

The Payne-Aldrich tariff bill that carried to defeat a great party would have its rival in a consumption turnover sales tax that has for its flag a skull and crossbones and a stand and deliver demand for every man, woman and child in the country—in order that corporation excess profits shall have no limit—in order that war profiteers, protected from indemnities by our armies abroad and good people back home, may now say to these returned veterans and to their parents who gave until it hurt, in the words of a New York banker and broker: "If anyone don't want to pay the tax he should merely refrain from consuming."

These bankers and brokers and retail dry goods men and candy makers and other like interests are deluging Congressmen today with demands for the passage of a sales tax. If the farmers back home and the railroad men and miners and mechanics of all kinds; if clerks and clergymen alike, all of whom will pay a sales tax, will reflect, they will not forget that Congressmen are their agents as well as agents of the bankers and brokers, and the only way that Congress can know the sentiment of the country is through the same means of propaganda now pursued by turnover sales tax advocates.

The issue is one of moment; it has for its ultimate purpose the destruction of the income tax system; it means that tax burdens now distributed in some degree according to ability to pay are to be shifted over to the backs of the hewers of wood and drawers of water. The price is too great to pay and one that even those possessed of large wealth and power may well hesitate to collect.

The so-called open shop makes that practically impossible. The American plan, viewed in this aspect is the King's control of elections and the right to appoint the speaker. When the industrial master receives petitions, in books or in writing, industrial democracy is in principle begun. Gary understands this and Gary refuses. He is open and frank about it. One can respect him and disagree with him. But the apologists of the so-called open shop, who seek to put us to sleep in order to bind us, remind me of the Brazilian vampire bat. It is supposed to follow the traveler as he goes through the forest, and when the traveler about noon seeks the shelter from the scorching sun under some shady tree, the vampire bat sits quietly down in another tree waiting for the traveler to fall asleep. As the sun gradually changes its position, its rays come between the leaves and strikes the sleeper's face. It burns and the sleeper seeks to awake. The bat then leaves his position, hovers over the sleeper and fans him with its wings. The cool gentle breeze puts the sleeper back into unconscious slumber; the bat continues to hover over the sleeper's face, fanning; it sits down on the sleepr's breast, fanning; it sinks its teeth into the jugular, briskly fanning; it drinks his blood, gently fanning, and unless help comes, the sleeper wakes no more. Wake him ye gods, send help, lest he sleep forever.

A. FURUSETH.

A MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY

"But are you a British born subject?" angrily demanded the official at the passport office.

"My mother was British——" began the applicant.

"Yes, yes——"

"But she married a Frenchman——"

"Yes, yes——"

"In Italy——"

"Yes, but where were you born?"

"I was born on a ship flying Spanish colors while she was lying at anchor in Honolulu harbor, but my parents died in Brazil when I was only four years old and I was adopted by a Chinaman, who brought me up in Russia."

"Well, he's——" began an official.

"He's a bloomin' League of Nations," exploded the first official who had spoken. —Exchange.

LABOR AGENTS UNCHECKED

Private employment agencies in the State of Louisiana may gouge employment seekers without limit, said State Labor Commissioner Wood, in discussing the absence of legislation on this subject.

The state official showed that one concern in the City of New Orleans charges preliminary fees and then 40 per cent. of the first month's salary. Other concerns charge 10 per cent. of the first month's salary.

Labor News

Switchmen at El Dorado, Ark., have organized and are chartered by the Switchmen's Union of North America.

Printers employed in three commercial shops in Detroit have been forced on strike because of the bosses' refusal to accept an arbitration award. These firms advertise their faith in non-unionism and took this occasion to show their colors.

Following a visit of Eugene V. Debs to Attorney General Daugherty at Washington last week, the latter maintains a sphinx-like silence as to possible future action in the matter. Daugherty's conference with Debs is generally considered the final step in reviewing the case.

Any attempts to reduce wages of coal miners in the United States will be resisted by the miners' union, according to statements of John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America. The union miners have contracts at present wage scales that continue until March 31, 1922.

A resolution calling upon Governor William D. Stephens to grant a "new and fair trial" for Thomas J. Mooney and Warren K. Billings, convicted of participation in the 1916 Preparedness parade bombing in San Francisco, was adopted last week by the delegates to the California State Building Trades Council annual convention at Los Angeles.

Formal notice of the severance of relations between the American Federation of Labor and the International Federation of Trades Unions was dispatched on March 8 to the International's headquarters at Amsterdam. The action of the American Federation, taken at a meeting of the Executive Council, followed the adoption by the international organization of resolutions in support of the Soviet regime in Russia. The text of the communication was not made public.

A general strike in the packing industry has been temporarily averted through a compromise agreement which was signed by representatives of the "Big Five" packers and their union employes. Labor representatives are not enthusiastic over the settlement and view it as merely a truce to prepare for war. While the agreement concedes on the side of the employes the wage cut already put into effect by the packers, it continues for a period of six months more the wartime Alschuler administration embodying the eight-hour day and containing guarantees with respect to other working conditions.

The recent order of the United States Shipping Board abolishing double pay for Saturday afternoon work on Government jobs in shipyards and outside plants has been rescinded and the double pay for such work will be continued as heretofore. A message to this effect has been received by Frank C. Miller, secretary of the Bay City Metal Trades Council from the secretary of the Metal Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor. The action of the United States Shipping Board in rescinding its order abolishing double pay for Saturday afternoon work followed a conference in Washington between representatives of the Metal Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor and representatives of the Industrial Relations Department of the United States Shipping Board.

Anyone knowing how Eugene McNulty, coalpasser, met his death recently at Boat Harbor, Newport News, Va., while employed on S. S. "Colquit," will confer a favor on his mother, Mrs. Frances McNulty, 511 Hemlock street, Scranton, Pa., or Silas B. Axtell, 9 State street, New York City, by communicating with either one.

Ole Toreson, born in Trondhjem, Norway, age about 30. His cousin, Tryggve Hagen, would like to hear from him. Address, Sailors' Union, San Francisco, Cal.

Father and mother of Nicolay C. Monsen, a native of Bergen, age 43, last heard from in San Francisco, are anxious to ascertain as to his whereabouts. Kindly communicate with Nicolay Monsen, Sjomandenes Aldershjem, Haugeveien, Bergen, Norway. 2-9-21

Mrs. John M. Eshleman, 601 Underwood Bldg., San Francisco, is anxious to ascertain the whereabouts of Friend McHarvey, a native of California, age 40, last heard from while in Alameda County this spring, 1921. 2-16-21

Domestic and Naval

After being on the beach for over four days with ship and cargo undamaged, the Pacific Mail freighter "Point Bonita" has been refloated and docked at Sorinto, according to a cable to the Marine Department of the Chamber of Commerce.

W. J. Grams, formerly district supervisor of the Shipping Board's sea service at Seattle, Wash., sought the support of the port commission recently to have the training schools maintained under the direction of the board. The commission did not act on the request.

Indicating the strengthening of the defenses of Hawaii, according to army and navy officials at San Francisco, orders have been received in military headquarters for the five submarines in San Francisco Bay to proceed to Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, and the army transport "Dix" to proceed to Tacoma for 520 army mules, to be taken at once to the island.

At Lincoln, Neb., trade unionists are opposing anti-strike and anti-picketing legislation, before the State Legislature. It is proposed to create an industrial court, which would take full charge of working conditions and jail and fine any wage earner who objects to the court's edict or who imagines he is better qualified to pass judment on conditions he must work under.

The "Steel Exporter," one of the Isthmian Line ships, bound from New York to Havre, rammed the steamer "Willcasino," a Britisher, which was anchored off Red Hook, N. Y. The steering gear of the "Steel Exporter" became jammed and she went off her course and into the "Willcasino" before the hand steering gear could be put into commission.

Merchant vessels built in the United States and officially numbered by the Bureau of Navigation, Department of Commerce, during the month of February aggregated 95 of 121,404 gross tons. This is the smallest monthly output since February, 1918, when the total was 84 vessels of 117,601 gross tons. The largest output during the intervening months was in August, 1919, with a total of 238 vessels of 455,338 gross tons.

The scout cruiser "Milwaukee" was launched at the Todd shipyards, Tacoma, Wash., March 24, 1921. Acting Secretary Roosevelt wired the following message: "Heartiest congratulations to the Pacific Northwest on the launching of the 'Milwaukee.' It is good to feel that another cruiser has taken the water to uphold the ideals and policies of our country. I feel confident that the Pacific Northwest in the important work of present ship construction will equal her splendid record during the war."

Announcement that he had found for the San Jose Building Trades Council in a $50,000 boycott damage action instituted against the Council by the Henry Cowell Lime and Cement Company has been made by Superior Judge J. R. Welch. He will make public a formal written decision in a few days, he said. The company complained that the member unions of the Council refused to handle its product on the ground that it was unfair to labor. The Council answered that the company monopolized and restrained trade through the formation of a trust.

Domestic and Naval

The "Mobile City," American steamer," which departed from Seattle for Bristol via Cristobal, was rammed by the "Armagh" while in harbor at Bristol and suffered considerable damage to her port bow.

Rio Janeiro reports that one of the missing lifeboats from the Lloyd Brazileiro Line steamship "Ubreaha" has been picked up at sea with forty-five persons in it. The vessel went on the rocks off the coast of Maranhao, Brazil, last week.

A wrecked seaplane with the words, "San Francisco," painted on the side has been found in a small bayou near Empire, sixty miles south of New Orleans, La. Naval stations in the vicinity reported no craft missing and there was no clue to the aviator.

According to reports received at St. Johns, the sealing fleet operating on the Newfoundland coast is reported to be caught in great ice floes and attempting to blast its way into open water. Three days after setting sail the fleet ran into ice floes. Escaping these by blasting, they cruised for two days, but were caught again. It is believed that most of the vessels will be compelled to return to port with empty bins.

The Public Navigation School of San Francisco, located in the south wing of the Ferry building, opened for the spring term Monday, March 28, and new classes were organized. The school is supported by the city and county of San Francisco, backed by the State of California. The object of the school is to train young men to become officers in the Merchant Marine service. The course of instruction, which covers a period of nine months, is free.

News has been received at San Francisco of a collision between the British steamers "Graystone Castle" and the "Egyptian Transport" at Gravesend. The "Greystone Castle" was bound to Antwerp from Galveston. Both ships were slightly damaged on the starboard side above the water line. The "Greystone Castle" was the ship that rammed and sunk the tug "Sea Prince" at San Francisco Bay November 18, 1910. Four lives were lost at this time.

A new lamp, now on exhibition in Philadelphia, Pa., opens a new field of deep-sea work. The lamp is the invention of a student at Sheffield Scientific School, Yale University. It enables divers to make on vessels at sea repairs that are now impossible except by dry-docking. It is also expected to be of invaluable assistance in war times in enabling divers to clear the sea of mines. The United States, Japanese and British navies have all ordered a supply of the lamps.

Men on the decks of the Navy's fighting craft throughout the world received a jolt when orders were received from the department abolishing the midnight lunch served to deck watches on all ships since the beginning of the war. The midnight lunch had been the exclusive prerogative of the engineer force from time immemorial until the world war. When the war came and the submarine menace forced the deck divisions to stand long watches the midnight lunch was authorized for all hands. Recent legislation, based on the theory that the war is over, forced abolishment of the welcome "java and goldfish" as far as the deck forces are concerned.

News from Abroad

At Brussels, Belgium, the mining commission has ordered a reduction of 5 per cent. in the wages of miners, effective in April.

The Finnish Government has decided to try, on a charge of high treason, the chairman and other leaders of the Finnish Communist party, says a Helsingfors dispatch dated March 22.

Wilbur Keblinger, American Consul, recently refused recognition by the new government at Fiume, reported the facts to the State Department and was directed to return to Jugo-Slavia.

Capitalization of the North German Lloyd Company has been increased from 125,000,000 to 250,000,000 marks in contemplation of ship construction and extended service, the new issue of stock to participate in dividend earnings in 1921.

Serious rioting occured at Grenoble, France, where former Premier Joseph Caillaux was speaking under auspices of the Socialist municipality and the League for the Rights of Men. M. Caillaux staged and delivered his lecture despite the hostile demonstration.

One of the largest shipping companies in Italy, according to the Near East of February 3, has undertaken the establishment of a regular steamship service between Batum and the ports of Italy, Great Britain, and Holland. At the beginning eight steamers will be utilized and this number will later be increased to twelve.

The Costa Rican Congress has repudiated large oil and other concessions granted in June, 1918, to Armory & Sons through an agreement entered into between the Costa Rican minister of foreign affairs and the British minister, according to advices received by the State Department. The concessions, consisting of seven thousand square miles of land, while ostensibly granted to an American company, were largely controlled by British interests, including the son of the British Premier, Lloyd George.

In view of the fact that trade between this country and Australia has been considered among the most depressed of all routes, the report that American business was considered the brightest in Australia has been received with a certain degree of surprise. A dispatch from that country said that shipping was demoralized, with American berthage standing up the best. The wool crop to be exported will not be more than 100,00 bales, the report said. Fully one-third of this amount has already arrived at San Francisco.

The tanker "Argyll," purchased by the Compagnie du Boleo, is now operating regularly between Tampico and Santa Rosalia. The vessel is engaged in supplying fuel oil to the French concern's copper mines at Santa Rosalia. The "Argyll," a vessel of 1880 tons, was acquired from the Union Oil Company and her registry changed to the French flag. The Compagnie du Boleo is a subsidiary of the French Rothschilds and operate the largest copper mine in Mexico. It has a fleet of fifty ocean-going steamers, tugs and lighters. Formerly the mines used coke as fuel, but this method was changed to oil-burning furnaces, with the result that the company was forced to purchase several oil tankers.

Fond Mistress: Oh! The poor darling's just bitten some horrid person, and, really, you know, one can't be too careful.—Life.

Life in Three Words.—"Stop, look, listen!"

The reflective man stopped to read the railroad warning.

"Those three words illustrate the whole scheme of life," said he.

"How?"

"You see a pretty girl; you stop; you look; after you marry her, you listen."—Ladies' Home Journal.

The girl walked briskly into the store and dropped her bag on the counter. "Give me a chicken," she said.

"Do you want a pullet?" the storekeeper asked.

"No," the girl replied. "I wanta carry it."—Brown Bull.

"Talking about 'dry' towns, have you ever been in Leavenworth, Kansas?" asked the commercial traveler in the smoking car. "No?" Well, that's a 'dry' town for you, all right."

"They can't sell liquor at all there?" asked one of the men.

"Only if you have been bitten by a snake," said the traveler. "They have only one snake in the town, and when I got to it the other day, after standing in line for nearly half the day, it was too tired to bite."—Evening Wisconsin.

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

POVERTY BREEDS EMIGRATION

Former U. S. Commissioner of Immigration, Howe, Cites Conditions

The problem of Immigration which confronts this country at the present time cannot be solved effectively by restrictive legislation. The fact has been well established that those laws and regulations in use to date have become inoperative through the powerful influence of economic conditions, and any further legislative efforts along the same lines must inevitably result in the same condition. In a recent address at Denver, Colorado, Frederic C. Howe, former U. S. Commissioner of Immigration, gave some enlightening facts to his audience, declaring that if land, the natural resources, and credit belonged to the people instead of to the exploiters, there would be ample room for all who want to come to this country. He defended the character of immigrants against the calumny of the press as follows:

"For five years I was a kind of St. Peter at the gates of the promised land. Only, unlike the heavenly gates, they swung open most readily to the rich and influential. They closed on the poor and helpless. Immigration is a problem of human beings. We do not know who are the best people in the world. The Anglo-Saxons think they are. The Jews think they are. All nationalities think the same. The Russians think they are lighting the way for the rest of the world to follow. The Irish are planning a new state, the kind I wish the 4,500,000 Irish people in this country would try to put over in America.

"The same conditions that the immigrant faces we have to face. Your baby is an immigrant in this land of ours as much as the poorest baby who is brought here. The press has been bent on making us feel that the immigrant was a menace, a criminal, a danger to our institutions. I have seen thousands of them imprisoned during the war at Ellis Island. I know them and I know what the press says is not true. All races were there during the war, and you would not have known there was a war. They were all friends. They looked after each other tenderly.

"The immigrant is just like you or me. He wants the same things. He doesn't live in a tenement any longer than he has to. The population of New York's East Side changes every few years. The immigrant of today climbs up just as our immigrant ancestors of two or three hundred years ago did. Our ancestors had nature on their side. They were free because the land was free. The immigrant of today is without this aid. Somebody else owns the land and its resources.

Aliens Not Criminal

"The alien is no more criminal than a man born here, except so far as he is poorer, and has to struggle with harder conditions. I went to school for five years at Ellis Island, and I learned there that crime and misery are born of poverty. There is no difference in the amount of crime between the aliens and native Americans of the same economic class. I presided for five years over Cooper Union on the East Side in New York. I never heard anybody suggest the use of force, violence, assassination, or the overthrow of government. I am told Trotzky used to be there. I never saw him. When the wave of hysteria swept over the country, and the Department of Justice arrested thousands of people as dangerous conspirators, I asked an officer of the department if there was such a widespread conspiracy. He said: 'There are only six men in the United States suspected of being dangerous.' Yet some of these men were held in jail for believing in the Government ownership of railroads, for having in their possession one of Henry George's books, even for having a book by Assistant Secretary Post of the Department of Labor.

Aliens Abused

"Thirty-six violent and dangerous men were brought from Seattle—Russians, Poles, Slavs. I found that twenty-eight of them were English, Scotch, Irish and Scandinavian. I got in trouble for the heinous crime of saying that these men had a right to counsel and to writs of habeas corpus. They had taken testimony against one man, and arrested eighteen men on that testimony and kept them in jail eighteen months and two years. They had been put through the third degree, the steam-cure. I feel a sense of shame over all this because foreign settlements were often the first to go over the top in the Liberty loans, and in casualty lists from France there were 50 and 60 per cent. There is an impression, fostered by historians, that this country was settled chiefly by Anglo-Saxons who came here for the sake of political and religious freedom. It was the poverty of Europe that populated America.

Unions Americanize

"Are we sincere in wanting foreigners Americanized? Are we interested in making them want the things we want? An Italian stonemason who worked for me seven years ago for $2 a day, asks $10.50 now, and will not work Saturday afternoon. He says: 'I have joined the union. I got Americanized.' The trade union is the best means of Americanization there is. Mariano had risen just as we have been rising for 300 years. Do we really want that? Or do we call him a disturber?

"The Anglo-Saxon part of our stock protests because they are in danger of being overwhelmed by these south European races, but the protest would be more honest if we did not forbid birth control and permit raising of rents 500 per cent. This raising of rents strikes at the birth rate among the middle class. People who lived in seven rooms in New York a few years ago now live in three. Those who lived in small apartments on good streets then are being crowded into tenements. It is profiteering that endangers our stock.

Restrictions Are Recent

"The first restriction of immigration came toward the end of the nineteenth century, and was directed against the diseased, the criminal, and those likely to become a public charge. We rejected about one and a third out of every 100 immigrants. The first literacy test was adopted during the war to check immigration from southern and eastern Europe, where illiteracy is very high. An Italian official said: 'We shall educate our people to meet your test.' There are 15,000,000 people here today who were born in Europe; 35,000,000, one-third of the population were born in Europe or had one or both parents born in Europe. In New York 80 per cent. of the people are foreign-born or have foreign-born parents, in Cleveland 75 per cent., in Boston 74 per cent., in Pittsburgh 78 per cent., in Chicago 78 per cent. The Dillingham bill provides that immigration in one year shall not exceed 3 per cent. of the population of that nationality already here.

Exploiters Violate Laws

"The contention of organized labor that the alien lowers the standard of wages is only partly true. Employers in the past, particularly mine owners, have worked with steamship companies to bring over foreigners and have them shipped directly to the mines and put to work under conditions which are practically those of slavery. In spite of laws against it, it is said something like this is still done in West Virginia. But the alien is not necessarily a scab. If we really want to Americanize the newcomers, we could do much more for him than we do, and he could do much more for us than we permit him to do.

Immigration a Land Problem

"America has thirty-three people to the square mile, and more varied resources than the British Empire. In Denmark, the most prosperous, democratic, contented, the happiest country known, there are 191 people to the square mile. Belgium has 671 to the square mile. But while one-fourth of our land is held in great estates, and 40 per cent. of it is cultivated by tenant farmers, we cannot provide for the population which we ought to be able to provide for. With free land we might support a billion people.

"Real democracy involves access to the land and to the resources of the nation, the dedication of banking and credit to the producing classes rather than to the exploiting classes.

"The Government must control the railroads. The Government must control credit. The bankers who now control it are uncrowned kings. America has $54,000,000,000 in credit resources, yet the farmers are famished for credit to buy tools; people with no resources but their talents cannot get credit; homebuilders cannot get it. The banks don't use their money. They use yours. The bankers say they have so much surplus wealth they have to invest it in other countries. There is no such thing as surplus wealth in a country so long as one person in that country lives in a tenement, so long as people want land, and the land not open to them, so long as there are men hungry for jobs and not able to make a living from them. Surplus wealth means imperialism, a big army, a big navy, and our boys in Mexico and Santo Domingo. The reason there is not enough for the people at home and for many more is because more profits can be made by using wealth that belongs to us to exploit people elsewhere. We must have cooperative banks. The finest bank in Denmark is co-operative. We must dethrone private control of credit and turn it to the people's use.

"Any interference with the free movement of people is distasteful, but we are in for an era of restricted immigration. The Dillingham bill has the advantage of not discriminating against any race or nationality."

BRITISH LABOR SITUATION

The number of unemployed in the London district increased greatly during January. Exclusive of short-time workers, there were 158,764 unemployed on the live registers of the employment exchanges in the London County Council area on January 28, 1921. Many factories and small workshops have closed or are working short hours. In the districts near the docks the situation is especially acute as the movement of vessels and freight has fallen off greatly.

The Lord Mayor of London and the mayors of the 28 metropolitan boroughs are making a joint appeal for the unemployed, especially for the ex-service men, and many boroughs are, in addition, making separate collections of money, food and clothing. In practically all sections of the city relief work has been undertaken, particularly road repair. In some cases part of the cost of this is met by grants from the Ministry of Transport; in others the whole cost is met from local taxes.

The Government has for some time been urging the building trades to absorb at least 50,000 ex-service men in the industry, but the trades have finally and definitely refused to do this. In expectation of such refusal the Government has prepared a plan for the employment of these men on house-building. It is stated that this plan is to build houses of concrete blocks, and that comparatively unskilled labor can be used in such building. The co-operation of the master builders must, however, be secured and this is now being asked for.

A joint committee appointed by the Parliamentary Committee of the Trades Union Congress and the Labor Party executive has issued a report recommending:

"That persons for whom no work is available shall be entitled to maintenance, which, including benefits under the unemployment insurance act, shall be at least 40s. ($9.73) per week for each householder and 24s. ($5.84) for each single man or woman over the age of 18, with additional allowances for dependents."

Tin Mines Close—Wage Reductions

The slump in the price of tin has caused the closing down of the tin mines in Cornwall. The last of these to continue operations finally suspended on February 12, 1921.

The decrease in coal output during January will result in the reduction of miners' wages from February 1 by 2s. per shift in the case of adults, 1s. for youths, and 9d. per shift for boys.

The Dundee employers in the jute trade have intimated to the Jute Trade Board that they will present a proposal to reduce wages by 25 per cent. The majority of the jute mills are working only three days in each week.

"When we consider that labor is the producer of all wealth, the creator of all values, is it not strange that labor should experience difficulty in finding employment?"—Henry George.

NEW DIESEL LINE

The Holland-American Line and Royal Mail Packet Company have determined upon placing six new motorships, carrying freight only, in the trade between the North Pacific and Europe, supplementing the three coal-burning steamers now employed in this run. The nine vessels will maintain fortnightly service.

The first of these motorships, of which the name has not been definitely learned, is expected to sail from Europe next month. The Holland-American Line is to supply three of the new vessels, and the Royal Mail Steam Packet an equal number. There will be no segregation of the joint service.

The new motorships are vessels of 15,000 tons deadweight, propelled by Diesel engines. They have space for 1500 tons of refrigerated products, almost double the refrigerating capacity of the three steamers now operated on the line. Large consignments of apples have been taken by these steamers since the service was inaugurated, and the last one to depart picked up heavy shipments of oranges and lemons at San Pedro. The steamer Moerdyk, enroute north from the Panama Canal, will load 10,000 cases of oranges on the return trip. According to De Lancy, the refrigerating facilities on these vessels form the most important factor in the success of this service. Herring and Holland bulbs offer in considerable quantities from Europe for this coast.

The inauguration of passenger service is still under consideration, DeLancy said, and it is not likely to be started this year. The vessels intended for the passenger trade will be genuine liners, with accommodations for large numbers of passengers in all three classes, and giving the Pacific Coast the first service of this kind to Europe.

CANADIAN IMMIGRATION

The total immigration into Canada from 64 different countries in 1920 was 147,502; 98,636 of these immigrants entering by way of the ocean ports and 48,866 by way of the United States. These figures are a decided increase over the 1919 total (117,565) and over the number (65,565) entering Canada by way of the ocean ports, but fall below the number of immigrants (52,000) entering by way of the United States. Immigrants from European countries in 1920 included 41,201 men, 38,424 women, and 9,011 children under 14 years of age; from the United States, 28,285 men, 11,352 women, and 9,229 children under 14 years of age.

The majority of the immigrants who came to Canada in 1920 settled in Ontario; the figures indicate that Ontario's population was increased by 48,664 through European immigration and by 13,299 through immigration from United States last year. A total of 19,483 immigrants settled in Quebec, 13,013 in Manitoba, 13,643 in Saskatchewan, 18,484 in Alberta, and 14,136 in British Columbia. The States that contributed largely to the number coming to Canada were: Michigan, 7,583; Washington, 4,055; Minnesota, 3,092; Montana, 2,780; Massachusetts, 3,820; Dakotas, 3,390; Illinois, 2,203; Ohio, 1,229; Iowa, 1,189.

LAYING THEM OFF

Mikey Fitzgerald worked for a big company and had worked for them for a long time, through prosperity and depression, through good times and bad. A good many of the other employes came to depend on Mikey's judgment and predictions. Last week they were discussing the situation at the plant and they asked Mikey what he thought about it.

"Last night," answered Mikey, "I had a dream. I dreamed that the Big Boss croaked and they were makin' preparations for a grand funeral. Of course, they had big bugs for the honorary pallbearers, but they selected six huskies from the mixing floor to carry the corpse.

"After the undertaker had inspected to see that they had washed the backs of their necks and warned them not to spit on their hands before graspin' the silver handles, he served out the white cotton gloves and led them into the hall where the corpse was lyin' in state.

"Just as they lifted the fine mahogany coffin off the trestles, the Big Boss shoved back the glass plate and sat up.

" 'Who are these six men,' he asked in a voice tremblin' with rage. 'Sure you know them all,' says the undertaker. 'There's Denny Shea and Patsey Dolan and Emmett Dalton and Tony Mahaíka and Corney Kinsella and the Greek Wop. They're your pallbearers.' 'Four is enough,' answers the Big Boss, 'Lay two of them off.' "

Mikey's dream wised the bunch that not even a pallbearer is immune from a lay-off. Neither are you. It does not necessarily have to come from the boss, either. Sickness, or bad luck or old age or some other misfortune may take you off the payroll at least temporarily.

There is only one way to provide against a lay-off. That is to be prepared for it by having a cash reserve where you can get it when you need it. Scores of thousands of union men have got them. And they got them by putting aside a few dollars every week in $1 Treasury Savings Stamps and in Treasury Savings Certificates. Anyone can get one that way, safely and easily and without deprivation or hardship.

It's never too late to start. One dollar when you have got a lay-off is worth ten when you have a job.

DISARMAMENT?

Details of an entirely new type of seaplane which can both fly and cruise as a warship have been made public at London, England. Two of these ships are being built for the British Air Ministry. The vessels are said to be much like small ships with wings added. They are larger and stronger than any sea-going aircraft yet constructed, capable of riding the roughest waves, and each will carry a crew of seven, with emplacements for five machine guns.

They will be capable of joining in all naval maneuvers without a parent vessel, operating from a sea base just as the submarine does.

I am a great friend to public amusements; for they keep people from vice.—Sam'l Johnson.

Weekly News Letter

Contributed by the American Federation of Labor

Ingenious Propaganda

In the story headed "What the Cables Say" is the regulation anti-union story printed in American newspapers with a London date. In the story, "What the Facts Are," is a compilation from Government statements, from the London press and from English trade union publications.

Attention is called to the propagandist's "clever" manner of first spreading the poison that labor is responsible for much of the unemployment, and then inferring that "the causes of the present crisis" are unknown.

What the Cables Say

One of the chief bones of contention between the Government and the trade unions is the persistent refusal of the builders to permit dilution of skilled labor by employment of unskilled former service men. There is not an unemployed bricklayer in the country and work could immediately be found for 100,000 men, resulting in employment being provided for painters, plumbers, laborers, etc. In the face of these facts the 50,000 former service men are forced to remain idle.

The tendency here for some time has been to regard every trade as a close preserve.

Whatever the causes, the present crisis is causing widespread misery in the country and the out-of-work donations and other Government doles are generally looked upon as merely palliative.

What the Facts Are

The building craftsmen refused to dilute their membership by the admission of ex-service men on the ground that this was no solution to the unemployed problem. The Government offered the unions £5 for every ex-service man admitted. The unionists showed that this meant that those of their number who were now working would be laid off to give employment to others. On a referendum conducted by the National Federation of Building Trades the plan was rejected by a vote of 310,000 to 2,500. Among those voting were approximately 60,000 ex-service men who are members of the building unions.

The Government has failed to present any constructive remedy for the unemployed problem, and its subsidy scheme is laughed at by the unionists, who charge its sponsors with other purposes.

Set Perilous Precedent

By abrogating an agreement entered into with the Government and their employes, the meat packers have set a perilous precedent, says the "Butcher Workman."

"The packers have disillusioned not only the millions dependent upon a livelihood in the packing industry as to their word of honor and their respect for an agreement with the Government and the workers in the packing plants, but they have recorded themselves in favor of a discouraging disregard for moral soundness.

"It is a dangerous precedent that should not be tolerated to preserve the morale and the welfare of the American people."

The "Butcher Workman" compares the packers' attitude to their vigorous insistence that the contract be adhered to when a handful of workers disregarded it several months ago.

The union at that time secured enforcement of the contract by the threat of revoking the charter of the strikers. The packers favored the contract then, but not now, when an industrial depression is on.

Defend the Schools

A committee of the New York Bar Association denounces legislation pending in the State assembly intended to force Americanization in the public schools. Public money may be withheld from any school district where the provisions of the act are not carried out, and the Commissioner of Education may revoke the license of teachers. The lawyers make this comment on the proposal:

"This bill is an example of a type of legislation frequently introduced on the assumption that good morals, wisdom and sound judgment can be inculcated by statutory regulation prescribing in sonorous words conditions which are to be complied with in order to secure a desired result, but which cannot be carried out because after all they remain loud-sounding phrases. The true spirit of Americanism is the outgrowth of good sense, good judgment and love for our institutions. It cannot be stimulated by Prussianizing our school system."

Labor Spies Destructive

Private detectives are "strikebreakers, spies and general trouble makers," declared Samuel Gompers, president of the A. F. of L., at a legislative hearing on labor spy activities.

"William J. Burns, the detective, has himself said there are no greater scoundrels outside of jails than private detectives, and he should know," said the trade union executive.

Hugh Frayne, general organizer of the A. F. of L., cited instances where strikes were fomented by these labor spies.

Secretary Kehoe of the New York Central Trades and Labor Council spoke along the same line as Organizer Frayne.

Oppose Adverse Publicity

Emplying interests in the State of California are opposing labor's proposal that every article of merchandise offered for sale be stamped with the cost price, so the purchaser may compare that with the amount he is asked to pay.

The employers insist, however, that labor's living costs be figured down to the last fraction of a cent and that this information be given the widest publicity.

But objection is raised when labor suggests that these employers be compelled to make public not what it costs them to live, but what their goods cost them.

Company Houses Pay

In a study of housing of employes made by the United States Bureau of Labor statistics, it is stated that "reports from

World's Workers

Recent reports of the Central Federal Employment Exchange of Switzerland reveal continued industrial depression. The glass, cellulose and chocolate industries have been recently affected by a serious condition of unemployment.

According to returns furnished for the Central Employment Department of France, unemployment in that country is on the increase. Seven departmental and fifty-nine municipal unemployment funds were in operation at the end of January. The total number of persons in receipt of out-of-work donation was 45,257.

According to a recent consular report, during the fiscal year 1919-1920, strikes in Australia resulted in a loss of £3,500,000 in wages to the workers, and considerable loss and inconvenience to the country generally. Late in the year labor troubles were rife and resulted in an almost complete cessation of interstate shipping. The industries of all States, with the exception of New South Wales, suffered severely through shortage of coal supplies for electricity. Many factories were forced to close, and railways ran curtailed services.

The rates of out-of-work donation paid by the State to unemployed persons in Switzerland are laid down in the decree of the Federal Council of October 29, 1919. In order to permit of the payment of a special winter grant, a further decree was issued by the Council December 31, 1920, which authorized the cantonal governments to increase the rates of donation by 20 per cent., for the period from January 1, to April 2, 1921. Owing to the present industrial situation an extension to the winter grant may be considered necessary.

The National Federation of Building Trades of Great Britain has rejected the Government's unemployed remedy by a vote of 310,000 to 2,500. The Government proposed to advance the unions £5 for every ex-service man admitted to membership. The overwhelming rejection of this plan included 50,000 votes cast by union ex-service men. The unionists showed that there are 50,000 building tradesmen unemployed and there can be no solution of the unemployed problem by discharging a worker and filling his place with an out-of-work. The plan was supported by elements who are more interested in weakening the unions, and who hoped this could be accomplished by appealing to patriotism.

At midnight March 31 all work ceased in the coal mines of England which involved approximately 1,250,000 miners. Latest reports are to the effect that six of the mines have been left to the mercy of inrushing waters by strike of the pumpmen, and unless appeals of the operators for assistance are heeded many more mines will be permanently ruined. In previous strikes of this character the workers have always interested themselves in preservation of operators' property to the extent of manning the pumps, but inasmuch as their main contentions have never been definitely met they are pursuing another line of action at this time. Apprehension is felt that the Railwaymen and Transport workers may be tempted to strike in sympathy with the miners, with whom they are partners in the labor dispute.

SEAMEN, YOUR RIGHTS AND DUTIES UNDER THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES, YOUR RIGHT TO WAGES, OVERTIME, WORKING HOURS, SALVAGE, COMPENSATION IN CASE OF PERSONAL INJURY, COMPENSATION IN CASE OF NEGLECT TO TREAT FOR INJURIES RECEIVED OR ILLNESS, WHAT CONSTITUTES WRONGFUL DISCHARGE, WHAT IS MUTINY, QUESTIONS OF DISCIPLINE.

If you are an American or want to be one, or if you don't know, get Axtell's book and find out what America stands for today. What are you doing to see that equal opportunity to each Citizen of the United States in this great land, is preserved? The Seaman's Act, the Emancipation Act of seamen, a bloodless victory for the organization of workers, freeing more men than the Civil War of 1865 and without bloodshed, is fully explained in this book. Postpaid retail price, $1.00.

Silas B. Axtell, author of the book, has been attorney for the International Seamen's Union, Eastern & Gulf Sailors' Association, Marine Cooks & Stewards' Association, Marine Firemen & Oilers' Association and for seamen of the world, of all countries and nationalities for twelve years; has probably argued, tried and appealed more cases for seamen than any other single attorney in the United States.

You Want the Truth

This year there will be stirring times in the Nation. Under government censorship it is increasingly difficult for the average man to get the real meaning of the social and political movements of the day.

LA FOLLETTE'S MAGAZINE

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong—on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

Pacific Coast Marine

The intercoastal eastbound conference has decided the rate on hemp from this Coast to the Atlantic is to be 70 cents per hundred weight instead of 75 cents.

Captain John Edwardson has claimed possession of the schooner "Zampa" to protect wages due himself and crew, according to advices from Honolulu. En route from Apia to San Francisco, the schooner put into Honolulu February 28, leaking.

Presaging a resumption in export trade from California, the Chamber of Commerce reports that the final week in March saw the shipment from San Francisco of $600,000 worth of California products. The freighter "Steel Worker" left for the East Coast with half a million dollars' worth of canned fruit and salmon. This shipment helps the packers to clean up their 1920 pack and prepare for the coming season.

Six hundred tons of ammunition for the Navy yards at Mare Island and Bremerton formed part of the large cargo of the steamer "Cape Henry," Captain C. J. Bakman, of the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Company, which is discharging freight from the East coast at Pier 35, San Francisco. Two hundred tons of Navy clothing are also included in the lot. Drydocking of the vessel will not be required for the repairs to one of the boilers, which was wrecked at San Pedro.

With the arrival at San Francisco of the "Alaska Maru" with 4,200 tons of freight from Oriental ports for account of McCormick and McPherson, local shipping interests expressed confidence that the bottom of the trade slump had been reached and that there would be a continued improvement from now on. The "Alaska Maru" made the run in fifty-three days from Singapore and twenty-two days from Yokohama. Eight hundred tons of the cargo is for local firms, the remainder for the Atlantic.

The report to the marine department of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce that the Italian steamer "Vittoria" was loaded with wheat when she put into Adelaide in a leaking condition, bound from Melbourne to Puget Sound, has caused considerable comment in shipping circles. Unless the report of the cargo is in error, Australia is sending wheat into one of the greatest wheat-producing and exporting areas in the United States. Australian wheat was shipped to San Francisco during the war, and there has been speculation as to whether there would be an attempt to compete with the American growers in peace times.

Equipped with a jury rudder, which had been used more than half way across the Pacific, the schooner "Fred J. Wood," Captain Harry Ashbury, made port recently with a cargo of 700 tons of copra from the Solomon Islands. Captain Ashbury reported that on February 18, thirty-five days out, a terrific hurricane was encountered. The rudder, lifeboats, part of the sails and deckgear, were carried away. The storm continued with great violence for nine days, and it was two days later before it was possible to rig a jury rudder. In the meantime, a sea anchor had to hold the ship's head into the wind, and oil was used on the surface of the sea.

The first intimation that the charter market was feeling the impetus which has been registered in general freights came recently in the announcement that a Shipping Board steamer had been chartered at 70 shillings to carry grain from Portland to the United Kingdom for April loading. The going rate in recent weeks has been 55 shillings, although the San Francisco office of the Shipping Board has been quoting 70 shillings against Seattle's 55. Apparently a higher authority has stepped in and ruled that Seattle should revise its rate to conform with that of San Francisco. At any rate, shipping men regard the fixture at 70 shillings as a welcome omen of recovery in full cargo rates, indicating that foreign vessels are not bidding as low as they have been.

A shipment of merchandise is now en route from Cincinnati to San Francisco via water. Arrival of the shipment will mark the first time in commercial history that goods have been dispatched from the Ohio city to San Francisco by the all-water route. The goods were dispatched from Cincinnati on the Ohio River steamer "Queen City," the route being down the Ohio and the Mississippi to New Orleans, thence across the gulf and through the Panama Canal to the Pacific. It is stated that great quantities of goods will now be moved from Eastern river ports by all-water shipment to San Francisco, due to the advantage of the low rates as against the rail charges. The water rate is $2.35 per hundred, as against a $4 rail rate.

Immigration officials at San Francisco have been detecting an average of fifteen alien crewmen who have illegally shipped on each coastwise vessel on the Atlantic seaboard, and the head tax of $8 collected in these cases is netting about $50 a day. The foreigners, in the majority of cases, have arrived in this country from foreign ports, and either paid off or deserted. They have obtained passports as seamen for foreign deep-water vessels, and unlawfully use these passports for the intercoastal steamers. When caught, they are required to pay the $8 head tax for entry into the United States, and eight cents additional for the remittance by money order to the port at which they originally landed.

Announcement has been made of a new service to be conducted in conjunction with the South American route of the General Steamship Corporation. Two of the Shipping Board steamers now employed in the South American run will be diverted to the new route, and the first of these, the steamer "Wallingford," is scheduled to depart on the initial trip from San Francisco, April 21. Ports of call will be Mazatlan, Manzanillo, Salina Cruz, Champerico, San Jose de Guatemala, Acajutla, La Union, Corinto, Puntarenas, Balboa, Buenaventura and Quayaquil. Buenaventura has been the northernmost port of call on the southern end of the South American line, and hereafter the South American boats will trade from Guayaquil south.

Considerable mystery surrounds the sinking of the S. S. "Governor" of the Pacific Coast Company, which foundered, after a collision with the "West Hartland," in twenty-five fathoms of water, three-quarters of a mile northeast of Point Wilson, Strait of Juan de Fuca. The vessel remained afloat for one hour and eleven minutes after she had been struck by the freighter and sunk at 1:15 a. m. April 1. An inquiry which was called to determine responsibility for the accident was held behind closed doors, and it is reported that a sweeping investigation has been ordered by U. S. District Attorney R. C. Saunders. According to check made by the operators of the "Governor," seven passengers and three members of the crew lost their lives in the accident. The "Governor," owned by the Pacific Steamship Company, left Victoria, B. C., at 9:30 p. m., March 31, and had just cleared Port Townsend on the final leg to Seattle when the collision occurred. The "West Hartland," a Shipping Board vessel, operated by the Pacific Steamship Company, was en route from Victoria to Bombay and was headed for Port Townsend for final clearance papers.

A peculiar situation has arisen since the issuance of a recent order putting in effect the coastwise regulations which bar foreign vessels from purely domestic trade and which had been suspended insofar as it concerned passenger travel between Honolulu and the mainland. As it now stands, foreign liners, such as the Japanese, are able to carry passengers from Honolulu to San Francisco while two American steamers are barred. Passengers may still be carried on foreign vessels from Honolulu to San Francisco when special permission is granted because of lack of space on American steamers. Since the congestion in Hawaii is still very bad, these permissions are being granted in large numbers. The law specifies "foreign vessels," however, and at the same time eliminates American vessels of which the stock is less than 75 per cent. American-owned. This provision bars the American liners "China" and "Nanking" of the China Mail Steamship Company, but the British liner "Nile" of the same firm meets the qualifications as a foreign vessel and is able to take passengers from Honolulu, as do the Japanese steamers.

Wireless fog warnings may be the next development in San Francisco harbor. It is understood that local steamship men and persons allied with the Harbor Commission have had under consideration a plan to place three wireless stations at various points in the harbor entrance. The fog signal is a new invention which is now being tried out in the East with considerable success. It works in conjunction with the radio compass, which instrument has been used for some time, and which gives mariners the direction from which wireless signals come. The wireless for warning stations may be installed through the lighthouse service if they are deemed practicable. Those being used in the East have a 1000-meter wave length. The message or warnings are picked up by captains entering the harbor. With the aid of the radio compass they can tell from which direction the warnings come. By taking the warnings from all three stations (the smallest number with which the system can work) they can figure out their exact position on a chart without having to depend upon the fog horn or bell buoy. They can work their radio compasses without the aid of an expert radio man. It is understood that the messages from the signals are sent out automatically and that there is no need for a licensed operator at any of the warning stations.

A CHALLENGE ACCEPTED

Reconstruction appears to be well under way; but how different is to be the readjustment to that which was generally conceived would result, or for which the great war was proclaimed to have been fought. Those who believed that establishment of Democracy would ensue are being rudely awakened to realization of the fact that the ideal is being swept aside by an industrial despotism which is unrestrained in its ruthlessness.

News that the armistice was sealed had barely time to be realized before shipyard workers and other metal trades were made the victims of an unparalleled breach of faith which was deliberate and brutal. As a reward for their wartime exertions the exploited steelworkers were made to understand that they could not hope to ameliorate their distressful conditions, or to exercise even their commonest guaranteed constitutional rights. This was followed by putting into motion against the workers the most effective weapon used previously against the common enemy. A campaign of propaganda with all its ramifications and effects was projected against the organized labor movement. The plot for annihilation of unions and establishment of the "open shop" "American plan" was put into immediate operation. Labor organizations were vigorously attacked, one after another, from every angle and by all predatory interests alike. Intolerance has been followed by hate and every man or woman with independent ideas are being made the victims of violent attack. One after another organization of labor have been subjected to vicious onslaught until the very existence of the American labor movement is at stake, while freedom of the masses is placed in jeopardy. Everywhere throughout the industrial world the workers have been compelled to resist cuts in wages, additions to working hours, and imposition of more exacting terms for their labor, due to the fact that the wave of aggression has swept forward until nearly every industry has been affected.

The seamen's organizations have at last been brought directly under the batteries of hostile forces which reveal a disposition to destroy to the uttermost. They would take from us our birthright as freemen, deprive us of our constitutional rights and subjugate the seamen once more to the status of medieval serfdom. The big shipowning and operating interests have signally failed to eliminate in its entirety the Seamen's Act, therefore they intend to use the full force of their economic power in their efforts to destroy our organizations and crush us as individuals. There is every evidence that the struggle is in its inception. The seamen have persistently endeavored to maintain friendly relations with their employers and, when successful, the result has been beneficial to all concerned. Now, however, the anti-labor drive engulfs our friends with our enemies and a breach is developing in the harmony of our mutual activities.

The issue must be fairly and squarely confronted. An attempt to evade would be cowardly; submission spells degradation of our calling as seamen; it would prove us as unworthy to bear the name. To submit to the unjust demands and predatory desires of big business as revealed in its attack on labor would place us upon a plane, unfit to be free, worthy only of servitude.

The banner of conquest and rapine has been flung to the breeze by commercial pirates and we are compelled—even as we hope to be called worthy of bearing the name of freemen—to accept the challenge. As men and as seamen we will protect our liberties and maintain our rights in every corner of the seven seas. Neither can we remain content with present day conditions, but we must advance and, in the words of the poet, go ever on, and on, and on.

FASHIONABLE SEAMEN

Denizens of waterfront localities in many ports of the world are just beginning to realize that the United States is very much on the map, and they also sit up and take notice of certain "innocents abroad," as represented by the American merchant seamen.

Since the armistice Holland has had an opportunity to become acquainted with some of the people from out the West. That they have been observing can be gathered from the following press comment from Amsterdam:

"The growth of the American merchant marine has brought a new factor, the white-collared, 'snappily' dressed, debonair American sailor, to the Schiedamsche dyke, Rotterdam's 'Barbary Coast.'

"While the French, Dutch, English and others who patronize these resorts usually are dressed in colored flannel shirts, rough suits and unpolished shoes, most of the Americans, as soon as they get shore leave, don suits smacking more of the college boy than the sailor, white stiff collars, belted overcoats, fashionable shoes and the characteristically American soft felt hat.

"American diplomatic and consular authorities in Holland are very much interested in efforts to provide some substitute for 'the dyke.' Dance hall, saloon, dance hall, saloon, alternate in almost unbroken monotony for several blocks on Schiedamsche dyke. In all of them the chief spenders appear to be American seamen.

"The officials who are seeking some sort of a substitute for the dyke's attractions say that most of the sailors would go elsewhere if they had a chance.

"'But it must not be a namby-pamby resort,' one official said. 'Jack wants music and dancing and beer, as well as reading material and a place to loaf, when he gets ashore.'

"It was on the Schiedamsche dyke that a number of American seamen were robbed of their identity cards by Bolshevik agents, who used them to get into America."

With the present rate of exchange operating in their favor and protected by certain provisions of the Seamen's Act, it is not surprising that the American desire to "show 'em a good time" is manifested by some of the younger generation of merchant seamen. In addition when it comes to style, the new movie fashions have all others backed off the board. With the split back coat and belt, marline spike shoes, up-to-date shirts, collars and ties; and with a rakish tilt to fedora, velour, or panama hat, the latest fashion in seamen is well calculated to knock 'em dead along the dyke or any other old place.

Keep her up, boys! the fashion standards of our new merchant marine must be maintained, and Parisian boulevardiers will eventually turn green with envy.

Some of us can still remember the good old days, when an Oxford shirt, cheese-cutter cap, boardinghouse dungarees, and brogans; reinforced with facial adornments of scars and black eyes, constituted the average seaman's claim to distinction.

EUREKA "LABOR NEWS" WINS

Notwithstanding the fact that Eureka is situated in the realm over which the Hammond open-shoppers claim supremacy, the trade unionists of that energetic little port are revealing a spirit which never fails to achieve results.

Much credit for this condition is due to the vigorous and able fight conducted by the Eureka "Labor News."

This splendid little labor paper has successfully defended its position, and that of the labor movement generally, against the most insidious aggression. Their opponents are the most ruthless anti-labor forces in Northern California, and of such determination as to require the utmost vigilance to meet.

In successfully combating the attacks of organized greed, as represented by open-shop employers of Humboldt County, the Eureka "Labor News" serves organized labor in a manner that is of great benefit to the workers, and credit to the labor press.

Silver discoveries have recently been made in the Upper Stewart river country, some 150 miles west of Dawson City, reports Consul Wakefield of Prince Rupert, British Columbia. The area is approximately 25 miles long and 10 miles wide, and is believed to contain silver lead deposits throughout its entire extent. Within this area there are eight hills in which silver has already been discovered. Several assays from different points have netted well over $200 per ton, while some have reached $500 per ton.

CHEAP LABOR MENACE

Dean Inge, a well known cleric of London, known as "Gloomy Dean," predicts that cheap labor may seal the doom of the white race. He declares that the Japanese had tolerated a labor system no better than that of England 100 years ago. Under a regime of peace, free trade and unrestricted emigration, the colored race would outwork, underlive and eventually exterminate the whites.

The abolition of war and the establishment of a league to secure justice and equality of treatment for all nations would seal the doom of the white laborer, he prophesied.

The Dean was of the opinion that the British social order was on the verge of bankruptcy and as conditions become more unfavorable to enterprise capital and business ability would be transferred to the economically strong countries.

The contention that justice and equality for all nations would seal the doom of the white laborer seems to be well-founded. The tendency to degrade the white by forcing him into industrial competition with the very prolific yellow races is one of the crowning infamies now preached by many shortsighted statesmen, financiers and profiteers throughout the civilized world. These exploiters have concern only for profits and security for the same, and only give consideration to white labor when it becomes necessary to sacrifice him and his kind to the moloch of war in defense of their interests. At such times the worker is treated with consideration, and even pampered to a certain degree, but as soon as the danger cloud has passed the established system of exploitation and degredation goes merrily on. However, we cannot view the situation with the same pessimism as "Gloomy Dean." The workers have arrived at a stage where they intend to be master of their own destinies. They will never submit to forced competition on a basis of wage, and standard of living with the Oriental. Such a condition could only result in elimination of the whites, therefore perpetuation of the race depends upon the worker. Inasmuch as race preservation is obviously the first law of nature, arrogant employers and merciless exploiters would do well to take heed. They should not attempt to interfere with one of nature's laws. The white race shall be preserved, notwithstanding the apparent world-wide conspiracy to degrade, and when the tendency to endanger becomes international the tendency to protect must inevitably follow. The internationalization of labor is assured by international commercialism.

SOLIDARITY

The last regular meeting at headquarters was encouraging and unique in the history of a labor union. It was one of the best attended for many months and the regular routine business went like the proverbial clockworks. There were several matters of importance requiring serious attention, and the manner in which members met the situation and conducted affairs bids fair for success in any of the union's undertakings.

The aspect of the meeting, which can be termed unique, was the fact that solidarity of the membership was expressed in a most striking manner. In a vote of approximately five hundred men, which was taken by the method of a secret ballot, the membership were all of one mind; the determination was unanimous, not one single vote was recorded adversely. The Sailors' Union of the Pacific has always been proud and sometimes boastful of the strength of its morale, and this exhibition of solidarity in the ranks sustains right to a certain amount of self-congratulation.

HOGS

According to a recent consular report from Prague, the raising of hogs in Czechoslovakia is in a flourishing condition. At a recent economic conference it was estimated that there are 5,000,000 hogs in the country, and their feeding requires an amount of cereals equal to the quantity of cereals imported from abroad.

The Czechoslovak hog may be quite a factor, but we can boast a number of the genus sus in this country whose staple article of diet is profits, of which the terrestrial globe does not contain sufficient to appease the smallest appetite of one of them.

BRITISH WAGES AND H. C. L.

The British Ministry of Labor has just published its index figures of the cost of living at the end of January, placing the average level of retail prices of all commodities on February 1, 1921, at 151 per cent above July, 1914, as compared with 165 per cent above on January 1, 1921. The decrease during January was mainly due to reductions in the prices of several of the principal articles of food and in prices of clothing.

Wages in various trades are automatically affected by changes in the index figures, the Daily Mail of February 18 giving the following list:

Railways.—Decrease of 1s. a week for every fall of 5 points. Rates to be revised in March.

Enginemen and firemen, wool-textile industry.—Reduction of 3s. 7½d. a week for each drop of 10 points.

Bleaching, dyeing and printing (Lancashire, Derby, Cheshire and Scotland).—Fall of 1 per cent for every 1-point fall in cost of living.

Packers and makers-up, Manchester.—Fall of 3.28d. for men and 1.68d. for women for every 1-point drop.

Carpet makers.—Drop of 10 per cent when figure falls 10 points.

Silk manufacture.—Reduction of 2s. a week for men, 1s. 6d. for women and 1s. for juniors for every 10-point drop.

Silver and allied trades (London).—Reduction of 1d. per hour for every fall of 10 points.

Bedstead making.—Fall of 2s. a week for every 10 points.

Government employes. — Rates revised every four months until March 1, then every six months, the average index figure for the period being the basis of new rates.

Police.—Bonus to be assessed on April 1, the average index figure for previous six months forming the new basis.

In many trades not affected by this sliding scale conferences are going on between employers and workmen and some trades have already decided on reductions. The Shipbuilding Employers' Federation is proposing to ask workmen to accept a 25 per cent reduction.

OFFICIAL

SAILORS' UNION OF THE PACIFIC

Headquarters, San Francisco, Cal., April 4, 1921.

Regular weekly meeting came to order at 7 p. m., Ed. Andersen presiding. Secretary reported shipping dull; members ashore plentiful. Quarterly Finance Committee delivered a report stating the Union's account for the past three months correct. The Collector of Internal Revenue has sent in a notification stating that income tax clearance, together with passport, is needed when signing on a voyage to foreign countries. It is necessary to bring your passport with you when obtaining the above tax clearance.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

Editor Seamen's Journal:—Under the caption "U. S. Merchant Marine Due Better Support From U. S. Shippers," the Galveston Daily News of recent date carried a statement by Mr. C. H. Marshall, representative of the U. S. Shipping Board. The subject should be of interest to seamen, due to the fact that unemployment amongst Marine workers is a natural result of the policy complained of by Mr. C. H. Marshall.

JAMES MURRAY,
Galveston, Texas.

The statement follows:

"The time has now arrived for Texas and the American public to decide whether or not they want an American merchant marine, and if they do it is up to them to support it to the fullest extent."

In this manner C. H. Marshall, local representative of the United States Shipping Board, sums up a statement showing that American shippers, with particular reference to those of the Southwest, are not giving to Shipping Board vessels a share of their business proportionate to the public investment represented and necessary for profitable operation of an American merchant marine. The statement is in line with indications from a number of sources that a critical stage has arrived in the life of this war-born institution, and that its fate rests with American exporters, who share with the rest of the public its perpetuation. It is an answer to what has been termed a wave of propaganda by foreign shipowning interests against the Shipping Board and its operations.

Contrasted with a forceful group of arguments on the necessity for an American merchant marine, Mr. Marshall has prepared a set of figures showing the heavy preponderance of American cargoes shipped in foreign bottoms. As an illustration, the total cotton movement to all ports from Galveston and Houston from August, 1920, to February, 1921, was 2,065,563 bales, of which foreign bottoms moved 1,475,506 and Shipping Board vessels only 557,999 bales. During the same period a total of 48,252,552 bushels of wheat was exported, of which the foreign lines moved 38,170,819 bushels, while the Shipping Board moved 9,720,877 bushels, the remainder going on individually owned American vessels.

Bringing the argument still closer home, Mr. Marshall declared that Shipping Board vessels during the last year left in Galveston the sum of $22,000,000 for supplies, repairs and other necessities. This sum is divided as follows: Wages, $6,000,000; stores and supplies, $2,500,000; fuel, $7,500,000; repairs, $1,500,000; stevedoring, $2,500,000; wharfage and shed hire, $2,000,000.

Following a natural policy, it is emphasized foreign ships make only emergency purchases on this side, leaving the bulk of the money derived from their operation in their own country. Had Shipping Board vessels enjoyed the majority of export business, Mr. Marshall pointed out, this sum would have been $60,000,000 or $80,000,000 to be disseminated throughout the country at large.

Percentage of Patronage

Month by month, the tabulation of cotton and grain moved in Shipping Board, foreign and individually owned vessels for the period named is as follows:

Totals	38,170,819	360,856	9,720,857

"Cotton exporters are asked to remember the assistance given the cotton, lumber and grain industries in the spring of 1919, when there were not sufficient foreign vessels to take care of American exports," Mr. Marshall said, "and the fact that immediately American ships were placed in operation, and that ocean freight rates were not charged on the basis of the market, but were put at a proper ethical basis to show a fair remuneration to the vessel.

American Money Financing

"It might not be amiss to mention that American money is financing our exports, and if the American people disregard their own merchant marine, which has cost the American people about $2,000,000,000 to build, and about $2,000,000,000 more to maintain, the federal reserve system might take a hand in the matter, and as a business policy might ask those people whose shipments they finance to assist their country at the same moment by using American ships. As a matter of information for cotton exporters, should say that it is to be regretted that the records show that the cotton industry gives a less proportion of its trade to the American ships than any other large industry of the country today.

"In other words, such large industries as lumber, rice and flour have been giving and are giving a majority of their business to American steamers."

Mr. Marshall stressed at length the manner in which the Shipping Board met the emergency created by the war and the lesson taught by that period in American commerce.

"The great war has proved to us the absolute necessity of a merchant marine as a naval auxiliary in time of war," he said. "Directly after the signing of the armistice there was a great shortage of ships and practically every interest in America appealed to the Shipping Board for ships to assist them in transporting their cotton, lumber, sulphur, cottonseed cake, cottonseed meal and many other raw products, together with the manufactured products, abroad. Great Britain, which to a large extent had formerly controlled this trade, was not in a position to release many of her merchant ships at this time to pick up her old trade. The Shipping Board came to the assistance of every concern in the United States and helped them out in this situation. The Shipping Board went even further, for the prevailing rates at that time were very high, and in order to assist the producers and the exporters it practically cut the then prevailing rates in half, showing conclusively that the Shipping Board was not trying to gouge the American public, but was trying to help them and at the same time operate its vessels without a loss."

Had to Train Men

Mr. Marshall also touched upon the enormity of the task of creating, since April, 1917, the fleet of 1,200 vessels owned by the Shipping Board, with the organization necessary to maintain and operate them.

"No one denies that many mistakes were made, but it was humanly impossible for such a gigantic task to have been performed without mistakes," he continued. "There were many errors in construction and it is true the officer and crew personnel was in many cases faulty, but we must remember that during this time America was not a maritime nation, and she did not have sufficient competent men to man her vessels. America had practically to start all over again and open sea service schools to train her officer personnel, both in the deck department and in the engine room department.

"All of us remember quite clearly the constant cry for ships and more ships. The result was that many were built in a great hurry. However, the ships that were built in the latter part of 1918 and 1919 are in nearly all respects just as good as the foreign ships."

As an instance of the comprehensive routings possible in Shipping Board vessels, Mr. Marshall cited the fact that regular service is maintained between Galveston and Texas City and the following ports: Liverpool, Havre, Bremen, Antwerp, Ghent, Barcelona, Genoa, Manchester, Rotterdam, London, Cuba and Porto Rico. There are also regular sailings of cattle boats between Galveston and the West Indies and service from Houston for Havre, Bremen and Hamburg. Beaumont has regular sailings to Tampico and Port Arthur a tanker service to the same port.

"What steamship company in the world today operates in as many routes as the Shipping Board?" Mr. Marshall asked. "Not one. Shippers have complained frequently about the delays encountered, the change of name of vessels carrying their products and also about the slowness in paying claims. These charges in many cases are true and would have been true of any other organization created as quickly as the Shipping Board was, but all of these deficiencies and weaknessess have been practically overcome, and this being true—all other conditions being equal, such as service and rates—certainly the American exporter should at least give the Shipping Board 50 per cent. of his shipments. The board does not ask for all of the business, but simply asks for what it thinks it has a right to demand, namely, 50 per cent. of all the exports from the United States."

Unless the American merchant marine is supported by Americans, he declared, it simply means that the taxpayers of America will be taxed that much more, as it has to be operated at a loss.

"While rates at the moment are low and practically no vessels can be operated at a profit," Mr. Marshall continued, "the American exporter can help to minimize the present losses of the board by giving it his wholesome support, and when rates become normal and attractive, by continuing his support, the board can operate its vessels at a profit."

Evidence that some classes of American industry are awake to the situation is offered in a recent resolution adopted by the miller's emergency defense committee, representing the entire milling industry of the United States, pledging itself to urge upon the milling industry the use, to the utmost of its ability, of American bottoms in the ocean transport of its products.

HOT AND COLD FISH

A press dispatch from Ketchikan, Alaska, relates a story which might fall receptive upon the ear of the King of Denmark. The report is as follows:

"What is declared by Captain Brunn and officers of the steamship 'Northwestern' to be the greatest fish tragedy ever enacted to human knowledge occurred at Klawak bay, Prince of Wales Island, January 30, when at one stroke more than 2,000,000,000 good-sized herring lost their lives.

"The crew eagerly related their remarkable experience of sailing through miles of the dead fish. According to those on board, Klawak bay was full of herring three days before the 'Northwestern' arrived, when a sudden freeze caught the fish in the narrow-necked harbor before they could escape to sea.

"When they were first noticed by George Bradovich, an employe of the Craig cannery, near Klawak, they had swarmed into the harbor in such numbers that those on top were forced out of the water. The freeze came with great suddenness and severity and about six inches of ice formed on the harbor. Millions of the herring at the entrance could be seen dumbly fighting to get out to sea before the enclosed waters were frozen.

"When the 'Northwestern' arrived the tide had receded, and for twenty to fifty feet on the beach, and several hundred feet out into the water, for a distance of three and one-half miles around the harbor lay frozen herring. The officers of the ship and the cannery foreman made careful measurements and found that the fish were tightly packed for an average depth of three feet.

"'It may sound like a fish story,' said Bradovich of the cannery, 'but the fact is that the greatest chance in the world for obtaining good, fresh fish without a stroke of work has been lost. For days a few people tried to put some of the herring away for the summer, and, unfortunately, the steamer could take none. The nearest Indians who would have appreciated the fish were 300 miles away.

"'The ship had the greatest difficulty in navigating out of the harbor at Klawak, as the propeller had to do the work of dessicator, and it barely made a knot an hour.'"

The foregoing brings to mind memories of a certain-old-time schooner captain, who was famous for the strength of his distinctive yarns. He was exceedingly fond of impressing members of his crew with his unlimited wisdom. If by chance he should have amongst his sailors an Alaska fisherman, his great delight was to show by vocal argument how little the fisherman knew about the habits of salmon, and the great knowledge of himself in regard to fish and fisheries of all kinds. As a matter of fact, the only time this worthy old salt ever saw a salmon caught was when he was lying barbound in one of the small rivers along the coast, and he observed some fishermen hauling in a drift.

Naturally, most of these narratives were released in the cabin of the schooner during meal hours. On one occasion the captain was in heated argument with a sailor who had some crawfish experience off the coast of California, and the former maintained that regular "Eastern lobsters with the big claws" would thrive along the Pacific coast as well as they do on the Atlantic. Giving final force to his contentions, he stated: "On one of my voyages as master of the schooner 'Fanny Adele,' while we were sailing before a strong ten-knot breeze in the Gulf of California, the vessel's headway suddenly slowed up, with the sails nearly pulling the masts out of her, and before we could ascertain the reason she nearly stopped. Looking forward, I saw all kinds of things swarming around the fok'sl head.

"My first thought was that I had been given the wrong brand of booze at Santa Rosalia, but on going forward, I noticed that the deck was swarming with live lobsters, and, believe me, some of them had claws as big as the flukes of the anchors. They killed the cat, crippled half the crew and chewed all the woodwork in reach before we managed to shovel the most of them overboard. Those decapods were so packed on top of the waters that the ship's headway piled them up in front of us until they actually come over the bows."

Some daring spirit amongst the crew ventured the remark that "lobsters usually amble pretty close to the bottom," whereat the captain exclaimed: "You don't have to believe me; ask the mate. It was him that called my attention to the fact that the sea for miles was bright red with the color of them."

Of course, such corroboration climaxed the argument, but to this day the second mate wonders why the old man got peeved when he made the remark that it was the first time he heard that the waters of the Gulf were that hot.

The first American merchant ship to enter Naples arrived in November, 1914. During the following year 11 American vessels cleared at that port. In 1919 there were 31 clearances, and during the year 1920 this was increased to 64. The cargoes from the United States during the past year were made up chiefly of coal and wheat or wheat products. It is learned that the discharge facilities at the port of Naples for coal and grain are quite good.

DOWN TO THE SEA

(By Eugene W. Simmonds.)

There's a certain place not far away
That's just hard by the sea;
Where the good ships lie along the quay,
And a myriad flags fly gallantly;
And a forest of masts, and stacks and booms,
May ever be seen from noon to noon.
Where the air is rent by the cargoes scent,
And departing ships on their voyage bent,
Make room for more from the Orient;
From the South Seas or the Occident.

Now every night just about twilight,
A certain lad would view this sight,
From his home upon the nearby height.
And his mind would wander miles afar,
Where no schools, and books, and teachers are;
Where the chores are done with a capstan bar,
And the guide post is a lonely star.
Where there's depths below and heights above,
And nothing else but a sailor's love,
For his ship, the sea, and the tropical grove;
Where the purple mullet and gold fish rove.

In this certain place, not far away,
There was a ship just down the bay.
A four-mast bark at rest she lay,
Ready to sail on the following day,
And this certain lad, who at heart was sad,
Bid good-by to home, and mother and dad
For this four-mast bark "Sir Galahad."

Around Cape Horn the ship sailed fast;
From west to east a 12-knot blast,
Until the Falkland Isles were past.
Then nothing but blue waters vast
On all four sides, the sky-blue dome,
The Galahad, and the great alone,
Ten thousand miles away from home,
And headed straight for the danger zone.

No doubt you know a four-mast bark,
For a torpedo is an easy mark.
To the U-boat gunner it's just a lark,
To sink a sailing ship in the dark.
But the Galahad lost not a man
As she on her beam's end did stand;
Because the wieldly sailors hand
Took to the boats and rowed for land.

Two hundred miles to land or more,
To Fastnet light on Erin's shore.
Two hundred miles the boys did row.
Good God! how that cold wind did blow;
In that grey-green sea called "Devil's Hole."
Four days those men were watching, waiting,
While heavy seas were breaking, swaying,
For rescue they were praying, praying;
Always hoping not dismaying.

Even a sail not theirs to command,
Nor food, nor drink to be had at hand;
A gradual thirst gripped that frozen band
Still an infinite distance from the nearest land.
Oh the hardships of that April cold,
Those shipwrecked sailors came to know.
Four days those wild waves tossed and rolled,
That lifeboat which would barely hold
Those men, who in four days grew old.

At length the horizon from out its fold
Came a ship, to them, more valued than gold.
Their story to her captain told
Who bore them safely to Queenstown's mole.
And now that No Man's Land is still,
Peaceful ships once more shall fill
The ocean, bay, and waterway,
And use no more war-color grey.
And this certain lad himself has found,
A ship that's always homeward bound
From Frisco Bay to Seattle town.
But still remembers when he was sad,
And sailed in the bark "Sir Galahad."

U. S. SWEDISH TRADE

The shipments declared at the American consulate in Goteborg, Sweden, for the United States during 1920 showed an increase of almost 100 per cent. over those of 1919. The returns for 1920 contain a number of items not appearing the previous year, such as cotton voiles, certain iron and steel products, printing paper, potash, and mechanically ground and unclassified wood pulp.

Of the articles appearing during both years art pictures, canned fish, ball bearings, matches, wrapping paper, chemical bleached wood pulp, chemical unbleached wood pulp, and wire showed decided increases.

Silence is more eloquent than words.—Carlyle.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Can It Be True?

Three things intensely desired by the rank and file of organized labor throughout the country have received definite support from the Harding administration during the past week.

First and biggest of all is the reversal of policy toward the Russian Soviet Republic, and the indication that trade and diplomatic relations with that government will soon be restored. Secretary of State Hughes has given out statements both as to the moderation of the immediate program of the Russian government in dealing with ownership of land and crops and the running of small business enterprises, and as to the terms of the British trade treaty with Russia, which show the British to be reaping very great advantages from the bargain. President Harding has frowned upon Hoover's anti-Russian statement of recent date, and has displayed warm approval of Hughes' manner of going about the solution of the question.

For the first time since the Soviet republic began sending notes and messages to the Government of the United States—more than three years ago—suggesting friendly conference and cordial relations, the American Government has acknowledged their receipt by making public the text of one of these communications. It is the telegram of the Russian Congress (All-Russian Executive Committee) to the Congress and President of the United States, appealing for renewed friendship and proposing that Russia send a trade delegation here to negotiate a trade agreement. When this document was published, Timothy Healy of the Stationary Firemen, as chairman of the labor committee throughout the country which is trying to secure a resumption of Russian trade, sent a telegram to Mr. Hughes, asking, in the name of 2,500,000 trade unionists who have endorsed this proposal, that Mr. Hughes give it sympathetic consideration.

Debs' Case Reviewed

Second of the advances toward labor this week has been the calling to Washington, for a long talk with Attorney General Daugherty, of Eugene V. Debs, whose release from Atlanta prison is now a foregone conclusion. President Harding authorized the order under which the beloved Socialist leader was released from prison, given his ticket to Washington, and left to make the trip without guard or espionage in his coming and going. Daily papers—even the most violently reactionary—reflect the desires of the new head of the Department of Justice to have the incident treated as one of common decency and humanity. And while the administration refuses to say that others [illegible] Debs are to be liberated, it is evident that in their three hours of discussion Debs and the Attorney General went far beyond the case of the one prisoner, and reviewed the whole series of events and changes in public opinion and limitation of orthodox public expression in the weeks between November, 1916, and May, 1917. Millions of trade union men and women have petitioned for the release not only of Debs, who is old and fortified in the admiration of the working people, but of the great number of younger men who have yet to live their lives in service to humanity. Debs could not have talked long with Daugherty without having placed their claim for justice ahead of his own.

Third in the list of these events which tend to make the labor movement hopeful of the course of the Harding administration for at least the immediate future was the settlement of the dispute between the 200,000 organized workers in the stockyards and the Big Five meat packers.

The men agreed, in conference with counsel for the packers conducted at the office of Secretary of Labor Davis, to accept the cut in wages proposed by the packers, on condition that their joint agreement as to hours and working conditions, administered by Judge Samuel Alschuler, be continued until September 15 next. During these six months they will try to reach a direct agreement with the packers.

Dennis Lane, spokesman for the Amalgamated Association of Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of America, did not discuss the settlement, while here, with the press. He talked only with the union delegation accompanying him, and with the Cabinet officers and the packers' lawyers, and with Samuel Gompers and Frank Morrison. Secretary of Labor Davis, Secretary of Commerce Hoover, and Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, who together heard the statements of both sides, refused to talk. President Harding made them all a speech, when the agreement was signed, telling them that he and the country were happy that a strike had been averted by conference and concession. He said that his administration would always try to assist the two contending elements in an industrial dispute to settle their differences around a conference table. Mr. Gompers, who was present during these remarks, expressed his pleasure at that prospect. The fact is, the new administration is for reasons of its own doing many things which spoil the plans of the "open shop" privateers, and these reasons now seem to be multiplying. Hence the "open shop" gentry are awaking to the prospect that their propaganda will soon become distinctly unpopular, if not actually outlawed by the Republican administration.

Sales Tax Is Vicious

These reasons are not all clear, as yet. One of them, however, is plain: Mr. Harding feels that he has a stormy time ahead in the debate over taxation. He expects to endorse a heavy sales tax, which will be a direct burden upon the wage worker and farmer far more than upon the business and professional man of comfortable income. If in the weeks before this taxation trap is sprung he can cultivate the good-will of the workers as a class, he will go far toward making them patient with the added taxes. "Open shoppers" can carry their own load; Mr. Harding must safeguard his legislative program. Hence the open hand outstretched to labor in the matter of Russian relations, political prisoners and mediation which disrupts the nationwide anti-union drive.

The "open shop" drive continues, in all lines where such influence has not been brought to bear to check it. A real test of administration influence with anti-labor elements within the Government itself will come when the Seamen bring their appeal to Secretary Hoover for mediation with the American Steamship Association through the Bureau of Navigation and the Shipping Board. Hoover has called himself a friend of unionism. He has in his department the Bureau of Navigation, at the head of which is Eugene Chamberlain, who has persistently opposed the fair application of the language test and other vital features of the Seamen's Act. If he keeps this man in the Bureau, the Act will not be enforced, and American seamen will go back to the cities and farms, and America's merchant marine will die.

Word came to Washington recently that the Steamship Owners' Association of the Pacific held a meeting March 19 and voted to give 30 days' notice to the five maritime labor organizations that all union agreements would be abrogated on April 30. Other groups of owners, including the Standard Oil and Associated Oil companies, gave similar notice that they would have no further relations with the seamen's union after next month. These decisions mean that the anti-union program has been adopted by all of the shipowners under the American flag in the ports of our Pacific coast, and that unless pressure is brought upon them by the Government in the next four weeks a great maritime struggle will be instituted in those ports on May 1. The seamen's unions have had agreements with these shipowners for nearly twenty years past.

Mr. Hoover, by forcing the Bureau of Navigation to enforce the Seamen's Act, can prevent the manning of these ships by alien scabs. Through his influence with the Shipping Board, and through the influence of the Board upon the shipping associations, the whole movement can be stopped and industrial peace restored. President Harding may, in the end, dictate to Secretary Hoover and the Shipping Board the settlement of this quarrel, just as he did that of the packers with their employes.

Queer Political Stunts

Another field for the attention of the new President is the Civil Service Commission, chosen by President Wilson to enforce Wilson partisan policy. This Commission has sent to Secretary Flaherty of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks a letter declaring that former Chief Clerk McArdle of the Post Office Department and Postmaster Selph of St. Louis, who are charged in an affidavit forwarded by Flaherty with having printed Wilson political posters in the Government printing shop in the St. Louis office in 1918, cannot be punished on that evidence. The Commission says that Postmaster Selph had a right to engage in political activities, and that if he printed the posters in the office under his control the Commission cannot interfere.

As to McArdle, the Commission finds that he denies the charges made in the affidavit. It answers on March 14, after McArdle is out of office, charges filed on August 24th last. It asks for further evidence. The posters are said to have contained President Wilson's plea to the voters to elect only Democrats to Congress, in order to uphold the President in the war then about to end. Burleson furnished that idea, which was Wilson's political undoing.

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER.

eight different coal companies in Pennsylvania show a gross return of 11 per cent. on a total inventory value of $2,855,912." Among the reasons advanced by employers for maintaining company houses are the following:

"Greater loyalty from employes; more contented and more efficient workmen; a better control of the labor situation (that is, hire and discharge with greater freedom); serves to advertise the company and to keep it favorably before the public; facilitates part time."

Indiana Workers Win

With the adjournment of the Indiana State Legislature, anti-union forces were routed in every instance but one, the repeal of the railroad full crew law.

There were over a score of anti-labor bills introduced, and included an anti-picket act, a State constabulary bill, measures to weaken the State compensation law, a bill to provide for sueing trade unions, a garnishee bill, and other vicious proposals. The expected industrial court bill did not appear.

Labor defeated every one of these bills. Indianapolis is the center of much anti-trade union activity, but the claims of this element did not impress the Legislature.

One of the best pieces of social legislation passed was the child welfare bill, which provides that no child under 16 years can be employed in industry in the State and then they must have completed at least the eighth grade in an elementary school.

Would Bribe Police

Evidence submitted by the defense in the trial of Sid Hatfield, chief of police of Matewan, charged with the death of Albert Felts, Baldwin-Felts detective, showed that Felts favored putting Hatfield on the detective pay roll at a salary of "from $200 to $300 a month."

"Whatever arrangements are made, must be made under cover," wrote Felts. "Have this understood with Hatfield if you make a deal with him. I think you should suggest some means of bringing about a controversy between him and the bunch (the miners) which will look plausible and give him an opportunity of turning against them and telling them where to head in, because that is what we will expect if we make a deal. Now I do not want him to be neutral. We will expect him to stand squarely behind us in all matters which will come up and let everyone know that he is disgusted with the bunch and wants nothing more to do with them and brand them as crooked and declare himself with the other side when it comes to a showdown."

ITALIAN SHIPPING SITUATION

According to reliable information, instead of the perennial shortage of tonnage, about which so much complaint was formerly made, Italy now has all the ships are finding it difficult to operate their vessels at a profit. The Italian Seamen's Union is exceptionally strong and has been able to impose conditions that are, to say the least, extremely burdensome, from the point of view of those shipowners who can only see excessive profits. While ocean freight rates were at an abnormally high level, shipowners were able to meet these requirements and still make money, but now that rates have been reduced to a fraction of the former figure, it is a very different matter and profits have vanished.

In order to stimulate the construction and purchase of ships a decree has been in effect whereby the Government subsidized the builders of new vessels and undertook to amortize the high cost of vessels purchased in such a way as to reduce the cost to the purchaser to its actual value under normal conditions after the inflation of prices due to the war had been eliminated. That portion of the decree in question which dealt with the purchase of ships expired on December 31, 1920, while that relating to construction will expire on June 30, 1921. There seems to be no probability that any new measure will be adopted for stimulating purchases, but it is expected that the provision for the admission of shipbuilding material free of duty will be continued, as well as the premium on new vessels constructed in Italian yards. In addition, there are indications that a number of new steamship lines will be subsidized by the State.

At current exchange rates and prices steel vessels can be bought in England at prices which compare rather favorably with those suggested for American wooden steamers. The percentage of Italy's ocean traffic carried in Italian bottoms has been increasing rapidly and now equals over 40 per cent, which compares favorably with the situation that existed before the war.

CANADIAN SALMON PROSPECTS

A recent estimate that only 40 per cent. of the salmon pack customarily produced in British Columbia would be canned during the year 1921 has been further reduced, and canners now look for about a 20 per cent. pack; some canneries are prepared to put up about 25 per cent. of their normal pack, while others are figuring on only 15 per cent. These will all be sockeyes. No "chums" will be canned in British Columbia during 1921. In previous years the lower grades of fish shared the overhead expenses of the canneries; this year, there being no lower grades, the sockeyes will carry the entire cost of operation.

It is claimed that many cannery operators are canceling their orders for tin-plate and boxes. The contracts for this tin-plate were made last fall, before there were any intimations of a falling market, and are to run at contract figures for six months ending June 30, 1921. Boxes this year are also reported to be very high; for "talls" these run about 30 cents on this side of the line, while in Washington State they reach the cannery at about 14 cents and are delivered in Alaska at 16 cents.

As the canners in British Columbia are faced with the prospect of a break in tin prices about July 1, 1921, they claim that, with high-priced tin, boxes, and fish, they can not offer the wholesaler any low-priced product this fall, although other classes of canned goods will, no doubt, show the cut in tin and boxes.

Labor News

Latest reports from Detroit, Mich., show that unemployment in that city is slightly decreasing.

Building Trades Unions of Omaha, Neb., are on strike against a 20 per cent. reduction in wages.

The New York Assembly, by a vote of 77 to 62, declared vacant the seat of Assemblyman Henry Jager, Socialist, of Kings county.

The Cigarmakers' Union of San Francisco is making an intensive campaign in behalf of label cigars manufactured in the union shops of the city.

It is charged that local business men of Davenport, Iowa, are forcing their women workers to sign protests against a nine-hour bill, now pending in the State Legislature.

Waiters' Union, Local No. 30, of San Francisco have petitioned President Harding to grant amnesty to political prisoners confined in federal prisons in the United States for violation of the espionage act during the war.

At Sacramento the Assembly committee on revenue and taxation has tabled a bill proposing to permit municipalities to levy a poll tax on aliens. The bill was offered at the request of the city of Stockton, which wanted to put a head tax on Hindus residing there.

More than 6,000 children's dress and petticoat makers of New York, recently suspended work to organize the trade on the same basis as other trades in the ladies' garment industry. These workers are affiliated with the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

A reduction of 7½ per cent. in the wages of men engaged in the Building Trades of San Francisco was recommended in the report of the board of arbitration, which has been at work several months studying relation of wages to the cost of living. In the event of no contest the new scale will become effective April 11, 1921.

Employes of two independent Chicago packing companies have struck, charging their employers with violating the seniority clause of the Alschuler war-time agreement between the packers and their union employes. The breach of faith upon the part of employers follows immediately upon the heels of the recent settlement.

A ten million dollar annual slash in the payroll of the International Harvester Company has been put into effect. The 45,000 employes involved in the wage reduction have been receiving an aggregate pay of between $70,000,000 and $80,000,000. Men on piecework and hourly basis have been cut 20 per cent. and officials and salaried employes trimmed 10 per cent., according to officials. A few employes were cut [illegible]

"The best convention in the history of the State Building Trades Council of California was the unanimous verdict of every delegate who attended the twenty-first annual gathering in San Jose, which adjourned last night. Complete harmony prevailed throughout the session, ending with the re-election of [illegible] and the selection of San Diego as the place of holding next year. Civilized methods drawing in favor of the southern city. Reports submitted from various sections showed the building trades crafts to be in a healthful condition throughout the State.

Father and mother of Nicolay C. Monsen, a native of Bergen, age 43, last heard from in San Francisco, are anxious to ascertain as to his whereabouts. Kindly communicate with Nicolay Monsen, Sjomandenes Aldershjem, Haugeveien, Bergen, Norway. 2-9-21

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912, of The Seamen's Journal, published weekly at San Francisco, Cal., for April 1, 1921:

State of California,
County of San Francisco—ss.

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and county aforesaid, personally appeared S. A. Silver, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he is the Business Manager of The Seamen's Journal, and that the following is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management (and if a daily paper, the circulation), etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, embodied in Section 443, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed on the reverse of this form, to wit:

1. That the names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are:

Name of — Postoffice Address—

Publisher, Sailors' Union of the Pacific, San Francisco, Cal.

Editor, J. Vance Thompson, San Francisco, Cal.

Managing Editor, J. Vance Thompson, San Francisco, Cal.

Business Manager, S. A. Silver, San Francisco, Cal.

2. That the owners are: (Give names and addresses of individual owners, or, if a corporation, give its name and the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of the total amount of stock.)

Sailors' Union of the Pacific, San Francisco; not a corporation. Principal officers of the Sailors' Union: Andrew Furuseth, Secretary, San Francisco; Ed. Rosenberg, Assistant Secretary, San Francisco.

3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: (If there are none, so state.)

None.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders, and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by him.

S. A. SILVER, Business Manager.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 28th day of March, 1921.

(Seal) MARGUERITA S. BRUNER.

(My commission expires Jan. 8, 1922.)

INFORMATION WANTED

Checks are now available for the members of the crew of the S. S. "Windber," for salvage services rendered against the S. S. "Elkton," in November 17, 1919. The following members are requested to call or communicate with owners, the Pacific American Fisheries, South Bellingham, Wash.:

Aspostal, C. — Frederickson, F. W.
Grant, P. — Jacobsen, O.
Samuelson, H. — Wallace William

Mrs. John M. Eshleman, 601 Underwood Bldg., San Francisco, is anxious to ascertain the whereabouts of Friend McHarvey, a native of California, age 40, last heard from while in Alameda County this spring, 1921. 2-16-21

Carl Tossavainen, a former member of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, a native of Kuopio, Finland, age 33 years, last heard from on the Pacific Coast in February, 1913; any one knowing his whereabouts will please communicate with Business Manager, The Seamen's Journal, San Francisco, Cal. 12-1-20

Anyone knowing how Eugene McNulty, coalpasser, met his death recently at Boat Harbor, Newport News, Va., while employed on S. S. "Colquit," will confer a favor on his mother, Mrs. Frances McNulty, 511 Hemlock street, Scranton, Pa., or Silas B. Axtell, 9 State street, New York City, by communicating with either one.

Domestic and Naval

The council of the Ottawa Board of Trade has adopted a resolution recommending that until the rate of exchange between Canada and the United States gets back to normal, citizens of Canada be urged to deny themselves luxuries imported from the United States.

The Russian bark "Albyn," a former British bark, which carried many tons of grain out of San Francisco harbor and is well known there, has been posted as missing by Lloyd's in London. The "Albyn" departed from Newport October, 1920, with coal for Gothenburg and has never been heard from.

An organization of women journalists has been formed in Japan by the women reporters of daily newspapers and the women editorial workers on other periodicals in Osaka. Elevation of their social status as journalists "who are participating in the promotion of general culture as well as in raising the position of women in Japan" is sought."

The different steamship lines plying to and beyond Hawaii brought 11,073 cabin passengers to Honolulu in 1920, according to the annual report of the Hawaii tourist bureau. The total of passengers arriving in Honolulu and passing through, according to the bureau, was 35,974. The number who came to the islands to stay permanently, or for a time, not listed as through passengers, was 5781 more than in 1919.

Local shipping interests focused their interest recently on the fairly large shipment of coal brought to San Francisco by the Union Line freighter "Waihemo," which arrived from the Antipodes. The coal cargo, consisting of 5,006 tons, was consigned to the Rolph Navigation and Coal Company, and shippers conjectured this forecasted another movement of coal from Newcastle to this port.

On March 1, 1921, private American shipyards were building, or under contract to build, for private shipowners 227 steel vessels, of 901,229 gross tons, compared with 252 steel vessels, of 977,903 gross tons, on February 1, 1921. The shipyards have reported no new contracts during February. These figures do not include Government ships or ships building or contracted for by the United States Shipping Board.

The lowly tugboat was given the status of a merchant vessel in the United States District Court at San Francisco. Naturalization Examiner George Crutchfield asked a ruling of Federal Judge William C. Van Fleet when Ferdinand B. Anderson applied for citizenship under the Seaman's Act. Anderson had been employed as a marine engineer on the tugboat "Fearless," and after three years' employment had been honorably discharged. Crutchfield called to the court's attention that the law provides that only persons who are employed on merchant vessels or fishing boats could take advantage of the Seaman's Act to obtain citizenship. He informed Judge Van Fleet that the question of classifying a tugboat had not been presented before. Judge Van Fleet promptly ruled that the tugboat was a merchant ship on the ground that it was a recognized instrument of commerce.

Domestic and Naval

Naval vessels at sea may take on fuel oil while under way through a device installed in the fuel ship "Pecos." to be launched in Boston April 23.

The anti-Japanese bill, to prevent persons ineligible for citizenship from owning land in the State of Colorado passed the lower house of the general assembly and now goes to the Governor. Governor Shoup has indicated he will sign it.

According to the officials, search will be continued for the missing naval balloon and five men, which left the Pensacola naval air station March 22 on a practice hop. Bad weather seriously handicapped the searchers for the first few days after the mishap.

At Sacramento Assemblyman Parkinson's bill to amend the women's eight-hour day to permit women to work nine hours a day, provided their hours of labor do not exceed forty-eight in any one week, has been laid on the table by the Assembly Labor and Capital Committee. Labor representatives construed the measure to be an attack upon the eight-hour law.

Simultaneous mobilization of the army and navy air forces are under way in preparation for bombing tests against naval vessels to be conducted jointly by the two services in June and July. Army fliers are gathering at Langley Field, Virginia, to practice bomb-dropping against targets on the water. Navy air forces are concentrating at Hampton Roads and at Yorktown, Va.

Illiteracy is decreasing in the nation, according to Census Bureau returnes from the first three States in which 1920 enumeration has been worked out on the subject. In Alabama, where the percentage of illiteracy was found to be 22.9 of the total population over ten years of age in 1910, the 1920 percentage was 16.1. In Arkansas, the percentage dropped from 12.6 in 1910 to 9.4 in 1920, and in Delaware from 8.1 in 1910 to 5.9 in 1920.

Acting Secretary Roosevelt has begun a personal inquiry into the flight of the naval free balloon, missing since March 22, the day it left Pensacola, Florida, with five men aboard. Roosevelt said that the Pensacola affair, coming on the heels of the balloon flight from Rockaway, Long Island, to Moose Factory, Ontario, would undoubtedly result in tightening up orders regarding such flights in future. The department admitted that little hope was entertained that the men would ever be found.

The Secretary of Commerce has announced that in view of the important development of a radio compass by the Bureau of Standards, three wireless fog signals would be immediately installed at the entrance to New York harbor through the Lighthouse Service. Each of these three stations is equipped with an [illegible] radio set sending out signals continuously during fog or thick weather. They may be picked up on shipboard by means of the new radio compass which indicates the direction from which the radio signals are sent out, and by taking observations on the different stations the captain of a vessel may determine his exact position without being obliged to rely on the former unsatisfactory method of locating himself by the sound of whistles and fog horns.

News from Abroad

Premier Lloyd George has urged the people of Britain to get ready for a general election "at no distant date." His warning was uttered in a speech to new coalition members of Parliament at a luncheon.

Twenty Communists have been arrested at Milan, Italy, following the search of houses by the police. It is reported that Nationalists and Socialists have clashed at Canossa, near Reggio, and that there have been a number of casualties.

Leading Communists in the Crefeld district, Germany, to the number of 300 have been arrested by Belgian military authorities. The Belgians hold the Communists responsible for ordering a strike of 30,000 workmen and inciting rioting.

Turkish official reports declared that the Turkish Nationalists, east of the Smyrna district, have attacked and defeated the Greeks, who began a recent offensive. It is said that 1700 Greeks were taken prisoners and that the Nationalists have captured twenty guns.

A report from Tokio states that General Fukdia, assistant adjutant of the Japanese general staff, has sailed for the Bonin Islands, a Japanese group about 500 miles southwest of the main Japanese chain, for the purpose of studying conditions on the islands preparatory to the carrying out of the enlarged fortification project there.

Japanese purchases of airplanes in Europe are increasing and an elaborate program of naval aviation has been initiated. The Japanese Government has obtained a private mission of twenty ex-naval flying officers and men from Great Britain, following disappointment at failure to obtain thirty instructors from the British naval air mission.

The land tenure scheme of the Russian Soviet government, announced in the Moscow newspapers, permits each man to hold his land for nine years, within which time there will be no redistribution. It also is provided that peasants whose holdings are scattered over a large area will, in some cases, be allotted new centralized holdings of an equivalent size.

Disturbances of a political character have occurred in Peru recently, according to meager reports from Lima. A dispatch from the Peruvian capital to La Nacion of Buenos Aires reports sanguinary events at various points in the interior, notably in the department of Apurimac, in the southwestern part of the country, where several persons have been killed and wounded, and in the village of Gray, where a colonel was assassinated and three gendarmes were killed.

Argentina reports that there is no appreciable relief from the port congestion, and the charter market is even lower than last month. The demand for shipping space continues dull; outward tonnage exceeds demand, and shipping rates are low. Many vessels are delayed in port while awaiting cargoes. Consequently, the ports are congested with shipping. The despatch of vessels is slow, and there is also a large accumulation of refused merchandise, especially automobiles (estimated at 3,000 in number), and textiles. Stocks of bunker coal and oil are normal. The existing boycott is seriously affecting the loading of ships.

American public schools are overpupiled, under teachered, inadequately housed; teachers are underpaid; many schools are menacingly overcrowded—but, aside from these defects and lacks, the schools are all right.—Pasadena Star-News.

Two friends returning home from a late evening gathering noticed through the window a Chinese in the dimly lighted rear shop.

"I wonder what that Chinese is doing up so late?" said one.

"Shirts, I suppose," came the answer.—Winnipeg Tribune.

A Swede came down from the woods, and, entering a saloon, asked for a drink of good squirrel whiskey. The bartender said: "We have no squirrel whisky, but we have some good Old Crow."

"Oh, Yudas Priest!" said the Swede, "I don't want to fly; I yust want to hop around a little."

"I saw a dandy at the auto show last evening. Low in front, no back to speak of and every appearance of speed."

"What kind of a car was it?"

"Car nothing. It was a dress some woman was wearing."—Judge.

"Ah shuah does pity you," said a colored pugilist to his opponent as they squared off. "Ah was bohn with boxin'-gloves on."

"Maybe you was," retorted the other; "and Ah reckon you'se goin' to die de same way."—Boston Transcript.

"Biddy," Pat began timidly, "did ye ivver think av marryin'?"

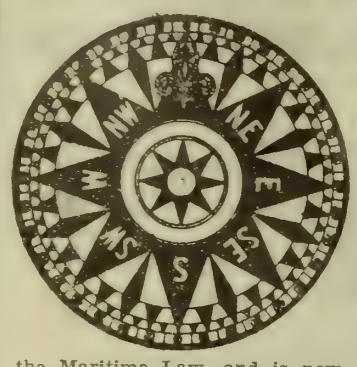
"Sure, now, th' subject has nivver entered me thoughts," demurely replied Biddy.

"It's sorry Oi am," said Pat, turning away.

"Wan minute, Pat," called Biddy softly, "Ye've set me a-thinking'."

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888



Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

RUSSO-BRITISH AGREEMENT

Full Text as Published by the British Board of Trade

The following trade agreement was signed on March 16 by Sir Robert Horne, president of the Board of Trade, on behalf of the British Government, and M. Krassin, on behalf of the Soviet Government:

Whereas, it is desirable in the interests both of Russia and of the United Kingdom that peaceful trade and commerce should be resumed forthwith between those countries; and

Whereas, for this purpose it is necessary pending the conclusion of a formal general peace treaty between the Governments of these countries by which their economic and political relations shall be regulated in the future that a preliminary agreement should be arrived at between the Government of the United Kingdom and the government of the Russian Socialist Federal soviet republic, hereinafter referred to as the Russian Soviet Government.

The aforesaid parties have accordingly entered into the present agreement for the resumption of trade and commerce between the countries.

The present agreement is subject to the fulfillment of the following conditions, namely: (1) That each party refrains from hostile action or undertakings against the other and from conducting outside of its own borders any official propaganda direct or indirect against the institutions of the British Empire or the Russian soviet republic, respectively, and more particularly that the Russian Soviet Government refrains from any attempt by military or diplomatic or any other form of action or propaganda to encourage any of the peoples of Asia in any form of hostile action against British interests or the British Empire, especially in India and in the Independent State of Afghanistan. The British Government gives a similar particular undertaking to the Russian Soviet Government in respect of the countries which formed part of the former Russian Empire and which have now become independent. (2) That all British subjects in Russia are immediately permitted to return home, and that all Russian citizens in Great Britain or other parts of the British Empire who desire to return to Russia are similarly released.

It is understood that the term "conducting any official propaganda" includes the giving by either party of assistance or encouragement to any propaganda conducted outside its own borders.

The parties undertake to give forthwith all necessary instructions to their agents and to all persons under their authority to conform to the stipulations undertaken above.

Article 1

Both parties agree not to impose or maintain any form of blockade against each other and to remove forthwith all obstacles hitherto placed in the way of resumption of trade between the United Kingdom and Russia in any commodities which may be legally exported from or imported into their respective territories to or from any other foreign country, and not to exercise any discrimination against such trade, as compared with that carried on with any other foreign country or to place any impediments in the way of banking, credit and financial operations for the purpose of such trade, but subject always to legislation generally applicable in the respective countries. It is understood that nothing in this article shall prevent either party from regulating the trade in arms and ammunition under general provisions of law which are applicable to the import of arms and ammunition from or their export to foreign countries.

Nothing in this article shall be construed as overriding the provisions of any general international convention which is binding on either party by which the trade in any particular article is or may be regulated (as for example, the opium convention).

Article 2

British and Russian ships, their masters, crews and cargoes shall, in ports of Russia and the United Kingdom, respectively, receive in all respects the treatment, privileges, facilities, immunities and protections which are usually accorded by the established practice of commercial nations to foreign merchant ships, their masters, crews and cargoes, visiting their ports, including the facilities usually accorded in respect of coal and water, pilotage, berthing, drydocks, cranes, repairs, warehouses and generally all services, appliances and premises connected with merchant shipping. Moreover, the British Government undertakes not to take part in or to support any measures restricting or hindering, or tending to restrict or hinder, Russian ships from exercising the rights of free navigation of the high seas, straits, and navigable waterways which are enjoyed by ships of other nationalities; Provided, That nothing in this article shall impair the right of either party to take such precautions as are authorized by their respective laws with regard to the admission of aliens into their territories.

Article 3

The British and other Governments having already undertaken the clearances of the seas adjacent to their own coasts, and also certain parts of the Baltic from mines, for the benefit of all nations, the Russian Soviet Government, on their part, undertake to clear the sea passages to their own ports. The British Government will give the Russian Soviet Government any information in their power as to the position of mines, which will assist them in clearing passages to the ports and shores of Russia. The Russian Government, like other nations, will give all information to the International Mines Clearance Committee about the areas they have swept, and also what areas still remain dangerous. They will also give all information in their possession about the mine fields laid down by the late Russian Governments since the outbreak of war in 1914, outside Russian territorial waters, in order to assist in their clearance: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be understood to prevent the Russian Government from taking or requiring them to disclose any measures they may consider necessary for the protection of their ports.

Each party may nominate such number of its nationals as may be agreed from time to time as being reasonably necessary to enable proper effect to be given to this agreement, having regard to the conditions under which trade is carried on in its territories, and the other party shall permit such persons to enter its territories and to sojourn and carry on trade there: Provided, That either party may restrict the admittance of any such persons into any specified areas, and may refuse admittance to or sojourn in its territories any individual who is persona non grata to itself or who does not comply with this agreement or with the conditions precedent thereto.

Persons admitted in pursuance of this article into the territories of either party shall, while sojourning therein for purposes of trade, be exempted from all compulsory services whatsoever, whether civil, naval, military, or other, and from any contributions whether pecuniary or in kind, imposed as an equivalent for personal service, and shall have the right of egress.

They shall be at liberty to communicate freely by post, telegraph, and wireless telegraphy, and to use telegraph codes under the conditions and subject to the regulations laid down in the international telegraph convention of St. Petersburg in 1875 (Lisbon revision of 1908).

Each party undertakes to account for, and to pay all balances due to the other in respect of terminal and transit telegrams and in respect of transit letter mails in accordance with the provisions of the international telegraph convention and regulations and of the convention and regulations of the universal postal union, respectively. The above balances when due shall be paid in the currency of either party at the option of the receiving party.

Persons admitted into Russia under this agreement shall be permitted freely to import commodities (except commodities such as alcoholic liquors, of which both the importation and the manufacture are, or may be, prohibited in Russia) destined solely for their household use or consumption to an amount reasonably required for such purposes.

Article 5

Either party may appoint one or more official agents to a number to be mutually agreed upon, to reside and exercise their functions in the territories of the other, who shall personally enjoy all the rights and immunities set forth in the preceding article, and also immunity from arrest and search, provided that either party may refuse to admit any individual as an official agent who is persona non grata to itself, or may require the other party to withdraw him should it find it necessary to do so on grounds of public interest or security. Such agents shall have access to the authorities of the country in which they reside for the purpose of facilitating the carrying out of this agreement, and of protecting the interests of their nationals.

Official agents shall be at liberty to communicate freely with their own Government and with other official representatives of their Government in other countries by post, by telegraph and wireless telegraphy in cipher, and to receive and dispatch couriers, with sealed bags, subject to a limitation of three kilos per week, which can be exempt from examination.

Telegrams and radio telegrams of official agents shall enjoy any right of priority over private messages that may be generally accorded to messages of the official representatives of foreign Governments in the United Kingdom and Russia, respectively.

Russian official agents in the United Kingdom shall enjoy the same privileges in respect of exemption from taxation, central or local, as are accorded to the official representatives of other foreign Governments. British official agents in Russia shall enjoy equivalent privileges, which, moreover, shall in no case be less than those accorded to the official agents of any other country.

The official agents shall be the competent authorities to visé the passports of persons seeking admission, in pursuance of the preceding article, into the territories of the parties.

Article 6

Each party undertakes generally to insure that persons admitted into its territories under the two preceding articles shall enjoy all protection, rights, and facilities which are necessary to enable them to carry on trade, but subject always to any legislation generally applicable in the respective countries.

Article 7

Both contracting parties agree simultaneously with the conclusion of the present trade agreement to renew exchange of private postal and telegraphic correspondence between both countries, as well as dispatch and acceptance of wireless messages and parcels by post in accordance with the rules and regulations which were in existence up to 1914.

Article 8

Passports, documents of identity, powers of attorney, and similar documents issued or certified by the competent authorities in either country for the purpose of enabling trade to be carried on in pursuance of this agreement, shall be treated in the other country as if they were issued or certified by the authorities of a recognized foreign Government.

Article 9

The British Government declares that it will not initiate any steps with a view to attach or to take possession of any gold, funds, securities, or commodities not being articles identifiable as the property of the British Government which may be exported from Russia in payment for imports or as securities for such payment, or of any movable or immovable property which may be acquired by the Russian Soviet Government within the United Kingdom. It will not take steps to obtain any special legislation not applicable to other countries against the importation into the United Kingdom of precious metals from Russia, whether specie (other than British or allied) or bullion or manufactures or the storing, analyzing, refining, melting, mortgaging, or disposing thereof in the United Kingdom, and will not requisition such metals.

Article 10

The Russian Soviet Government undertakes to make no claim to dispose in any way of the funds or other property of the late Imperial and Provisional Russian Governments in the United Kingdom. The British Government gives a corresponding undertaking as regards British Government funds and property in Russia. This article is not to prejudice the inclusion in the general treaty referred to in the preamble of any provision dealing with the subject matter of this article. Both parties agree to protect and not to transfer to any claimants pending the conclusion of the aforesaid treaty any of the above funds or property which may be subject to their control.

Article 11

Merchandise, the produce or manufacture of one country imported into the other in pursuance of this agreement, shall not be subjected therein to compulsory requisition on the part of the Government or of any local authority.

Article 12

It is agreed that all questions relating to the rights and claims of nationals of either party in respect of patents, trade-marks, designs, and copyrights in the territory of the other party shall be amicably dealt with in the treaty referred to in the preamble.

Article 13

The present agreement shall come into force immediately, and both parties shall at once take all necessary measures to give effect to it. It shall continue in force unless and until replaced by the treaty contemplated in the preamble so long as the conditions laid down both in the articles of the agreement and in the preamble are observed by both sides: Provided, That at any time after the expiration of twelve months from the date on which the agreement comes into force either party may give notice to terminate the provisions of the preceding articles, and on the expiration of six months from the date of such notice those articles shall terminate accordingly: Provided, also, That if as the result of any action in the courts of the United Kingdom dealing with the attachment or arrest of any gold, funds, securities, property, or commodities not being identifiable as the exclusive property of a British subject, consigned to the United Kingdom by the Russian Soviet Government, or its representatives, judgment is delivered by the court under which such gold, funds, securities, property, or commodities are held to be validly attached on account of obligations incurred by the Russian Soviet Government or by any previous Russian Government before the date of the signature of this agreement, the Russian Soviet Government shall have the right to terminate the agreement forthwith: Provided, also, That in the event of the infringement by either party at any time of any of the provisions of this agreement or of the conditions referred to in the preamble, the other party shall immediately be free from the obligations of the agreement. Nevertheless, it is agreed that before taking any action inconsistent with the agreement, the aggrieved party shall give the other party a reasonable opportunity of furnishing an explanation or remedying the default.

It is mutually agreed that in any of the events contemplated in the above provisos, the parties will afford all necessary facilities for the winding up, in accordance with the principles of the agreement, of any transactions already entered into thereunder, and for the withdrawal and egress from their territories of the nationals of the other party, and for the withdrawal of their movable property.

As from the date when six months' notice of termination shall have been given under this article, the only new transactions which shall be entered into under the agreement shall be those which can be completed within the six months. In all other respects the provisions of the agreement will remain fully in force up to the date of termination.

Article 14

This agreement is drawn up and signed in the English language. But it is agreed that as soon as may be, a translation shall be made into the Russian language and agreed between the parties. Both texts shall then be considered authentic for all purposes.

Signed at London, this sixteenth day of March, 1921.

R. S. HORNE.
L. KRASSIN.

Declaration of Recognition of Claims

At the moment of signature of the preceding trade agreement, both parties declare that all claims of either party or of its nationals against the other party in respect of property or rights, or in respect of obligations incurred by the existing or former Government of either country, shall be equitably dealt with in the formal general peace treaty referred to in the preamble.

In the meantime, and without prejudice to the generality of the above stipulation, the Russian Soviet Government declares that it recognizes in principle that it is liable to pay compensation to private persons who have supplied goods or services to Russia for which they have not been paid. The detailed mode of discharging this liability shall be regulated by the treaty referred to in the preamble.

The British Government hereby makes a corresponding declaration.

It is clearly understood that the above declarations in no way imply that the claims referred to therein will have preferential treatment in the aforesaid treaty as compared with any other classes of claims which are to be dealt with in that treaty.

Signed at London, this sixteenth day of March, 1921.

R. S. HORNE,
L. KRASSIN.

MUTINOUS CREW SINKS SHIP

An interesting item of news recently arrived from Buenos Aires. According to reports the organized seamen of Argentina will have one less non-union crew to compete with.

The non-union crew of the steamer "Huttaita," operated by the Paraguayan Government between Paran River ports, stole off with the vessel Wednesday and headed north toward Brazil, and was sunk near Concepcion.

The crew of the "Huttaita," it was believed, made off with it, intending to take over other river steamers and persuade the crews to join in resisting the Paraguayan Government's proposal to surrender operation of the vessels to their owners, the Argentine Navigation Company, which has reached an agreement with the unions.

FEATS OF MARINE SALVAGE

There is something very appealing about the work of marine wrecking companies, as we call them, or marine salvage companies, as they are known on the other side of the water; so much so, indeed, that the stories which we have published from time to time of the operations of our own wrecking companies have always been welcomed and appreciated. The exigencies of the war, and particularly the submarine campaign, made a big demand upon the salvage companies to which they responded in right royal fashion, and the Liverpool Salvage Association has made a report which shows how positively amazing were both the activity and the successes of the salvage operations of the war. Thus, we learn that during the ill-fated Dardanelles expedition, of fifty-one vessels sunk near the beaches, all were speedily reclaimed by the wrecking outfit of the association. Within a period of ten days in the month of June, 1917, four steamers, with a total deadweight of 30,000 tons, which had been torpedoed and sunk in the English Channel, were brought into port. It will be remembered that the "Lion" was badly holed by gunfire during the running fight known as the Dogger Bank action, and it was one of the company's vessels, the "Ranger," which brought the ship in. This she did by building a cofferdam of timber backed by cement around the smashed armor plate, and putting the ship into a sufficiently watertight condition to get home. Another notable rescue was that of the "Britannia," a predreadnought battleship, which had torn open her bottom by stranding on the rocks of the Scottish coast. The hospital ship "Asturias," which had been torpedoed, was saved by the salvage craft pumping out water from the ship at the rate of 12,000 tons an hour. It was the same vessel, "Ranger," that brought up "K-13," sister-ship to the submarine recently lost during maneuvers, to the surface from a depth of sixty-two feet, and so rescued the crew after two and a half days' entombment on the sea bottom. So this one vessel steamed from one disabled vessel to another until she had covered in all 17,000 miles; and, not content with that war record, she did good work after the armistice in raising wrecked British ships that had been sunk in the attacks at Zeebrugge.

That such wonderful results can be accomplished is due to the fact that marine salvage is a highly developed art, requiring special plant and a wide practical experience. If you asked a wrecking expert what were his most helpful appliances he would mention, doubtless, compressed air, the centrifugal pump, and the free use of timber, planking and concrete; but he would also tell you there is no cut and-dried system that can be given general application. In other words, every wrecked ship is a problem in itself. Inventive skill may find methods superior to these, but for the present they control the situation. —Scientific American.

Arbitration is a business, not a moral, proposition. It will grow in favor with the employer in proportion as the employe demonstrates his ability to make the other method the more costly.

British Miners' Grievance

The strike of coal miners in England involves several issues, but the outstanding feature is the attempt of these workers to hold their positions of unified mine control, established by the Government, and national wage standards.

As the result of the miners' strike that started in October of last year, a national wages board was set up. The Government has controlled the price of coal and its distribution, and its plan to turn the mines back to their owners is opposed by the miners, who insist that plans should first be worked out that will stabilize this industry. The miners are fearful for their gains if unrestricted private control is again established.

The railway workers are linked up with the miners and transport workers in a voluntary pact called the triple alliance, but the railway workers are more than sentimentally interested in the miners' cause, as Government control of the railroads is to end next August and their general wages board and other gains will be jeopardized, as is the miners.

The miners are committed to the nationalization of mines and this was indorsed in 1919 by the British Trades Union Congress by a vote of 4,478,000 to 77,000. The Government suggests that the royalty rights of the mines be acquired and that the managements of these properties be unified.

The nationalization demand seems to be a less important point at this time, but the miners' strongest claim for nationalization is that the great inequalities, because of physical conditions, in the mining industry gives low-cost mines the advantage over high-cost mines.

The miners insist that every ounce of coal possible is necessary for the economic life of England and that mine production should be on the basis of low-cost mines aiding those of higher cost, and that this is only possible by nationalization.

The so-called Sankey commission, appointed by the Government, reported in 1919 in favor of nationalization. The Government rejected this recommendation and advanced the plan of securing mine royalty rights. The miners charge that the Government agreed to accept the commission's findings.

At the present time the usual claim of inefficiency is made by the coal owners against the miners, and the latter reply the coal owners, with the consent of the Government, raised the price of export coal to continental Europe to a disgracefully high price in order to reimburse the national treasury. This injured England's export trade, and the home consumer is now called upon to maintain profits and the miner is asked to lower working conditions.

The Elusive Pea Again

Press dispatches from Sharon, Pa., state that the Steel Trust has extended its bonus system to wage earners.

On profits from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 a bonus of 2 per cent will be given workers; to $200,000,000, 2¼ per cent, and in excess of this amount, 2½ per cent will be distributed.

The scheme appears alluring, but like other gold bricks, it should be investigated.

"Dividing profits" has a brotherly sound, but it means nothing to those who know that the trust retains the power to decide what constitutes profits, and that skilled accountants can pile up the debit side of the ledger to any height desired.

As a rule, wage earners are unacquainted with finance. They know nothing of the intricacies of corporation bookkeeping and the methods employed to conceal extortionate profits.

The Steel Trust maintains various funds which are charged as costs to the industry. These charges include labor, salaries and lawyers' fees without limit, raw material, interest on bonds, Federal and State taxes, depreciation, replacement, etc.

What is left is called profits.

In the trust's depreciation fund vast sums are assigned to replace machinery. Replacement funds are used for the same purpose. The law regulates the amount that can be placed in the depreciation fund, but no limit is placed on net earnings that are shoveled into the replacement fund hole.

Millions of dollars of profits are thus concealed, and the amount may be increased or decreased as suits the purpose of those in control.

Workers who accept the trust's bonus system play with loaded dice, because corporation profits is a matter of figure jugglery in which they have no part and desire none.

Under this system greater production does not mean greater profits (except to the "insiders"), although the worker is led to believe it does.

A morale is necessary for greater production. This spirit can not be developed by bookkeeping systems based on "Now you see it and now you don't."

Statistics can be marshaled in such manner that workers may be silenced, but not convinced. It is folly to believe that cooperation can be developed under these conditions. Right relations between men is not a matter of figures. Harmony is impossible in an atmosphere of doubt.

The workers' longing for social justice will not be stilled by a bonus scheme that is equaled by the shell game and three-card monte man.

It is significant that bonus and similar schemes are always advocated by anti-union employers, whose pretense and deceit are best shown by their so-called "open shop" claims.

An Impudent Claim

The graduate school of business administration, Harvard University, has issued what it declares to be "probably the first dictionary of labor terms as used by organized labor ever published."

The dictionary gives this definition of the "open shop":

"A plant in which both union and non-

World's Workers

The Argentine National Department of Labor has announced that henceforth it intends to intervene in conflicts between labor unions and employers to stop strikes, and bring about a settlement. It will officially request that a strike be called off, pending an effort at settlement, either by mediation, conciliation or arbitration, for which the department will supply the machinery.

The percentage of unemployed in Germany compares favorably with that of every other industrial country. Notwithstanding the great growth of trade-union membership and its large average of the working population, the figures given of unemployment in the German unions is far below the average of the United States, Great Britain and other industrial nations.

Unemployment is reaching menacing figures in the United Kingdom. The ministry of labor reports that there are 1,143,000 registered unemployed and the number is increasing. These figures do not include unemployed who have not registered, nor those who are employed only part time. The Government is distributing out-of-work doles but it has evolved no constructive policy.

San Juan, Porto Rico, reports that Island police are adopting their usual bulldozing methods against agricultural workers who are resisting wage cuts by the sugar corporations. Many thousands of these workers are compelled to face the brutality and illegal interference of police. More than 15,000 tobacco workers have resisted wage reductions for three months and have convinced employers of the futility of this move. The factories are being opened with former rates prevailing. Other strikes of minor importance are being waged against wage cuts.

The American Federation of Labor has been requested to urge the United Mine Workers of America to refuse to mine coal for export to Great Britain or for use by English ships during the British coal strike, in a resolution before the executive committee of the Federated Trades and Labor Council at Montreal, Canada. The resolution was referred to the committee at a meeting after a stormy discussion. Some delegates contended the British miners were able to take care of themselves, while others declared that American miners should not act as strike-breakers.

Associated Press dispatches state that workmen engaged in construction of ships in several German seaports have petitioned the German Government to abandon the policy of naming new ships after famous generals in the war or men who won renown for military service before the war. The petition says the principles of democracy are undermined by such glorification of militaristic characters. The unions have threatened to quit work unless the practice ceases. It was this feeling which caused workmen recently to stop the launching of the U-boat cruiser "Tirpitz," named after the German admiral. Protest also was made against the launching of the "Ludendorff" and the "Hindenburg," although the former Field Marshal and Hindenburg still enjoy some popularity with the union workmen employed in the sea trades.

The Port of Coos Bay Commission will apply immediately to the Government to have the Government dredge "Michie" work on a troublesome shoal west of the Southern Pacific bridge over Coos Bay, where a number of vessels have hung up recently.

The Dollar ships will carry 100,000,000 feet of lumber from Dollar mills to the Orient during 1921, according to Captain Robert Dollar. He stated that the full output of the Canadian mills at Dollarton on Burrard inlet would be shipped. This will approximate 40,000,000 feet.

Officers and passengers arriving at San Francisco on the Pacific Mail liner "Granite State" said that officials of the Canal Zone had cut the force of employes there 50 per cent. They said that the cut affected every department and was due to economy and an overabundance of office help.

The annual northern cruise of the Coast Guard fleet was initiated with the departure for Puget Sound and adjoining waters of the Eagle boat "Bothwell." She will cruise for a month along the Washington shores looking for Indians who are inclined to seal poaching. Next month she will join the revenue cutters at Unalaska.

The navy submarine mother ship "Rainbow" has sailed for Pearl Harbor with a fleet of "S" subs for station there. Purser Hammam on the "Wilhelmina" said that the placing of eight additional mine sweepers at the Pearl Harbor naval station had been indefinitely postponed because of lack of housing accommodations for the officers and men.

The boilers and engines of the McCormick steam schooner "Klamath," which foundered on the upper California Coast last February during a hurricane, have been salvaged. The boilers are lying on the beach, and efforts will shortly be made to transport them to San Francisco. The engines have been placed on barges, and will also be taken to San Francisco.

The freighter "Point Bonita," operating for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which went ashore at Cardon Island, near Corinto, some time ago, has arrived at San Francisco. No damage was suffered by the craft grounding on the sandy beach of the Nicaragua shore. The accident, say mariners, was due to the washing away of a number of buoys in the vicinity.

As meager reports leak out concerning the negotiations now pending for the sale of the army transports "Great Northern" and "Northern Pacific," it is rumored that it is Hawaiian instead of intercoastal interests that are making a bid for the former Hill liners. They are wanted, it is said, for a new line from San Francisco to Honolulu, backed by Hawaiian capital. The liners are now out of commission, one at San Francisco and the other at New York.

Announcement has been made of a change in several rates on the eastbound service of the Pacific Coast-North Atlantic Eastbound Conference. The rate on brass and copper scrap was reduced from $2.50 to $1.50, and a new rate on paste and glue was made, placing these commodities at $2.75 and 90 cents, respectively, in carload lots of a minimum of 24,000 pounds. A limit on the liability for dogs in shipment has been placed at $100.

Development of the cocoanut industry in the Tacoma section is indicated by the report of Collector of Customs Roscoe M. Drumpeller for January, which shows the importation of cocoanut oil and copra amounting to over 6,000,000 pounds—exceeding all other imports on Puget Sound by a large margin. Peanuts also furnished a large part of the tonnage received in sound ports, the shelled goobers running to 1,094,060 pounds. A considerable amount of this product is made into peanut butter in Tacoma factories.

The American steamer "West Kedrone" of the European Pacific line, departed Antwerp April 6, with a large cargo of window glass for San Francisco importers. Glass is in big demand at all California points for building operations, and the cables stated that the Antwerp manufacturers are extremely active. The cargo of the "West Kedrone" amounts to 77,335 cases, totaling 2800 tons, and constitutes a record shipment of foreign window glass to this Coast. Kennedy & Hunter and Company are the local agents for the European Pacific lines.

Every one of the nineteen European members of the crew of the Dutch steamer "Merauke" was stricken by a malignant form of malaria which is infecting the ports of India, it was reported upon the vessel's arrival at San Francisco. No lives were lost on the "Merauke," as the vessel was able to get to sea, and the fever disappeared. Four officers died on the Dutch steamer "Deambi," lying in the same harbor, because so many of the crew were ill at one time that the steamer could not leave port. Five of the "Merauke's" officers were ill at the same time.

There is a heavy demand for steamer accommodations at San Francisco for travel to South and Central American ports. Steamship officials as well as tourist agencies declare that requests are pouring in upon them from all eastern points. The officials of the T. K. K. have announced that they were adding three steamers to the South American trade. The first to arrive will be the "Rakuyo Maru," on her maiden voyage. She will be followed by the liners "Ginyo Maru" and the "Bokuyo." While all three are of the freighter type, they have accommodations for 100 first-class passengers apiece.

To chart the waters around Cape Mendocino, the Coast and Geodetic Survey steamer "Lydonia" is operating from Eureka in charge of Captain E. H. Pagenhart. Although Eureka harbor is well mapped, few soundings have been made around Cape Mendocino. P. A. Perrin, hydrographic and geodetic engineer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, passed through San Francisco en route from Washington to Manila, where he will pass some time charting the waters of the Philippines. The Survey maintains one vessel in Philippine waters, and the Island Government four survey ships.

A fast run of four days from Bellingham to San Pedro was made by the big motorship "Kennecott." The vessel carried a shipment of more than 4,000,000 feet of lumber—a record cargo. The vessel sailed from the North on April 3 and made the 1200-mile run with her record shipment in an average running time of 300 miles a day. According to advices received by the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce, the builders and owners of the craft watched the movements of the vessel with keen interest, as it is reported that a new type of Diesel engine was installed when the motorship was built. The "Kennecott" is a vessel of 2200 tons and was launched January 6 last for the Alaska Steamship Company, according to records.

According to officials of the United States Shipping Board, the steamer "Colin H. Livingstone," operated by the United States Transport Company, in which Charles W. Morse is interested, and which is en route from New York to Pacific Coast ports to inaugurate a new service, is having her troubles on the maiden trip. The Shipping Board has announced withdrawal of credit from the fleet of ships operated by the transport company, since the operating concern determined to engage in Coastwise trade with Shipping Board vessels, against the policy of the board. The fight started when the Morse interests obtained an injunction in the courts of Virginia restraining the Shipping Board from interfering with its fleet. The Shipping Board countered with the announcement that it held record title to the ships of the fleet and would not permit prior liens or claims against the vessels. In effect, therefore, the operators are without the backing of the board. The steamers of the fleet consist of the "Vanada," "H. F. Morse," "E. A. Morse," "Clemence C. Morse," "Jennie R. Morse," "Anna E. Morse" and "Colin H. Livingstone." The last named ship is due to reach this Coast during the present month, but is said to have encountered legal difficulties arising out of the controversy in her various ports of call.

With buoyancy characterizing the freight market and with a startling up-turn just recorded in the charter market, a situation has arisen which would be amusing were it not so pregnant of disaster. A number of shipping men who have always preached the slump now refuse to see the counter-action, and are making bear raids on the bull market. Not only are they exerting their personal influence in the way of pessimism, but they are also holding back the business interests they represent. The more pronounced has become the recovery, the more outspoken they are in knocking the outlook. They willingly admit that rates are very low, but deny that more tonnage is offering, in the face of the fact that many vessels have rejected freight within the last week or so. One shipping man went so far as to say that high rates make business and low rates kill it, forgetting the fundamental economic law that low transportation charges always encourage distribution. Since the new Oriental rates have gone in effect, this trade has shown signs of rapid recovery. Despite all the evil predictions for the intercoastal trade, steamers are carrying full cargoes in almost all instances, and it is known that companies now in this run are planning expansions. The rise in the grain rates to the United Kingdom from 55 to 70 shillings featured the charter market. On the heels of this news it became known that the manager of the East Asiatic Company had closed for practically a full cargo on the motorship "Indien" at the old rate, with 60-shilling option for two ports on the Mediterranean. This bear charter, it will be noted, was made on a bull market.

UNION LABEL PRINTING TRADES LABOR COUNCIL SAN FRANCISCO

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 13, 1921.

UNEMPLOYMENT

At the present time every commercial nation is confronted with unemployment. The problem has become serious as well as international, therefore worthy of investigation.

Unemployment is a creature of competition in industry; it is the result of faulty regulation, therefore like the industries affected easily becomes world wide. In normal periods it is usually a local or national evil, constantly growing more acute as the more frequent recurring industrial depressions strike us. Without considering the abnormal situation created by disturbances in our commercial and industrial circles, due to the late world war, the usual cause and effect of acute employment calls for a discussion of all the ramifications of this evil, and what could be accomplished under our present commercial system in the manner of prevention or remedy. In dealing with the subject, cause, effect and cure should be considered from the practical, rather than theoretical standpoint.

In certain instances the causes may be found in the individuals, but usually they are circumstantial; they are general and specific. Some of the general causes are: business depressions resulting from faulty regulation of industries; long hours of labor performed by individuals, not shortened in proportion to the adoption of labor-saving appliances and machinery; exploitation of children; waste, monopoly, and locking up of natural resources, such as lands, timber, coal, minerals, etc., and the general unrest of the toilers due to unjust exploitation and unbearable conditions.

The specific causes apply more in a local way and to the individual. Favorable climatic conditions in a certain section will frequently invite and draw homeless wanderers and invalids from many other places, thereby overpopulating the locality to which the migration centers. Industries operating upon a seasonal basis frequently leave large armies of workers unemployed, at least temporarily, at the close of the season.

On the Pacific Coast our geographical position tends to influence the situation. Being on the extreme Western edge, between the Occident and the Orient, with the course of migration setting westward, there is no further outlet to the migratory workers and they are compelled to turn face about or wander up and down the coastal States. A very pronounced cause of unemployment is the continuous turnover, which is mainly due to general unrest of unskilled or common labor, brought about through enforced competition with Asiatic standards and the resulting degredation of the individuals. Hostility of arrogant employers towards organizations of the workers and their desire to keep at hand a plentiful supply of labor is frequently the means of disconnecting the machinery necessary to the operation of interlocking industries.

The effects of unemployment become immediately apparent, one of the first visible signs is the movement towards large industrial centers, where vast armies of workers congregate in efforts to obtain work. During such times of depression the distribution and redistribution of the individuals fails entirely, thereby accentuating the difficulties.

It is not only the submerged who are affected by these periods of depression, but often the severest suffering falls upon those who are satisfied to be termed the middle-classes, the small business and professional men. These are often the most unfortunately situated. Lacking the defense of organization which alleviates the conditions of those engaged in such crafts as maintain protective associations, they receive the full effect of calamity. Oftentimes it is necessary for such individuals to keep up appearances, and they are compelled to struggle to the last before accepting such pauper tainted expedients which are brought into operation as temporary relief. Public works, free soup kitchens, specially provided activities, or even unemployed insurance are powerless to prevent or remedy the evils of faulty regulation of industry. The prevention lies within the power of the great mass of toilers. Financial chiefs and captains of industry have been permitted to operate, without check or correction, a system that must inevitably result in severe suffering to the masses. Regulation of industry must be placed and kept under control of the workers before the faults will be eliminated; where profit is the main consideration there can be no hope of perfection.

Long periods of unemployment are often reflected in the character of individual victims. An impaired efficiency, carelessness, lack of initiative or ambition, and several other detrimental traits are formed during periods of enforced idleness. Even as individual members of society are degraded by the external circumstances of industrial depression, the community is injured by the collapse of physical and moral standards and by increase in crime and criminals.

A remedy for the evil is imperative, and it cannot be found among the many palliative measures used from time to time. A better understanding between the classes and the masses is an impossible dream. A public conscience is slow to assume its obligations. Minimum wage, welfare, educational and child-labor laws have resulted from sporadic mass action of the workers; but they are only at best palliative. The efforts towards more efficient methods of labor distribution, provisions for transportation, etc., are only makeshifts and neither preventive or remedial. Those captains of industry who hold the reins of control have always blindly opposed any suggestion relative to regulation of output; they will be compelled to meet that situation at some future date because the toilers themselves will do the regulating. They will not only regulate the output, but distribution and consumption of same. The unscientific methods of the present will be replaced in line with natural progress. Not only output from mill, mine or factory needs a more scientific regulation, but the nature and size of packages, for comfortable handling is an urgent necessity. When the workers have something to say as to the conditions of their labor they will see that the tasks are not unnecessarily severe. Such evil practices as putting up cement and like dusty material in bags; saltpetre, ore, etc., in packages of 200 pounds or more; wheat, coffee and other commodities in containers which demand the utmost exertions of the most physically fit to handle must be changed.

Undoubtedly one of the best solutions of the problem of unemployment is active participation of workers in the management of industry.

CHILDREN'S CONFIDENCE ABUSED

The State Federation of Teachers are accomplishing some highly constructive work, and they continue to protect the schools of California from corruption and the influences of insidious machinations. Their patriotic efforts to combat the latter evil is being made manifest every day.

As a warning to parents, they have directed public attention to the following, which appeared in a recent issue of the Oakland Tribune:

To the Editor of the Tribune:

The attention of the parents of school children in San Francisco was recently called to the fact that politicians were making the public schools the kindergarten of politics, "Buy Spring Valley (Water Bonds)" being the slogan.

Here is a surprise for the fathers and mothers of Berkeley. Someone in the school department with authority is inaugurating a "spy system." This week the children were handed a printed questionnaire entitled, "What do you do with your Spare Time?" or words to that effect. A series of about fifty questions were asked, nearly every question being of a personal character and largely about the children's parents. For instance, "What is your father's business?" "How does he spend his spare time?" "How much money does he give you to spend?" "How much of his spare time does he give to you?" "What does he do Sundays?" "Does your mother hire help or does she do her own housework?" "What books does she read?"

The children were informed that the information would be held as confidential! (Can you beat it?) Also they were not permitted to bring these questionnaires home to their parents. Why?

I myself am at a loss to understand why the co-operation of the parents is not desirable in a matter in which they are principally concerned. . . . Possibly the school department would not object to sending one of its questionnaire forms to the editor of the Tribune for perusal. H. W. D.

Berkeley, March 19.

In commenting upon the foregoing, the Federation states that:

"With the evident desire to secure such information regarding the home condition of the children as will enable the school to better meet community needs, no socially-minded person can quarrel. When, however, without a special mandate from the people, a public official assumes the right to ask a boy to furnish a written record as to just what books his mother reads and just how his father spends his spare time and his Sundays, the cherished Anglo-Saxon ideal of individual liberty is seriously menaced by the development of a system closely akin to Prussian paternalism or Czarist espionage. To insist that such a report be made before obtaining the parents' consent is infinitely more despotic than to raid their homes without a search warrant. The inquiry as to the father's Sunday work sounds like probing into the religious convictions of American citizens who believe in the absolute religious freedom guaranted to them by the Constitution of their country.

"But the political aspect of the whole procedure is far less dangerous than its moral and social consequences. The method which 'H. W. D.' says was used to obtain the information desired was more than unethical; it was unprofessional, high-handed and unsocial. In requiring the child to give out information regarding his parents' private life without consulting them, the school authority in reality required him to abuse the confidential family relationships on which all social stability rests. To bribe him to write down such information by promising him that his statements would be treated as 'confidential' came dangerously near to just the kind of sneakish procedure against which it is the primary function of the Berkeley schools to fortify him. In order that the parents of Berkeley may determine Superintendent Wilson's fitness as director of the educational training of their children, is he prepared to concede their right to require his daughter to submit to them, without his consent, a written statement as to what books he reads and how he spends every hour of his spare time?

"In the cloud there is some light. School authorities that have money to spend in printing such a questionnaire will doubtless raise the salaries of their teachers to a respectable figure, without having to repeat the appeal made to the teachers last October to donate about $5 each toward a fund for distribution among persons who agreed to purchase at par Berkeley school bonds quoted in the market at a discount. Again, some Berkeley parents have no pin-money for their children, some Berkeley Children can't tell just wwhere or how their parents spend their spare time! Should the child also mention topics of his elders' conversation?"

With full appreciation for interest taken in the JOURNAL by all members of the International Union, we desire at this time to express thanks to our comrades on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts for their special efforts in our behalf. The correspondence forwarded has been of real live interest to organized seamen, and was selected with rare judgment. Such efforts reveal the true union spirit and must inevitably result in benefit to the JOURNAL, the organization and the membership thereof.

Always demand the Union Label!

SEAMEN'S ACT PROTECTS

The following copy of opinion of Judge Meyer is of interest to seamen, and can be considered as quite a little victory at law, inasmuch as it sustains one of the protective features of the Seamen's Act.

City Court of the City of New York. Harry M. Rogers, Plaintiff, against Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. Silas B. Axtell, Attorney for Plaintiff. Messrs. Kirlin, Woolsey, Hickox, Campbell & Keating, Attornys for Defendant, Vernon S. Jones, of Counsel. Meyer, J.

This is a motion for judgment on the pleadings. The plaintiff was employed on one of the defendant's steamships, viz, the "Baton Rouge," as chief steward. While the vessel was in the vicinity of Havana, Cuba, he was assaulted by the chief officer, as a result of which he sustained severe personal injuries. It is also alleged that the assault was committed by the officer while in the performance of his duties as chief officer. Prior to March 4, 1915, a master of a vessel was deemed to be a fellowservant of a seaman while upon the high seas (Gabrielson v. Waydell, 135 N. Y., 1). On March 4, 1915, a new Seamen's Act was passed by Congress, Section 20 of which reads as follows:

> "That in any suit to recover damages for any injury sustained on board vessel or in its service seamen having command shall not be held to be fellow servants with those under their authority."

During the same year, Chapter 153, Section 9 of the law was again amended (Sec. 8391 of the United States Compiled Statutes, 1916, Vol. 7) to read as follows:

> "Flogging and all other forms of corporal punishment are hereby prohibited on board of any vessel, and no form of corporal punishment on board of any vessel shall be deemed justifiable. * * * Any failure on the part of such master to use due diligence to comply herewith, which failure shall result in the escape of such officer, shall render the master or vessel or the owner of the vessel liable in damages for such flogging or corporal punishment to the person illegally punished by such officer."

From this it will be seen that the Gabrielson case no longer has any application. At the time it was decided, there was grave disagreement among the members of the court upon the proposition as to whether the master was a fellow servant with the seaman. This difference of opinion has now been disposed of by the definite language of the statute quoted above, and the right of a seaman to recover from the owner of a vessel has now also been definitely disposed of by statute. For these reasons the motion for judgment on the pleadings must be denied, with $10 costs. Order signed.

LABOR FIGHTS INJUNCTION

Organized labor at New York is concentrating its forces for a supreme fight against use of injunctions by employers in labor troubles. The executive committee of the Central Trades and Labor Council, representing approximately 800,000 union workers, at a conference addressed by Samuel Gompers, recently decided to support the movement to fight in the courts against issuance of injunctions forbidding picketing.

Next to the family, the trade union is the highest exemplification of the gregarious instinct.

High rail rates on shingles from the Northwest to the Atlantic Coast have given the intercoastal steamships a chance to cut into that profitable line. The rail rate from Portland to Boston is $1.50 a hundred pounds; the water rate is only 75 cents. Movement of around 2000 tons this month was expected. The steamer "Willhilo" was expected to load several hundred tons of shingles this week at Vancouver should the vessel reach that port. The steamer "Katrina Luckenbach" has contracted space for about 500 tons, and the "Bessie Dollar" will take 750 tons, both to Boston. Shipping men at the Merchants' Exchange expressed the opinion the movement on shingles would be one of the largest items in the east bound intercoastal trade for the next few months.

It was reported in shipping circles recently that the bark "Hesperian," of the Rolph Navigation and Coal Company, had been chartered to load grain at the Columbia river for the United Kingdom at 60 shillings a ton.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

ESSENCE OF REACTION

In the JOURNAL issue of March 23, under the caption, "Pickets Declared Illegal," there appeared an article containing certain judicial comment at a hearing on the application of Schwartz & Jaffee, Inc., for an injunction to restrain the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America from interfering with the workers of the company.

At that time Justice C. Van Siclen of the Supreme Court in Brooklyn expressed the opinion that there can be no lawful picketing. He said: "To my mind there can be no lawful picketing, because if it is lawful picketing it can be of no use to the union. The purpose of picketing is interference one way or another. The only reason human beings do it is to try to injure someone." He stated further that: "I imagine the workers will find difficulty in getting work. The worm is turning again. The trouble with the employers is, apparently, the workers can't work if they belong to a union."

Perusal of the following from a New York paper will prove that the exhibition of anti-labor prejudice was not of passing moment, but that the reactionary ideas are ingrained:

Injunction Granted

"Supreme Court Justice Van Siclen, in Brooklyn recently, issued a temporary injunction to Schwartz & Jaffee, Inc., clothing manufacturers at the Bush Terminal, restraining the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America from acts of intimidation, including picketing, which would interfere with the company's business. The court found from affidavits presented that picketing as practiced was wholly illegal 'and should be suppressed.' There has been a strike at the plant since last December.

"As practically the same state of facts existed in the case of Samuel W. Peck & Co., large clothing manufacturers, in Williamsburg, Justice Van Siclen granted a temporary injunction to that concern, also against the Amalgamated. Both firms are seeking heavy damages from the union.

"The union denied responsibility for violence attributed to pickets and others, charged 'lock out' and asserted an attempt on the part of the plaintiff to destroy the Amalgamated.

"In his decision Justice Van Siclen said that from 1914 labor had forced conditions upon capital which were oppressive. 'Now, and perhaps for a few years to come, the pendulum swing will be on the side of capital, which in turn will force upon labor contracts equally oppressive and exclusive as to union or organized workers. It will be seen that at no time is there what may be termed the true open shop.'

"A peculiar slant of the whole situation is that the worker of today may become the master of tomorrow; from the radical to the conservative by mere change of circumstance and position. Nevertheless, there will be no change of relationship. When capital has the upper hand it will continue to grind down labor, and when labor is in the ascendant it will in turn continue to harass, cheat and seek to either control or destroy capital. Neither at any time is willing to give the quid pro quo, and the never ceasing conflict goes on.

"There can be no real solution of the problem, as old as our civilization, unless the foundation therefor is established by law. Labor, labor unions, or organized labor have their place and use. Capital and organization thereof, likewise. But both must be made to know and to keep their respective proper places and use by law, to change only by the ever fluctuating force of supply and demand. Such a medium would prevent both extreme conservatism or autocracy and extreme radicalism or Sovietism."

In view of the fact that the powers of the judiciary are continually increasing, the prejudice displayed by Justice Van Siclen reveals a danger which threatens our constitutional rights and personal liberties. In this case there is no mincing of words or fine platitudes. The Justice says: "When capital has the upper hand it will continue to grind down labor, and when labor is in the ascendant it will in turn continue to harass, cheat and seek to either control or destroy capital."

Such servitude to despotism has seldom been given expression from the Bench. The cold-blooded remark that, "Now and perhaps for a few years to come, the pendulum swing will be on the side of capital, which in turn will force upon labor contracts equally oppressive and exclusive as to union or organized workers," reveals the extent to which unions are at a disadvantage in such a court of equity.

Pan-American Brotherhood

Dispatches from Buenos Aires under date of April 2 stated that the port workers had refused to discharge and reload the American steamship "Martha Washington," and later dispatches reveal the fact that the Port Workers' Union will refuse to permit any Munson Line steamer to discharge its cargo at Buenos Aires unless the line accedes to its demands.

Officials of the Munson line refused to consider certain demands of the firemen on the "Martha Washington," which resulted from the shooting of a fireman by a ship's officer. One of the demands was that the captain pay off any Spanish firemen who desired to leave the ship. The men alleged that they were the victims of brutal treatment during the voyage, and the Port Workers' Union struck in sympathy with the ship's firemen. The company objected, holding that any question of bad treatment could be referred only to the United States Consul, since the firemen had signed for the voyage in New York, and the contentions of the company were sustained by the American Consul General who refused to receive a delegation of port workers, saying he would deal only with the firemen and the steamer's captain.

Irrespective of what may have been the circumstances which were responsible for the situation, and leaving aside any consideration of detail in the matter, the fact is strikingly apparent that members of the Port Workers' Union at Buenos Aires are imbued with a spirit of concern for their fellow workers which must inevitably result in closer relations and better understanding between themselves and all seamen sailing to and from that port.

Effective Fire Drill

When the Furness Line steamship "Guiana" recently arrived in New York from the West Indies, the passengers were loud in their praise of the vessel's crew for the manner in which they put out a serious fire in the hold of the steamer while lying at St. Kitts, West Indies. A purse of $500 was made up for the crew as a mark of appreciation.

The "Guiana" had stopped at the small fishing island about 7 o'clock in the evening, while the passengers were dining, when the fire was reported in the second hold forward. In a few minutes the ventilators from the hold, which contained several hundred barrels of Trinidad asphalt and five hundred sacks of cocoa beans, were belching forth thick clouds of smoke.

Captain Carmichael quickly sent the sixty cabin and thirty-two steerage passengers ashore, then he and Chief Engineer George Mosely and crew fought and subdued the flames with live steam.

Freight Rates Aviate

Following a meeting of representatives of all the principal shipping companies operating from New York, announcement has been made that ocean freight rates will be advanced immediately. It is stated that an agreement has been reached which ends the rate cutting war that has been in effect several months. All classes of freight will be affected by the increases, which range in a few instances as high as 300 per cent.

A wireless message received at New York reported that the American schooner "Conniocliffe," bound from Mobile for Arecibo, Porto Rico, has been destroyed by fire. The crew were rescued from the burning vessel by the British steamer "Parthencia."

BRUTES MUST SERVE SENTENCE

Following the affirmation of their convictions for mistreating members of the crew of the sailing ship "Puaka" by the Appellate Court in the Federal District, Captain Adolph C. Pedersen, the skipper, and his two sons, Leonard and Adolph E., surrendered to the United States Marshal and began serving prison sentences.

The elder Pedersen was taken to Atlanta to serve eighteen months, while his two sons will serve sentences of six months each in the Essex county prison in Newark. The period of three months which the prisoners spent in the Tombs before their trials will be deducted from their sentences.

The prisoners were convicted at New York in September, 1919, of continuous brutality towards their crew on a voyage from the Pacific Coast to South Africa. Captain Adolph C. Pedersen was generally known as "Hell-fire Pedersen," and he, with his two sons serving as mates aboard the "Puaka," made every effort to sustain a "hard case" reputation. A brief review of the case by Comrade P. B. Gill was contained in the JOURNAL issue of October 8, 1919.

AUSTRALIAN LABOR LAWS FAIL

By John P. Frey

Australia was the first country to establish compulsory arbitration. It was the first to declare all strikes illegal, and provide heavy penalties for violations of the law.

Since Lloyd wrote his famous work, "Australia, the Country Without Strikes," many years ago, the Australian method has been held up as an illustration of what can be accomplished through the operation of a law which provided for compulsory labor and compulsory adjustment of labor disputes.

For many years the Australian unions have made bitter complaints against this law, and time and again have gone on strike in violation of its provisions. The country's premier and its leading statesmen have time and again made the statement in the United States and in European countries that the law did not prevent strikes. All of this evidence, however, failed to dampen the ardor of those who were endeavoring to force similar legislation in the United States and Canada.

Australia is the country which has had more experience with this form of legislation and with the system, which is provided for the adjusting of industrial disputes, than any other. If experience is of any value in guiding men, then the experience in Australia should be borne in mind by those who are advocating, as in Kansas, legislation which prevents men from going on strike when, for any reason, the conditions of labor become intolerable.

Australia, after over twenty years' experience, has discovered and admitted that its law is not sound; that not only has the law failed to prevent strikes, but that the efforts to apply the law have established a condition which menaced the welfare of Australian industry, and the rights of its citizens. And so the Australian Arbitration Act has been amended. The amendments to the law are contained in the December, 1919, report of the Industrial Gazette of the Department of Labor and Industry for New South Wales. We quote from the report in part:

"An important effect of the Act is the amendment of the law with regard to strikes by a modification of the principle of repression expressed in the original Act. The law, as it stands, does not impose an absolute prohibition of strikes except in the case of employes of the Crown, but maintains an important distinction between strikes which are legal and those which are illegal, for the latter of which substantial penalties are provided. The purpose of the restrictions which the Act imposes upon strikes is to prevent an unreasonable cessation of work, and to this end a strike is declared to be illegal unless the following precedent conditions are observed:

"1. In the case of employes working under an award or industrial agreement, a secret ballot is taken and as the result the union determines that the award, or agreement is no longer binding on its members.

"2. Fourteen days' notice is given to the Minister of intentions to commence a strike, or of the existence of conditions likely to lead to the same."

These amendments to the law establish a most radical change, for, although reservations are provided for, these reservations are of such character as to permit much wider freedom of action. They restore the workers' previous right to go on strike, with but slight limitation, whenever in their opinion such an act is justified.

The amendment to the Australian law is a complete surrender of the principle of compulsory arbitration and the compulsory labor which existed under that law. In a clear, definite, emphatic manner it sustains the principle that men must have the right to quit work whenever conditions of labor become intolerable, or whenever the workers feel that they are justified in taking this step in their own interest. The experiment in compulsory labor has been a long, and, in some respects, a costly one, but the lesson has been learned at least in Australia. Compulsory labor has been discarded, it has proved to be a huge mistake. It cannot exist among free people. Democracy and compulsory arbitration and compulsory labor cannot continue to exist side by side. One or the other must surrender.

OCEAN'S BURIED TREASURES

In addition to the vast amount of wealth which was sent to "Davy Jones' Locker" during the late war, there are several great fortunes awaiting discovery and salvage.

From various records it seems more than probable that at least a billion dollars of treasure in the shape of coin, ingots and plate lies buried under the sea or on islands where pirates have secreted their booty.

The flagship "Forentia," of the Spanish Armada, sank in Tobermory bay, off the west coast of Scotland, in 1588, loaded with $15,000,000 in gold.

The Spanish galleons scuttled in Vigo bay to avoid capture by the British in 1702, were laden with gold, silver and precious stones estimated as being worth $140,000,000—the harvest of four years of looting in rich Mexico.

Benito Bonito, last of the great pirates, buried $60,000,000 loot on Cocos island, an insignificant dot of land sixteen miles square, 300 miles west of Panama. Eighteen expeditions have tried to find this treasure, but without success.

On Alboran island, a lonely rock in the Mediterranean, lies $5,000,000 in gold buried by a pirate crew of the "Young Constitution," when chased and cornered by a British gunboat in 1831.

The "Black Prince," a British ship loaded with $3,000,000 in gold to pay the British soldiers, was sunk by Russian gunfire at Sebastopol.

The East Indiaman "Grosvenor" went down off St. John's Cape Colony, with $5,000,000 aboard.

On the island of Mauritius is buried somewhere $150,000,000 in gold, silver and precious stones, pirate loot from the French and English ships which in turn had looted India.

On a little island in the Spanish Main lies $1,200,000 in gold buried by the French pirate Latrobe one hundred years ago, and another treasure estimated at $6,000,000 is buried near by.

A pirate hoard of $5,000,000 lies on an island in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Seventy Turkish vessels were sunk in the famous sea fight of Navarino in October, 1827, by the Anglo-French-Russian fleet. They carried $5,000,000 among them.

"Oom Paul" Kruger had something like $4,000,000 when he had to flee from South Africa. Some declare it was lost in the wreck of the "Zululand" in Delagoa bay; others say it is buried in the fastness of the Transvaal mountains.

Lying 110 feet below the surface of Lake Naomi are two galleys belonging to the Roman emperors Tiberius and Caligula, which contain gold, jewels and art treasures worth at least $5,000,000.

Three Spanish ships sunk by Admiral Blake off Cadiz, Spain, hold $5,000,000 in gold.

The Spanish treasure ships foundered in Santa Cruz bay, Canary islands, contained $10,000,000.

On West Indian islands lies $5,000,000 buried by the daring Captain Kidd, most notorious of all pirates.

The $2,000,000 hoard of Captain Melville, Australian bushwhacker, is hidden somewhere in the bush of Australia.

The treasures and loot of Attila, the Hun, $50,000,000 in all, lie buried somewhere under the waters of the River Danube.

BRITAIN'S FOOD SUPPLY

According to figures given by the British Minister of Agriculture, the estimated consumption in the United Kingdom of various essential commodities with the proportions which were produced in the country and imported during the year 1920 are as follows:

Commodities	Estimated consumption in 1920. Totals. Tons.	Home produced. Per cent.	Imported. Per cent.
Wheat	6,715,000	18	82
Barley	1,950,000	62	38
Oats	3,364,000	86	14
Beef and veal	1,140,000	59	41
Mutton and lamb	520,000	35	65
Bacon and hams	374,000	28	72
Butter	196,000	60	40
Cheese	178,000	26	74

The foregoing figures are enlightening when considered in connection with the situation prevailing during the year 1920. Under normal conditions, home production of the eight essentials might easily reverse the percentage figures which show in the aggregate, according to the tables, a percentage for home production of 46¾ per cent and for importation 53¼ per cent. How much improvement in favor of internal production could be made under the exacting demands of necessity is problematical; but figures to hand prove the assertion, that Britain could be starved in a few weeks—in the event of curtailment of outside food supply—to be open to question.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Profits Versus Wages

Conferences between President Harding and Chairman Clark of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and Chairman Barton of the Railroad Labor Board, have followed the lines drawn for them by the meeting of railroad executives in New York. The President has become alarmed at the desperate financial condition of the private companies controlling transportation in the United States, and is now taking advice as to whether he shall come out openly to urge the organized railroad workers to accept a drastic reduction in wages.

Mr. Harding shrinks from telling the railroad workers what he thinks—that when it comes to a question of the survival of the American standard of living or the profits of the railroad stockholders, the standard of living for the wage-workers must give way. But his Cabinet tells him that he must be resolute. If the railroad companies are not sustained today, the steel corporations and the coal operators may be brought to grief tomorrow by this hungry horde of union men and women. His hope of playing the role of a conciliator of labor with capital is fading.

Railroad Operations Wasteful

The alternative to a wage decrease, in restoring the railroads to a profit-paying basis, is more efficient operation. The railroad workers say that the present method of competitive private operation is primarily wasteful. They declare for democratic operation under the Plumb Plan. Harding and his advisers are hostile to democratic operation of any industry. They are loyal to the Esch-Cummins Act, even while their actions prove that they know that law to have been wrong in principle, and a failure in actual operation. They have learned nothing from the rapid disintegration of railroad finance in the past year. They stick to their old habit of blaming all unfavorable changes in business conditions to the high wages of organized labor.

It is evident that the Interstate Commerce Commission raised the freight rates too high, last summer, for the American farmer and small manufacturer to pay. Business has been cut off The railroads have ceased to act as the matter-of-course outlet of production. The producer must now consider whether he can afford to use the railway at all. Chairman Clark of the Interstate Commerce Commission would probably be glad to see the rates reduced. He would see them reduced, even at the expense of the railroad workers.

Workers Resist Wage Cuts

Thus far there appears no chance that the railroad workers will accept a wage cut, even if the Railroad Labor Board shall declare one to be necessary. They have shown the board that their present wages are insufficient, and that there is no economic need on the part of the shippers which would justify a further reduction of the margin of economic safety of the [illegible] railroad workers. They [illegible] p.

Meantime a similar problem is facing the postal employes, due to the fact that the Postoffice Department had a deficit of over $25,000,000 in the first quarter of the present fiscal year, and will presumably have a deficit of $100,000,000 for the twelve months ending June 30, 1921.

Are their wages to be cut by Congress, in order to make up the deficit, or will Congress and the Postmaster-General change the rates to be paid by the public for the use of the mail service? The parcel post division, for example, is carrying express at from one-half to one-fifth of the commercial express rates, and is operating at a heavy deficit. Shall parcel post rates be increased? First-class letter mail is just about breaking even between cost and revenue. Shall the rate on letters be increased, as was the case during the war?

If wages are to be maintained at the existing low level in the Postoffice Department, then Congress will have to increase the postal charges or vote a direct subsidy from the Treasury. The politicians who were elected to Congress last November will not adopt that alternative. They will hesitate at increasing postal charges. They will be inclined to try to force upon the postal workers a sharp reduction in pay. Burlesonism will have triumphed, even when Burleson has gone.

Fire Fighters Organize

One of the public-service groups which was the lastest to come into the trade-union fold, but which is now growing steadily, is the city firemen's organization—the International Association of Fire Fighters, with headquarters here. They have 25,000 members and, in spite of the opposition of the old political gangs in most of the cities, they now have the support of clean citizens in their program of reform of the fire-fighting system. The three-platoon plan is taking the place of the old two-platoon arrangement, and the union is now installing its own life insurance system to reduce the dependence of the men upon local aid. Six thousand of the members have enrolled in the insurance plan during the past month.

Fred W. Baer, the international president, who has just returned from Cleveland, Ohio, where the city politicians are fighting the union, reports that 90 per cent of the 700 men in the service there now hold union cards, and the union is gaining in strength under the attacks made by Director Sprosty of the Department of Public Safety. The union recently caused the conviction of Sprosty on charges of non-enforcement of the three-platoon ordinance, and he was sentenced to serve ten days in jail and pay a fine of $500. The higher court reversed this verdict, but the prosecution has appealed to the State Supreme Court.

Technical Men Restless

President Rosemund of the International Federation of Technical Engineers, Architects and Draftmen's Unions, announces their annual convention here, beginning April 12. They will discuss a wage scale, the "open shop" drive, and group insurance.

"The technical men of the railroads," said Rosemund, "have found that the older engineering societies which admit both employer and employe cannot consistently protect their material welfare. To provide decent wages and working conditions, they will have to adopt the tactics of the trade-union movement. The wage award of the Railroad Wage Board completely ignored the technical group; and as a result we are receiving numerous inquiries from these employes."

While the railroad and postal workers are struggling against a lowering of their standard of living, the workers in the Government arsenals and navy yards and shops are warned that their turn will come next. President Alifas of District 44, of the International Association of Machinists, covering Government plants, and Secretary Berres of the Metal Trades Department of the A. F. of L., have jointly appealed to Secretary of War Weeks against the order issued by the Chief of Ordnance that there be made an immediate survey of wage rates in the vicinity of various arsenals, with a view of readjusting arsenal wages.

Congress cut off a bonus payment of $240 a year for these employes, beginning next July, and last January there were a number of reductions in pay in several arsenals. Moreover, when the men tried to get a raise in pay, last year, President Wilson refused it on the ground that he did not want to influence the larger issue of an increase in railroad wages by setting an example in Government service. He made the same argument with reference to the miners' wage demands.

Protest has been made by Alifas, also, against the anti-union propaganda which some of the more reactionary army officers have ventured upon, since the change of administration. In a letter to Senator Lodge, Alifas quotes a Boston paper which printed an account of a speech by Col. T. C. Dickson, commandant of the Watertown arsenal, wherein Dickson is represented as saying:

"The Secretary of Labor was the labor lord during the war. He was a union member and carried a union card. On practically all labor boards and commissions you did not find representatives of labor, but American Federation officials or people tainted with socialistic views. Is it, therefore, any wonder that the A. F. of L. got what it wanted during the war? Is it any wonder the taxpayers sweat because they must go on paying heavy taxes because of the advantages taken by labor during the war?"

Dickson wants a general conscription of labor for the next war.

In reply, Secretary Davison of the International Association of Machinists, wants to know why the Watertown arsenal could not have been run by a civilian—even a cripple—while soldiers were so badly needed in France. He suggests that President Harding will get better results in bringing labor and capital into an understanding, if firebrands such as Dickson are put under restraint.

NOTED DANE TO EXPLORE

The announcement has just been made that Knud Rasmussen, the explorer, will head an expedition which will leave Denmark this year for the North American Arctic Archipelago to investigate the life and conditions of the Eskimos, and to complete the survey of Baffins Land and adjacent territory. The Danish Government will contribute 100,000 kroner to the support of the expedition, which will leave Copenhagen on board the motorship "Solkongen," and will remain in the field about two years.

GERMANY'S ARGENTINE TRADE

The Director of the German-Argentinian Central Association in Berlin, Mr. Albert Fröhlich, is quoted, regarding the prospects of Germany to regain its trade with Argentine, as follows:

"In the last normal year of peace, 1913, German imports into Argentine had a value of 71,300,000 gold pesos; that is, 16.9 per cent, or about one-sixth of the country's total imports, comprising the most varied articles of export, such as iron and steel manufactures, locomotives, machinery of all kinds, household and cooking utensils, textiles, all products of the electrical industry, furniture, pianos, toys, ornaments, watches, chemical and pharmaceutical goods, etc. The Solingen district had a large share of the imports of small iron and steel goods before the war, and has already made a good start toward regaining its former place. German manufacturers, moreover, will be able to regain much of the territory interested in the importation of thrashing machines, motor plows, grinding mills, etc.

"An especially extensive branch of business in Argentine is the importation of automobiles, the number of which increased from 1581 cars in 1910 to 11,031 in 1917. Here, naturally, the American imports soon far outstripped all other countries.

"Among the important German manufacturers of passenger autos, which were successfully imported into Argentine before the war, might be mentioned Benz, Opel, N. A. G., and Protos, which companies gave especial attention to substantial construction and economical consumption of fuel. Recently some of these plants again turned their attention to the Argentine market, foremost among them being Opel, which was the only German passenger car exhibited at the automobile show in Buenos Aires in November of last year, the exhibit containing among others, an all-round car for country use which attracted a great deal of attention in Argentine because there is a demand for cars of powerful construction and light weight. Also for heavy trucks, Argentine may again become a good selling territory.

"Another large group of imports is represented by electrical material. In 1913 German imports of this class had outstripped all competition, having a falue of 5,300,000 gold pesos in a total importation of electrical articles worth 9,000,000 pesos. In Buenos Aires in 1913 the German Ueberseeische Electricitätsgesellschaft, with an expenditure of 200,000,000 gold marks, had organized the city's entire supply of electric current, and could therefore give large orders to German manufacturers. The second city in the country, Rossario, is supplied with electric current by an Anglo-Belgian company, but the electrical plants of other countries are generally fitted out with German material.

"The industrial conditions and customs in Argentine are highly complicated," said the speaker in conclusion, "and only those who can rely upon people familiar with the customs of the country can successfully take part in the import trade. In Germany the risks of independent action in Argentine are often underestimated. The novice in the Argentine market must obtain the help of an intermediary already established there who can advise him in minute detail as to what articles are in demand, what rules and customs governing importation must be observed and what tariff laws must be obeyed, etc. Otherwise experience will probably be dearly bought before a profitable business gets under way."

union labor is employed without discrimination."

The dictionary ignores repeated declarations by organized labor that the "open shop" term is a tricky device used by anti-union employers in an attempt to conceal their hostility to collective bargaining and the right of employes to be represented by persons of their own choosing. The claim that organized labor accepts the "open shop" term is impudent.

The authors of the dictionary announce that it is intended for the use of employers "to enable them to secure a better understanding of the point of view of their (?) men."

Reduce Teachers' Pay

The wide-spread agitation for a teachers' living wage has subsided and the pendulum is swinging the other way, according to officials of the American Federation of Teachers.

"School boards in South Dakota, Kansas and New Jersey," it is stated, "have already voted substantial cuts in pay, while the subject of salary reduction is under discussion in Ohio, Nebraska, Illinois and Washington. The severest handling yet on record has been given the teachers of the Platte line schools of South Dakota where the organized school boards have slashed pay 25 per cent of the 1920 schedules.

"The inevitable result of such short-sightedness will be that still more teachers will leave the profession of teaching or shift from the grammar schools to the better paid high school positions. Nebraska, where salary reduction is under contemplation, is employing 1,700 teachers on emergency certificates."

Urge Amnesty

Amnesty for political offenses was urged by a delegation of trade unionists and other citizens, lead by President Gompers, who called on President Harding. The chief executive was presented with resolutions on this subject adopted by the last convention of the A. F. of L. Members of the delegation are hopeful that the release of war offenders who would not be charged with a crime for the same offense in peace times would soon be affected.

A British proclamation issued March 24, 1921, prohibits the importation of the following articles: Firearms and other deadly weapons, including munitions and parts, grenades, bombs, etc., whether capable of being used with firearms or not, and the components of such ammunitions. Open general licenses have been granted for the importation into Great Britain of smooth-bore shotguns, air rifles, air guns and ammunitions for such weapons.

FISH TRAP PILE DRIVERS AND WEB WORKERS OF PUGET SOUND AND ALASKA
1315 Deck Street, Bellingham, Washington

Labor News

At Duluth, Minn., striking journeymen tailors have returned to work on the union shop basis.

In an effort to equalize work officers of the International Fur Workers' Union have called on these unionists to desist from working overtime.

Reaction continues rampant in Nebraska. The lower House of the Nebraska Legislature recently passed an anti-picketing bill on third reading, and the measure now goes to the Senate.

The New Jersey State Legislature has passed the Cossack bill over the veto of Governor Edwards. The bill calls for the establishment of two troops of 100 men each, who can be ordered to a municipality by the Governor on request of the officials of the municipality.

After a week's strike, organized printers of Okmulgee, Okla., have raised wages $3 a week on newspapers and established the 44-hour week in commercial shops. The new rates for night work on newspapers is $48 a week, and $45 for day work. Rates in the commercial shops will remain the same, but the 44-hour week is agreed to.

The National Association of Owners of Railroad Securities joined at Washington, Saturday, April 9, with five railroad labor unions in proposing that President Harding call a conference of representatives of both owners and employes to discuss the railroad problem, particularly as it affects wages and working conditions.

The monthly report of the conditions of labor camps in California, during the month of March, compiled by Director of Camp Sanitation Edward A. Brown, of the Commission of Immigration and Housing, shows a total of 164 camps inspected. Of this number, thirty-four were reported in good condition, 106 in fair condition, and twenty-four in bad shape.

California ranchers were compelled by war conditions to treat their workers with a certain degree of consideration. Now, however, they seem desirous of inviting trouble in their industries by slashing wages and lowering the workers' living conditions. A wage scale of 35 cents an hour has been agreed upon by the fruit growers of Placer County for general work on the ranches during the 1921 season. This does not include board, and is a considerable reduction over the scale in force during the preceding two or three years.

Permission to make provisional reduction of the wages of unskilled labor on the New York Central Railroad has been denied by the Railroad Labor Board. The railroad recently requested permission to put cuts of from 17 to 7 per cent into effect on April 1. The dispute was [illegible] the Labor Board after the railroad and employes had conferred. The dispute between the New York Central and its unskilled workers over a permanent reduction in wages will be heard on April 18 in connection with similar disputes which have been filed by other railroads. The board deemed it advisable to consolidate the hearing on the requests of the twenty-six roads in order to save time, inasmuch as it was expected that the arguments in each case would be similar.

Domestic and Naval

When the steamship "Brittania" arrived at Providence, R. I., she carried forty-one men in irons, who were alleged to be a mutinous crew of the steamer "Manoa." According to wireless information from the American consul at Horta, United States mail on the "Manoa" was rifled during the mutiny.

London advices received at San Francisco, by the Marine Department of the Chamber of Commerce, state that the freighter "Steel Maker," en route to the United Kingdom, has suffered engine trouble. The position of the vessel was not given, but it is believed that the craft is nearing Panama. Under direction of E. C. Evans & Sons, the "Steel Maker," with large consignments of freight loaded at San Francisco, sailed on March 23, for London, Avonmouth and Liverpool.

Consigned to the United States Navy Department, a record shipment of over 9000 tons of coal was brought into San Francisco on the United States Shipping Board's merchant freighter, "Eastern Sailor." The shipment was loaded on at Norfolk. The coal will be placed in the navy's bunkers at California City. What disposition will be made of the vessel is not known at present. It is not believed that the craft will be dispatched to the Virginia port for another shipment of coal.

London advices state that a fire was discovered in the forehold of the Union Steamship Company's vessel "Tahiti" while the craft was lying in port at Wellington, N. Z. The report stated that the vessel's wool cargo was damaged by the blaze, and that water added to the loss. The "Tahiti" sailed from Wellington on April 5. The San Francisco passenger offices of the company stated that they had been advised that the vessel had been delayed, but they were not notified that the craft had suffered from fire.

At San Francisco, Collector of Customs William B. Hamilton has received notice from Washington that United States passports will no longer be required of Americans leaving or entering the country nor of foreigners departing. The order reads: "This Government no longer requires American citizens entering or leaving the United States, or aliens departing from the United States to present passports or permits, nor requires issuance of identification cards to alien seamen leaving the United States. It is still advisable, however, for American citizens to obtain passports in order to meet requirements for foreign countries."

Constitutionality of the California criminal syndicalism law is to be determined by the State Supreme Court, which recently granted a hearing on appeal of the conviction of John C. Taylor of Oakland, former State secretary of the Socialist party. The case will probably be heard on the May calendar of the court, while in session at Sacramento. The District Court of Appeals has upheld the law, and the appeal now being taken is on behalf of Taylor, who has been sentenced to serve an indeterminate sentence of one to fourteen years for assisting in the formation of an organization teaching criminal syndicalism. He was found not guilty of charges that he joined a plot to overthrow the Government by force.

Domestic and Naval

Secretary Denby has announced that applications would be received at the Navy Department to fill vacancies in the corps of civil engineers of the navy with the rank of junior grade lieutenant. Preliminary examination papers must be submitted by candidates before May 16.

The California Assembly is recorded in favor of a "Big Navy." Assemblyman Roy Fellom's memorial to Congress to continue the "big ship" construction program was adopted. The resolutions also urged strengthening of the fortifications on the Pacific Coast.

Despatches from Chatham, Mass., report the "Gaelic Prince," a British freighter, ashore on Great Roung Shoal. She was sighted by the coast guard at Monomoy Point and the crew of that station went to her assistance. The steamer had given no indications by radio, rocket or flag signal of her distress. The stranded ship was bound from Boston for New York. She left Boston after discharging part of a cargo brought from Singapore, Victoria, B. C., and other Pacific ports.

That sea lions along the Oregon coast eat a greater number of salmon during the open season than are caught by all the combined canneries operating on Oregon waters, is the assertion of Carl D. Shoemaker, secretary of the State Fish Commission. He estimates that the 3000 sea lions along the coast consume 41,500,000 pounds of salmon during the 157 days which constitute the season. This is more than all the canneries combined handle during the same period. William Hunter has been engaged by the commission to wage a campaign for extermination of the sea lion "pest."

The California Senate has passed, thirty to four, Senator J. M. Inman's bill to prohibit fishing in California coastal waters by "aliens ineligible to become citizens." Inman said that the passage of the measure was necessary as a measure "for the protection of the country in the event of war," his reference being to the large fleet of Japanese fishing vessels along the coast of southern California. Strong packing interests' opposition to the bill was based on the assertion that 90 per cent of the fishing in southern California was carried on by Japanese, and that passage of the bill would destroy the industry and throw thousands of white cannery employes out of work.

The Supreme Court has refused to review the conviction of William D. Haywood and seventy-nine other members of the I. W. W. on charges of having conspired to obstruct the war activities of the Government. Refusal of the Supreme Court to interfere closes the long fight to save Haywood and his associates from [illegible] a presidential pardon [illegible] upon the sentences imposed. Petition for [illegible] was based on the contention that the Federal agents in conducting raids on the rooms [illegible] of officials of the I. W. W. on September 5, 1917, acted without search warrants, and that the evidence thus obtained was illegal, under recent ruling of the Supreme Court [illegible] Haywood and his associates were charged with obstructing [illegible] draft and violation of the [illegible] act.

News from Abroad

General Allen has issued orders to all owners of factories in the American zone of occupation that they must not shut down without the consent of the American authorities according to recent press dispatches.

Wounded Greek soldiers are arriving in such numbers from the Smyrna and Brusa fronts that sanitary authorities are unable to care for them properly. Two thousand injured men recently arrived at Piraeus. Queen Sophie has appealed to the American Red Cross in Paris for nurses.

The Helsingfors correspondent of the London Times says that a council of war at Moscow has decided upon the concentration of troops on the frontiers of Poland, Rumania and the Caucasus. The Russian Bolshevist War Minister, Trotzky, is reported to be seeking 4,000,000 men.

The State Department announced recently that the American legation at Peking had received a communication asking recognition by the United States for the Far Eastern Republic of Siberia, whose territorial claims comprise the regions of Lake Baikal. The communication probably will be ignored for the present.

A note has been addressed to the French Government by M. Chitcherin, Russian Foreign Secretary, protesting against the detention of 25,000 Russian prisoners in France and others in North Africa and in the Balkans. The note declares that if the Soviet demands are not complied with the Russian Government will take suitable steps.

Greek archeologists have unearthed an imposing temple at Rerras, Thessaly. The structure is in an excellent state of preservation, and is stated to be as large as the temple of Jupiter at Olympia. The bronze inscriptions establish the dates of 400 B. C. Numerous tablets have also been found bearing indications of laws and resolutions of ancient civilization.

Copenhagen reports: The Norwegian Government has nominated a delegation to negotiate with the Russian delegate for Scandinavia, Kersientzjesm, for a trade agreement between Norway and Russia. According to a special dispatch to the Berlinske Tidende, Russia and China have made an agreement forming the base for a coming trade treaty, Russia giving a guarantee that Bolsheviki propaganda will be stopped in China, and Chinese losses in Russia refunded.

Under an agreement with the Government of China, the Federal Telegraph Company, an American concern, will very shortly commence the erection of a wireless telegraph station at Shanghai, larger than any now in existence. While the kilowatt capacity of the station is the same as that at Bordeaux, France, this new station will have six masts, each a thousand feet high, whereas those at Bordeaux are only 826 feet in height. The station is to be completed within eighteen months, and will have sufficient capacity to transmit and receive messages across the Pacific without the necessity of relay. The company will also erect other stations at Peking, Harbin, and Canton, which, together with the Shanghai station, will give China unequaled wireless facilities.

With the Wits

"Well, doctor, do you think it is anything serious?"

"Oh, not at all. It is merely a boil on the back of your neck, but I would advise you to keep an eye on it."—Sydney Bulletin.

They Don't Always Do That.—"Every man is good for something."

"Tell me what good Yuseless is."

"Well, he counts one in every census, anyway."—Boston Transcript.

"Now, my dear, you positively must forget business if you are going into society with me."

"What have I done?" asked the preoccupied physician.

"Why, you feel the pulse of everybody who extends a hand."—Boston Transcript.

"Do you think it healthy to keep your hogs in the house?" a social investigator asked a native of Arkansas.

"Waal, I donno," he drawled. "But I been a-keepin' my hawgs there for fourteen years and I ain't never lost one on 'em yet."

The Bishop, at Sunday School exams—And, now, would any little boy or girl ask me a question?

The Small Boy—Please, sir, why did the angels walk up and down Jacob's ladder when they had wings?

The Bishop—Um, er!—would any other little boy or girl like to answer that question?—London Sketch.

"Of course there is no such thing as woman's supremacy."

"Think not? From the time a boy sits under a street light playing with toads until he is blind and old and toothless he has to explain to some woman why he didn't come home earlier."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Rastus and Sam had not seen each other for some time and were swaping experiences.

Sam—What yo' been doin', Rastus?

Rastus—Oh, I'se been workin' for a circus.

Sam—What doin'?

Rastus—I'se a lion tamer. I goes up to that thar lion, and I opens up his jaw, and I sticks my head in his mouf.

Sam—Yo' ain't no lion tamer. Yo'se a lyin' niggah.—Happygrams.

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

GROWTH OF TRADE UNIONISM

Figures Compiled by International Labor Office Show Strength

"The Seaman," official organ of the National Sailors' and Firemen's Union of Great Britain and Ireland, recently published the following statistics, which are enlightening.

"At a time like this, when the strength of trade unionism looks like being tested on all sides and in every country, it is good to be able to lay one's hands upon some figures that show exactly what that strength is. These figures, published by the International Labor Office at Geneva, as a result of a special investigation covering trade union progress during the past ten years, are remarkable for the truths exposed. In the tables the years 1915, 1916, 1917 and 1918 are left out, and a jump made from 1914 to 1919. This is due to obvious reasons connected with war-time and the difficulty of obtaining world-wide figures for all countries during that period. Twenty countries are taken into account. They are: United Kingdom, Germany, the United States, France, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Switzerland, Spain, Austria, Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and Serbia. The total trade union membership in these twenty countries is given in the table below:—

End of year	Membership in 20 countries
1910	10,835,000
1911	12,249,000
1912	13,341,000
1913	14,728,000
1914	13,222,000
1919	32,680,000

From this table it will be seen that the numbers at the beginning of 1920 were treble the number in 1910, and more than double the number at the end of 1913, just before the war. A small part of this is due to the greater completeness of the returns, and another small part (probably about 10 per cent) to the natural growth of population, but even allowing for these two factors, there has been an enormous growth in trade unionism among the workers. This growth is common to all countries.

During the war trade unionism received a check, especiallly in the belligerent countries. The decline was especially great in Germany, Austria, Hungary, Italy, and Czecho-Slovakia, but in all these countries the numbers began to increase in 1917. The end of the year 1919 saw a phenomenal increase, especially in the Central European states. For European countries only, the membership at the end of 1919 may be put at twenty-six million at least, as compared with about eight and one-half million at the end of 1910.

Of the total membership of 32,680,000 shown above, it is interesting to note that for five of these countries, viz., United Kingdom, Germany, United States of America, France, Italy, the total membership in 1919 amounted to a little over twenty-seven million, leaving five million for the remaining fifteen countries.

United Kingdom

The membership is estimated to have almost doubled since 1913. This is partly due to the inclusion since 1917 of certain associations, chiefly of teachers and other professional classes, which were not previously regarded as trade unions. The increase covers all classes of trades, but it applies specially to unions in the unskilled trades and to agricultural labor. The latter increased in membership from thirty-five thousand in 1914, to 203,000 in 1919, while the general labor unions increased from 385,000 to 1,491,000 in the same period.

U. S. A. and Canada

No complete statistics exist showing the extent of trade unionism in the United States of America. The statistics used are those given as published by the Canadian Government, showing the membership (outside Canada) of "international organizations," i. e., unions covering the American Continent. It will be seen that the membership of these unions, which grew steadily from a little over 200,000 in 1910, to nearly three million in 1915, nearly doubled itself in the next four years, and stood at 5,600,000 at the end of 1919.

The American Federation of Labor—by far the largest trade union federation in the United States of America—publishes the following statistics of its "paid-up" membership in its report for 1920:—

1920	4,078,740

These figures are for the year ending April 30. The total membership at April, 1920, including those on strike, lockout, or unemployment, for whom payment was not made, was 4,302,108.

Belgium

The number of trade unionists in Belgium is now about four times the pre-war figure. There are two large federations, which cover between them the vast majority of trade unions.

"La Commission Syndicale du Parti Ouvrier et des Syndicats Independents" is by far the largest, and covered a membership of 629,736 on the 31st of December, 1919. The other, "La Confederation General des Syndicats chretiens et libres," is a smaller body, whose membership in March, 1920, was 156,631. Figures for the war years are not available for either of these federations.

France

Trade unionism remained fairly constant in numbers during the years 1910 to 1914, but doubled its membership in 1918, 1919. The following figures relate to the Confederation Generale du Travail only:—

1912	575,276
1913	592,447
1919-20	2,049,231

Germany

In Germany the trade unions lost nearly half their membership during the first years of the war, but in 1917 the membership rose by about 30 per cent.

Immediately after the Revolution, however, an immense impetus was given to the trade union movement, and by the end of 1918 it had reached nearly four million. The growth in membership of the different classes of trade unions is shown in the following table:—

Year	Total membership
1910	2,957,442
1913	3,571,905
1919	9,000,000

Italy

In Italy there are three classes of trade unions—free oganizations (organizzazioni libere), catholic (organizzazioni cattoliche), and isolated organizations (organizzazioni isolate).

No figures are available for 1918 and 1919 except for the "free organizations," the membership of which was 967,174 at the end of 1919. If we assume that the membership of the other two groups increased in the same proportion, the total membership would be about 1,800,000.

Norway

The figures given relate solely to the "Central Labor Organization." In Norway, however, the trade union movement is strongly organized, and very few unions are outside the federation, the membership of which has doubled since the outbreak of war.

Finland

The figures are those affiliated to the "Central Labor Organization." It will be seen that the membership quadrupled from 1916 to 1917, especially among factory workers and workers in sawmills, but declined considerably during the political troubles of 1918, 1919.

Austria

Like those for Germany, the figures for Austria show a phenomenal rise since 1914. The figures, which are published in "Die Gewerkschaft" for May, 1920, relate to Austria proper. of Russian workers, they are a powerful element, and their very progressive spirit makes them an effective force. With the immediate reopening of trade relations with Great Britain and other nations, there will no doubt be a better understanding as to the exact status of Russian toilers.

Czecho-Slovakia

The figures from 1912-1918 are taken from "Les Syndicats Professionals Tchecho-Slovaquie," by R. Taylerle, Paris, 1919, who also estimates the number at June, 1919, as 500,000, the large increase being due to the affiliation of German trade unions. The figure given for 1919 is the number affiliated to the International Trade Union Federation. The enormous increase is greater than that of any country, but it is possible that the figures are not strictly comparable, owing to the change in boundaries of this country as a result of the war.

Hungary

The statistics for Hungary up to 1917 are obtained from the "Annuaire International de Statistique" and the "Szakszerveti, Mongalom Magyarorstagen," 1917. For 1919, however, the figure of 500,000 is based on an article in the "Correspondenzblatt der Generalkommission de Gewerkschaft Deutschlands," for March 6, 1920. The enormous increase was due to the revolution, which caused all classes of workers to organize.

Japan

No trade union statistics exist for Japan, as, in theory, all labor organizations are illegal. It is stated, however, in "Millward's Review of the Far East," in July, 1920, that numerous labor organizations have sprung up, whose membership is about 500,000 at the present time.

The following table shows the growth of trade unionism during the war in countries covered by the investigation:—

Membership of Trade Unions at the End of the Years 1913 and 1919

Country	1913	1919
United Kingdom	4,192,000	8,024,000
Germany	3,572,000	9,000,000
U. S. A.	2,722,000	5,607,000
France	1,027,000	2,500,000
Italy	972,000	1,800,000
Belgium	203,000	750,000
Netherlands	220,000	625,000
Denmark	154,000	360,000
Sweden	136,000	339,000
Norway	64,000	144,000
Finland	28,000	41,000
Switzerland	89,000	224,000
Spain	128,000	211,000
Austria	253,000	772,000
Hungary	107,000	500,000
Czecho-Slovakia	107,000	657,000
Canada	176,000	378,000
Australia	498,000	628,000
New Zealand	71,000	100,000
Serbia (Jugoslavia)	9,000	20,000

It will be noted that the growth of trade unionism in the countries most directly affected by the war is remarkable and quite contrary to what was anticipated would be the effect of a prolonged European struggle of this kind. In view of the casualties of the war, we are left to wonder how the new membership of the unions is made up. We have been informed that the total number of able-bodied men killed exceeds ten million, and the total number of totally disabled is about fifteen million; adding the partially disabled men, the total number of casualties exceeds thirty million; and, in view of this enormous loss of able-bodied men, the growth of trade union organization may be truly described as wonderful.

It will be noted that the trade union membership of Soviet Russia, in the aggregate of five million, is not included in the international compilations. This may be due to the fact that information from that source may not be considered as sufficiently authentic, or the Russian trade union movement may be regarded as entirely revolutionary. However, the labor movement of Russia must be taken into account when summarizing the strength of organized labor on a world-wide basis. Whatever prejudice may exist regarding the revolutionary ideas

"REDUCED LIVING STANDARDS" MENACE AMERICAN LIFE

The first effects of a depression in business are men and women looking for work, wage reductions, changed working conditions and lowering standards of living. The second effects are unrest among the workers, strikes, injunctions and general social bitterness. The first are economic; the second human.

"Reducing living standards" is more than a phrase of speech treating of inanimate things. It means that men, women and children must abandon normal comforts and change their systems of life to a lower order. The child who is in school must be put to work in the factory; the wife and mother, perhaps, must be taken from the home and drafted into industry. The income of the natural bread-winner of the family, the father, is so reduced that it is unable to meet the demands made upon it. The entire family must be thrown into the vortex of industry in order to live. Upon this changed system of life may depend the future of the children. Opportunity for complete education being ended, and with it the development of natural facilities, at a period of life when they are best adapted for development, the child may be thrown into an environment that will change his entire course of life, destroy his ambition and crush his ideals. He becomes a cog in an industrial machine, discontented, without initiative, without resources, moving with the machine, growing up with it, being a part of it. Sometimes, when the wage cut is especially severe, the family is dispersed. The father goes away from the town. The mother turns to whatever kind of work she can do. The sons leave the remnant of home, and the girls disappear. The happy family, its parts disintegrated, is no more. Home life is ended. Home ties are severed. Home influence is dead. The home, the family, has been swept into the wreckage carried along by the flood of loose humanity, abiding on the banks of the turbulent streams of life.

The home is kept intact by the wages of the bread-winner. Wages, translated into human terms, mean food, clothing, shelter, education, pleasure, refinement for humanity. The volume of the worker's wages determines the character of his home and the extent of his enjoyment of human ideals.

The roots of these ideals in the mind of the worker are constant employment and the ownership of a home. From these roots grows the tree of industrial progress and social contentment.

Modern industry has created a code of ethics for its own convenience. These ethics accept the doctrine that when current industry is depressed, wages must fall, regardless of the surplus accumulated in the past. That portion of the surplus which is not distributed in huge dividends is devoted either to extensions of plant or to the purchase of stock in other industries. Rarely is this surplus reserved for the payment of wages in times of depression. When markets are overproduced or under-consumed, industry stops. The mills close. Wages end.

Dividends do not end. They are sustained by the surplus that has been piled up in the years of plenty. These years of plenty mean little to the worker. He is constantly struggling to pay debts contracted when "business is dull." "Dull Business" wipes out the small chance he has to gather a personal surplus, and this, at best, can be gathered only by sacrificing normal needs.

Nevertheless, the workers have aided in the piling up of the surplus in industry out of which dividends are paid and extensions made to property, and by all the rules of morality, by ethics of Christianity, by the finer sentiments of humanity, by all concepts of justice, the workers ought to share in that surplus.

The right to obtain a part of that surplus is vested in the stockholder. His interest is represented by the ownership of a stock certificate, a bit of paper, for which money may or may not have been exchanged. He is not required, or even expected to contribute the bending of a finger in productive labor to obtain his share of that surplus. He is not required, or even expected, to know a single operation of the industry through the operation of which the surplus was accumulated. The piece of paper, properly attested, guarantees to him the enjoyment of all his normal comforts out of this surplus of industry, whether or not that industry is in active operation.

The ethics of modern business, in effect, declare that wages must be paid out of the current earnings of industry. Profits may be distributed out of present or past earnings.

The report of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, for 1920, is a concrete example of the distribution of surplus. Net earnings were $61,377,803, against $34,604,417 in 1919. After reserving $20,404,139 for taxes, there remained $40,973,484 for dividends. As a result of these huge earnings the company put $31,856,806 back into the property. Were this company to close tomorrow, the payment of wages would stop. Dividends, however, would continue until the surplus set aside for their payment was exhausted.

Wages represent the applied effort of the workers in producing the commodities of the industry out of which the surplus is created. In all justice, the wages of the workers have an equal claim upon that surplus with the ownership of a stock certificate.

The stability of home life rests upon steady employment and just wages.

The power of a nation rests upon the stability of home life.

Destroy the home, wipe out its influence upon national life, and the nation, like the home, will be swept into the wreckage carried along by the flood of loose humanity abiding on the banks of the turbulent streams of life.

LABOR CONDITIONS IN HOLLAND

Consul General Anderson of Rotterdam has recently reported that there has been an increase of the unemployment in Holland during the past few weeks. During the latter part of February it was stated that about 75 per cent of the workers in the diamond industry were unemployed; and in the tobacco industry, one of the largest industries in Holland, there were about 45 per cent without employment. In the Province of Twente the hours of work of cotton spinners have been reduced to 36 per week. Thirty per cent of the brickmakers are said to be without employment and about 20 per cent of the workers in the glass industry have been discharged. In the leather and paper industries the amount of unemployment is said to be 38 per cent and 40 per cent, respectively.

T. N. T.

Following a period of nearly two weeks in which rumors of all description ran riot, the "threatened revolution" within the domains of John Bull seems to be dying out. The last week has been one in which reports of widespread violence have been common. Wreck, loot and arson were some of the many crimes with which the striking British miners have been charged, and now, just as we go to press, it is broadly suggested, in official and unofficial circles, that Lloyd George might have staged the late little fiasco as a means to "seat him sure." Such actions by the man universally regarded as a leading statesman can hardly be credited. However, if there should be a semblance of truth in the rumors, the British premier has been playing with T. N. T. and leaves it resting in a place of uncertain action.

Liberty a National Asset

Can't-strike advocates talk of loss of wealth and suffering when workers quit their employment, but no mention is made of a greater loss when men are denied the right to strike.

Strikes are costly, but social injustice is a thousand times more so.

Material loss, through strikes, is nothing compared to a nation's loss when it compels the victims of wrong to remain at their tasks.

The worker who is bludgeoned into silence against injustice is a liability. He may profess patriotism, but his song differs from the inspiring challenge of men who are actually free.

The can't-strike advocate is only interested in wealth, production and convenience. He worships before this trinity and is blind to his country's danger when its wage workers lose their democratic ideals.

Wealth and convenience are nothing to the worker who resents a life of serfdom, a tyrannic boss and unsatisfactory wages and working conditions. That worker puts freedom above all else.

To tell him he can not quit his employment together with his fellow workers—that he can not strike—is to destroy his faith in American ideals.

This loss to a nation can not be recompensed by wealth, or by production and the public's convenience and ease.

No nation can be great that destroys ideals, stifles hope and deadens the sense of justice.

Sympathy for the oppressed and resistance to wrong are characteristic of free men. They refuse to count cost in their fight for right.

In all ages this spirit has impelled men to resist injustice. This spirit has made possible the liberties now enjoyed by man.

Can't-strike advocates would destroy this spirit. They would make America's finest asset a national liability. They would change their country's inspiring battle cries to the bargain counter question, "What will it cost?"

They would remove every ideal, sympathetic instinct, daring aspiration and loyal impulse from men who would own themselves.

To perpetuate injustice they would debase the holiest ideal that lovers of liberty possess and would handcuff their country's defenders to the machine of production.

A Confused Patriot

Andrew Furuseth, president of the International Seamen's Union, is engaged in a newspaper controversy in Baltimore over the seamen's law, which his opponent declares makes it possible for foreign seamen to sign at their home port for lower wages, and then they may desert on their arrival in this country if they are not paid the prevailing wage.

"This is equalization of wages, with a vengeance, isn't it?" is the triumphant query of the foe of the seamen's law.

"My opponent does not mean to argue in favor of foreign vessels, but unfortunately he does," replies Furuseth, who asks:

"Does he think it wrong for the United States to decline being the slave catchers for foreign ship owners, when the people of the United States declined some sixty years ago to be the slave catchers for each other? Does he really think that the United States ought to use its police power to keep the wages of an English or a Norwegian ship, hiring coolies in India or China at $9 a month, which is about one-tenth of the wages paid on American vessels? Is he really willing that such an English or Norwegian vessel shall be assisted to keep such a crew on board while she is carrying away freight that would otherwise go in American vessels?

"He says there are hundreds of American vessels idle in American harbors. So there are Italian vessels, Spanish vessels, English vessels, millions of tons of shipping idle in the harbors. It is usually thought that that is the result of the war and of peace and not of the seamen's act."

Insurance and Strikes

Insurance against strikes, which is being advertised in Baltimore, will foment strikes, said Matthew Woll, A. F. of L. vice-president.

"When an employer is insured against strikes he will not be inclined to go far in making concessions to employes, however just their demands may be," said the trade unionist.

"Insurance companies writing strike insurance would be but another factor to add to the obstacles to peaceful adjustment of labor troubles. Labor can not be expected to support companies that are working against it, and if these companies persist in their efforts to make such insurance legal, organized labor will lend its efforts towards State insurance companies."

New Labor Injunction

Judge Molyueaux of Minneapolis seems to have made a new record in labor injunctions by ordering a member of the Milk Wagon Drivers' Union to cease delivering milk in a part of the city that the Standard Milk Company declares is its "property."

The unionist was formerly employed by the company and was forced to sign an individual contract not to join a union while so employed, or deliver milk on the route in question. Several other milk concerns compelled its employes to sign the same contract, the form of which is identical. The inevitable strike followed and now the unionist is debarred from earning a living in that part of the city which the company stakes off as its personal "property."

Don't Want Life Boats

Opposition to the seamen's act has been registered by a conference of business men from cities along the Great Lakes. The usual fire alarm resolutions urged Con-

World's Workers

Soviet Russia and the Soviet Republic of White Russia have signed a treaty under which they become a single republic.

The seventh session of the council of International Labor Congress opened at Geneva last week, under the presidency of Arthur Fontaine of France.

A lockout has been declared by the factory owners of Turin, the important Italian industrial center, and troops have occupied the factories, according to a dispatch to the Central News from Rome.

The Labor party of Queensland, Australia, are operating a movie picture house in Brisbane, the profits of which are devoted to the labor funds. It is the intention of the party to extend the operations throughout the State.

As proof of the growing solidarity of labor in Europe, the Union of Transport Workers and Seamen, Amsterdam, has decided to ask all members in that country to refuse to handle any goods destined for English ports, in the event of a general strike in Great Britain.

Severe unemployment continues in Sweden, and there are over five hundred applicants for every hundred jobs. The Central Executive of the Swedish unions are demanding a minimum allowance of $2.75 a day for unemployed workpeople, and also advocate the immediate resumption of trade with Russia.

The tendency for closer labor affiliation continues in Australia. The A. W. U. were recently informed that the Miners, Railwaymen, Seamen, and Waterside Workers had decided to meet in May next to launch an O. B. U., and to carry on an extensive propaganda for the effective completion of all industrial departments as speedily as possible.

Latest reports show that while the British coal strike continues, there is a favorable atmosphere to be observed in London regarding settlement. Premier Lloyd George, in the House of Commons, is conciliatory and declined to be hurried by recent happenings into legislation, curtailing privileges of trades unions. "Nothing would provoke more serious industrial trouble than an attack on the privileges conceded from time to time to the trades unions," he declared. The Premier was firm on the question of a national pool of profits, which he asserted was impossible, but admitted some of the wage proposals of the mine owners were indefensible and ought to be amended, and, in reiterating that the Government agreed with the principle of a national wage settlement, expressed the hope that a plan would be evolved whereby the miners would have a "real interest in the prosperity of their industry." Both Government and mine owners clearly are ready for another conference with the miners. Everything depends on whether Frank Hodges, secretary of the Miners' Union, receives a vote of confidence from the miners' Friday. All the news from the coal fields represents the miners as still in an angry mood and refusing to accept any compromise. The proposed meeting of the Parliamentary Labor Committee and the Trades Union Congress, originally fixed for Wednesday, has been postponed until Friday evening, after the miners' conference.

Dispatches received from Honolulu state that the United States tug "Keosanqua" has been searching for a barge which broke away recently. The "Keosanqua" was towing the barge from San Diego to Honolulu.

Due to the fact that the steamers "Yale" and "Harvard" will make five sailings weekly from Wilmington and San Francisco, it will be necessary to have a relief captain, making three skippers for the two steamers.

Oliver J. Olsen has chartered the steamship "Paraiso," which has been tied up in Oakland Creek for several months, to the Pan-American Steamship Company. The "Paraiso" will carry a general cargo to Central American ports, and will sail on April 28.

The vessels of the Alaska Packers' Association are getting away from port at a lively clip. Several left last week, starting out with fair southwest winds. The "Santa Clara" went out in tow of a Red Stack tug, and will be towed the full distance to Blaine, where cargo for Alaska will be taken on.

Bullion is seldom shipped in any quantity on freight carriers, but the Shipping Board steamer "West Conob," operated by the Pacific Mail, had more than $1,000,000 in treasure when she arrived back on the Coast. The gold was shipped in India, consigned to San Francisco banks.

As a counterbalance to the heavy movement of California and Northwestern fruits from this Coast to Europe, the Holland-America Line is attempting to stimulate the importation of dairy products from Holland and other European countries to this Coast. The Holland-America Line is now operating three steamers with refrigerator space in this run, and the motorships building for this trade have even greater coolroom accommodations.

The growing importance of shipments by water is pointed out with the announcement that 1,450,000 pounds of prunes have been sold to Germany, and will probably be consigned to the Holland-American line or to the European Pacific Line. Farmers in the interior are coming to depend upon water for the transportation of their commodities.

A radiogram received at San Francisco by Commander William Glassford, of the U. S. Hydrographic Office, from the master of the steamer "West Kader" said that a spar had been sighted by the steamer, which may be that of a submerged sailing craft. It was seen early on the morning of April 12 in latitude 51:25 north, longitude 151:55 west. The message reads: "Probably the mast of a ship, floating upright and leaning forward as if fastened to some object."

Consul B. F. Yost, at Sonora, Mexico, has informed the Department of Commerce that negotiations were progressing between a British steamship company and the Mexican Government for establishment of a steamship line from San Francisco and the Pacific ports of Mexico. The plan contemplated placing six eight-hundred-ton British steamers, suitable for passenger and cargo trade, under the Mexican flag, he said, to serve the ports of La Paz, Guaymas, Mazatlan, Manzanillo, Acapulco and Salina Cruz.

Unable to obtain coal for this country because of the embargo which provides that local demands must be met first, the motorship "Oronite" is returning to San Francisco from Newcastle, Australia, in ballast to A. F. Thane & Company. The charter by J. J. Moore & Company has been canceled under a provision which covers an emergency such as this, and which, shipping men say, is included in all Australian coal charters. Under command of Captain Genereaux, youngest of the Pacific Coast skippers, the vessel departed April 8.

That the navy is diverting its own transports to the carrying of coal from the East Coast to the bunkering stations on the Pacific Coast, instead of chartering merchant vessels for this movement, was learned when it became known that three navy transports are on their way to San Francisco, or berthed for this run. They are the "Hancock," from Norfolk, March 15; the "Bath," sailed April 2, and the "Houston," to depart about the middle of the month. Many merchant vessels, returning from Europe, have accepted this business in order to get revenue for the trip through the Canal.

The bark "Golden Gate," bound from San Francisco for Liverpool with a cargo of barley, is reported to be undergoing repairs at Runcorn, England, following her arrival in a sinking condition. The bark encountered heavy weather between San Francisco and Panama, making the voyage in forty-eight days. After leaving Panama for the United Kingdom, she was found to have sprung a leak, and it was necessary to keep the pumps constantly working to prevent her foundering. After a total of ninety-eight days at sea she arrived at Runcorn, where the hull will be thoroughly overhauled.

The Toyo Kisen Kaisha Company recently filed a petition in the United States District Court to recover a fine of $8,960, which it was obliged to pay the Government because 266 tins of opium were found aboard one of its steamers, the "Korea Maru," in January, 1920. The drug was not listed on the ship's manifest, and the steamship company claims that it had no knowledge that the opium was on the boat, and it had taken precautions to see that no contraband drugs were on the ship by having a diligent search made before the "Korea Maru" sailed from the Orient. The company's detectives were unable to discover any drugs, but the customs officials speedily located the opium when the ship docked at San Francisco.

With a view to making Astoria a permanent port of call for freighters on the Hawaiian-Puget Sound run, providing cargo offerings are found to be sufficient, the Matson Navigation Company has placed the Columbia River city on its schedule for the two Shipping Board steamers operated on this run. Three calls have been made in recent months at Astoria, and while the freights obtained were not large, the company has decided to test the possibilities of this line for an indefinite period. Lumber, grain and general merchandise for the islands are the cargoes which are sought in large enough quantities to warrant continuation of this service. The "West Nilus" will load there this month, and the "West Keene" next month.

Freight and passenger service between Vancouver and San Francisco will be established by the Canadian Government Marine Department in June. The Canadians plan to use two 3500-ton steamers, and will maintain a ten-day schedule. The principal freight is expected to be grain, and it was expected a thriving grain business could be built up by shipping the Canadian product to California for milling. It was also believed the Canadian boats could cut heavily into the passenger carrying trade, as prohibition laws do not affect the vessels flying the British flag. It will be possible for passengers from San Francisco going to Seattle or any point north of there, to use Canadian boats to Victoria, returning to destination by rail.

Interest in Coast shipping circles centers in two special activities, charters for grain and lumber and the coast-to-coast trade, which is gaining strength despite the general slump in shipping. During the past two weeks several Shipping Board freighters have been chartered to carry grain to Italy and the United Kingdom. Three of them were taken from the Benicia "vacation" grounds. Two new steamship lines, each to operate a fleet of freight steamers, have announced their intention of joining the already well-established coast-to-coast trade. They are the United States Transport Company and the Kerr Steamship Company. They swell the intercoastal lines to fourteen, and promise keen competition with the transcontinental railroads. In the grain trade it is said that charters for May, loading will be controlled by vessels of the government-owned fleet.

Gradually, all too slowly, shipping men are being converted to the idea that there is a slight improvement in the freight market. Many of them, however, cannot see that the situation is better, merely because there is more cargo offering, and vastly more inquiries, as long as rates remain low. Others will not admit any degree of betterment unless it is sufficient to boom the shipping game again. The same men who pointed to the vessels going to the "boneyard" as conclusive evidence that business was going to the dogs will not admit now that their return into commission even augurs an upward turn. Outside of the recent upturn in grain charters, however, the charter market shows little sign of improvement. Few charters are being made because many shipowners will not consider the low rates that are offered. They are turning down inquiries regularly, because, they say, the revenue would not pay operating expenses. One broker asserted that he could get all the business he wanted if he would take it at the going rates.

The Admiral Line steamer "Queen" has been assigned to operate on the schedule of the ill-fated "Governor." Upon the arrival of the "Queen" from the south, the craft will sail for Los Angeles. The sailing of the "Queen" thereafter in the San Diego schedule will be omitted. No plans have been made as yet, according to officials of the Admiral Line, to replace the "Governor," as there are no available passenger liners that could be placed in commission on short notice. The company, however, will be forced to replace the "Governor," but hope of doing it within the next few months is remote at present. The sinking of the "Governor" came just as the passenger travel of the Admiral Line was beginning to assume summer proportions from British Columbia to San Diego, but, despite the loss of the "Governor," some arrangements will be made whereby the ocean coastwise tourist trade will be handled by the steamship company.

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL SAN FRANCISCO

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 20, 1921.

SUCH IS LIFE

The Williams Line freighter "Willhilo" has left San Francisco for northern ports, and "thereby hangs a tale." For obvious reasons, vessels of this particular shipping company have attracted public interest while in ports of the Pacific Coast. Before departure of the "Wilpolo" from San Francisco, less than a month ago, the general public were treated to press stories of fighting riots, and finally kidnaping amongst the inexperienced and non-union crew of the vessel, most of which were imaginary. However, according to reliable accounts, the recent voyage of the steamer "Willhilo" from New York to Pacific ports was somewhat spectacular.

In line with the desire to lower wages of seamen, the operators of the Williams Line picked up a non-union crew for the "Willhilo" in New York. They naturally obtained the usual conglomeration of tatterdemalion nondescripts, and before the vessel had reached the Canal Zone, the captain and other officers were assured an exciting and interesting trip. The crew were absolutely inefficient and inexperienced, many of them unused to the arduous requirements, and some of them became sick before the ship reached the canal. The first trouble arose in the fire-room amongst the green members of the "black squad," most of whom had never seen the engine-room of a coal-burning vessel before; and by the time the "Willhilo" had tied up at La Union, the whole boiler room gang were in a decided state of upheaval. They demanded that they be paid off, and upon refusal proceeded to make life interesting for the "old man." They were ordered to get back to work, but instead the firemen, coalpassers and a number of the deck crew went ashore and proceeded to "tank up."

That evening they ran across the captain, and again demanded their money in more forcible than polite manner. This being refused, they proceeded to show the "old man" just what a non-union crew can do with the aid of clubs and rocks. Without injury, the captain managed to get back to his ship, only to be compelled to repulse another attack later on board.

Matters getting out of hand, a wireless call for aid was sent to the American consul at San Salvador, about one hundred miles to the south. The consul being unable to offer immediate relief, the Canal Zone base was appealed to, which resulted in the "Tacoma" being ordered to the scene. Investigation by the captain of the "Tacoma" revealing the fact that mutinous members of the crew had failed in their attempts, a naval guard was placed aboard the "Willhilo" for two days, and six of the ringleaders placed under arrest. Thereupon the "Willhilo" proceeded on her way to San Pedro, California. At that port some of the trouble instigators were discharged, and after delivering some of her cargo, the vessel proceeded to San Francisco.

If the captain of the "Willhilo" had entertained any idea that his troubles were over, that happy thought was immediately shattered. Insubordination was rife amongst the motley horde composing the deck and fireroom departments, and none of the regular ship duties were performed; in fact, a review of the vessel's general condition gave the impression that she was just out of a junk yard, after being salved from severe battering on a muddy beach. A limejuice collier, after battering through the Bay of Biscay, would look like a yacht in comparison. In addition, the brand of grappo dispensed by the "sightless porkers" along the Embarcadero appealed to the palate of the New York visitors. By the time that the "Willhilo's" cargo had been discharged and she should have been ready to proceed to sea very few of her crew remained, and these were useless for any purpose.

After giving the situation full and complete consideration, it was decided that "sufficient for the day is the evil thereof," and a full crew of competent seamen were ordered for both the fireroom and deck departments from the offices of the Sailors' and Firemen's Unions.

Inasmuch as the latter have signed for a round trip, we predict from now on the voyage of the "Willhilo" will at least be less exciting or spectacular; also that when the vessel pokes her prow into the next port she will have more the appearance of an American ship, and lose her resemblance to a mud barge.

A WORK TO PERFORM

In addition to our duties aboard ship, and the maintenance of a standard for the personnel of the American Merchant Marine, organized seamen have duties to perform in relation to strengthening our position economically. To do this the strongest solidarity is required.

It is one of the first duties of a seaman, in whatever port of the world he may go, to get in touch with his fellow-workers at that place, to fraternize and inculcate a thorough understanding. If the marine workers are not organized, what could be of greater service to his fellows or gratification to himself than for a seaman to start the ball rolling and organize them?

From what information we already have at hand, the marine workers are either organized more compactly than here, or equally as good, or are in process of organization in nearly every port of importance in the world. We must strive to make this organization complete.

Practically all consulates are more or less institutions for the furtherance and protection of commercial interests abroad; they are the outposts of organized capital. We realize this with more force when we are compelled to adjust matters through these agencies when our interests conflict with those of the shipowners. Therefore, it is up to us to maintain our own representatives in every port where the water is deep enough to float a rowboat. This must be accomplished in order to keep in touch with our fellows, and to be ready to bear each other's burdens, notwithstanding judicial decrees which might rule otherwise.

In the recent little unpleasantness which grew out of the shooting of a marine fireman, on one of the Munson Line ships at Buenos Aires, we have a concrete example of just how these affairs work out.

The American Consul at Buenos Aires was more thoroughly concerned with financial or commercial interests; but due to the fact that there is a powerful union of marine workers at that port who are imbued with solidarity, the human or labor interests receive protection from that source.

The fraternal spirit of our fellow-workers in Buenos Aires should be cultivated and reciprocated, and efforts must be made to extend the same feeling of brotherhood everywhere.

JAPANESE EXCLUSION PROGRESS

The problem of Asiatic infiltration is becoming more acute on the Pacific Coast, and as one campaign after another has failed to make the nation realize our danger, the most vigorous efforts are now being put forth by those who understand the full significance of this unperceived invasion.

On April 18, before the House Immigration Committee, absolute exclusion of all Japanese immigration and withholding of citizenship from all Mongolians was demanded. V. S. McClatchy, of Sacramento, representing the Japanese Exclusion League of California, told the committee of the great danger to this country unless immediate steps are taken to check the menace. He protested against naturalized Japanese being stewards on the President's yacht, on battleships, and in "other important places." McClatchy revealed the fact that out of an estimated number of eighty thousand Japanese born in the United States and Hawaii, only seventy-three have applied to the Japanese Government for repatriation, in order to accept unreserved American citizenship.

He demanded that the absolute exclusion of Japanese immigration be enforced by Federal officials, "and not under the present system, whereby we surrender regulation to Japanese authorities." He further insisted that no treaty be negotiated that would weaken or destroy the California anti-alien land laws or such laws of other States.

While declaring the attitude of the Exclusion League, McClatchy stated that it had been endorsed by both branches of the California Legislature and numerous California organizations.

Mr. McClatchy is one of the best informed men in the country today on the subject of Japanese immigration, and as publisher of the Sacramento Bee he has done yeoman service for white California.

In addition, considerable literature bearing on this matter has been distributed through his efforts.

There is considerable satisfaction in the reflection that, as a rule, when McClatchy assumes an interest in a subject, it is never permitted to die of inertia, and we confidently expect to see the cause of Japanese exclusion receive a new impetus from now on.

TEACHERS AWAKENING

The following article appeared in a recent issue of the Los Angeles School Journal.

"The world has passed through strenuous periods of religious and political revolution, and is today in the throes of an industrial revolution in which the workers will undoubtedly achieve a better economic condition, a more adequate system of vocational training, and an improved social status which will redound to the benefit of mankind.

"The low social status of labor, the contempt for manual toil, the aversion to a trade as a life career, are survivals of the time when the strong and privileged were able to compel the weak and the ignorant to work for them. Long acceptance of this status both created and perpetuated the prejudice against labor which has kept the working man in an inferior economic and social status in spite of his usefulness and vital importance to the community. How profoundly the late war has changed the status of the laborer and the mechanic!

"For centuries false values have been given to the exploits of the soldier, and the brutalities of wars have been concealed beneath a halo of romance. The thrill we feel in the exploits of the hero, and the stirring influence of martial music are instincts inherited from the time when force was the arbiter of men's fate. These things, coupled with the old-fashioned homage paid to men of letters, and the conventional reverence for institutions of learning and for academic learning apart from any practical use of it, have retarded the progress of the working classes by checking independent thinking and limiting vision. We have not been accustomed to associate labor with education, because they have been divorced for centuries. Modern conditions have necessitated a larger and broader application of education. For a time educational efforts were confined to the developing of professional and commercial training to the neglect of the industrial. Conditions, however, have been changing rapidly, and the laborer, workman and artisan are coming into their rightful relations in the social order. The introduction of complicated machinery and manifold technical processes, together with the demands for better quality of workmanship, have called for higher standards of intelligence and greater efficiency, all of which have benefited the workman, the employer, and the community in general.

The foregoing is in line with the recent awakening of teachers to the realization that it is necessary for them to organize in order to obtain consideration and to maintain their standards. With the realization of that necessity has grown a better knowledge of the workers, with a fuller understanding of their hopes, aims and aspirations.

CONVENTION CALL!

The following call has been issued by the American Federation of Labor:

To all Affiliated Unions, Greeting:

You are hereby notified that, in pursuance of the Constitution of the American Federation of Labor, the Forty-first Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor will be held at The Coliseum, Denver, Colorado, beginning 10 o'clock Monday morning, June 13, 1921, and will continue in session from day to day until the business of the convention has been completed.

Representation

Representation in the convention will be on the following basis: From National or International Unions, for less than four thousand members, one delegate; four thousand or more, two delegates; eight thousand or more, three delegates; sixteen thousand or more, four delegates; thirty-two thousand or more, five delegates; sixty-four thousand or more, six delegates; 128,000 or more, seven delegates, and so on; and from Central Bodies and State Federations, and from local trade unions not having a National or International Union, and from Federal Labor Unions, one delegate.

Organizations to be entitled to representation must have obtained a certificate of affiliation (charter), at least one month prior to the convention; and no person will be recognized as a delegate who is not a member in good standing of the organization he is elected to represent.

Only bona fide wage-workers, who are not members of, or eligible to membership in other trade unions are eligible as delegates from Federal Labor Unions.

Delegates must be elected at least two weeks previous to the convention, and their names forwarded to the secretary of the American Federation of Labor immediately after their election.

Delegates are not entitled to seats in the convention unless the tax of their organization has been paid in full to April 30, 1921.

It is, of course, entirely unnecessary here to enumerate all the important subjects with which our forthcoming convention will concern itself, but the reminder is not at all amiss that every effort must be made to broaden the field and means for the organization of the yet unorganized workers; to strive to bring about more effectually than ever a better day in the lives and homes of the toilers; to defend and maintain by every honorable means in our power the right to organize for our common defense and advancement, for the exercise of our normal and constitutional activities to protect and promote the rights and interests of the workers; to assert at any risk the equal rights before the law of all workers with all other citizens; to aid our fellow-workers against the effort to entangle the workers in the meshes of litigation before the courts in the several States; to restore and make effective in our every-day lives the principle declared in the law of our Republic (the Clayton law), "that the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce"; to arouse our fellow-workers and fellow-citizens to the danger which threatens to curb and take away their guaranteed rights and freedom; to meet and help solve the

RUSS EXTEND POSTAL RULES

A provisional postal and telegraph convention has recently been concluded with soviet Russia by both Latvia and Esthonia. The provisions provide for communications to be sent between both Provinces and Soviet Russia by mail and by telegraph, but prohibits the transfer of money by either mail or telegraph. No convention has been concluded as yet by Lithuania, and there is no direct telegraphic or postal communication between that country and Soviet Russia.

The compulsory arbitrationist should remember that the government, like fire, is a good servant but a bad master.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

BARNUM WAS RIGHT

Considerable agitation has developed from a serial correspondence which has been carried in the New York Evening Journal by a person under the appellation of Nellie Bly. The party in question has assumed to be an authority on the topic of American seamen's rights and responsibilities, and has presumed to suggest a line of action for regulating the conditions under which the American Merchant Marine should be operated. It is noteworthy, however, that the "tempest in a teapot" is about to subside, due to the indifference and lack of appreciation on the part of the lady's intended proteges. It appears that the ungrateful (?) American seamen whose personal interests the lady seeks to guard with such parental solicitude do not seem to regard matters in the same light, or to desire such benevolent consideration.

If the lady correspondent is in need of a subject upon which to elaborate as a means of passing away an idle hour, far be it from the "gallant American seamen" to deprive her of that pleasure; but if credence is to be given to some of her ridiculous contentions we will be compelled to agree with the renowned Kipling that "the female of the specie is more deadly than the male."

We are inclined to believe that Nellie Bly, as a newspaper correspondent, should have chosen a subject upon which she was better informed. The fact that the lady has received quite a number of polite and encouraging replies from parties who might be expected to know better proves conclusively that Barnum was right; there is one born every minute.

While pursuing the even tenor of her journalistic career, Miss Bly has, no doubt, contributed greatly to popular knowledge and universal enlightenment, and has, perhaps, been one of the factors for social uplift and reform; therefore, we bear no resentment for her recent intrusion into our own sphere of industry; we only feel sorry that the well-meaning lady should so sadly misplace her energies.

Peculiar Types

The type of citizens styling themselves seamen who have been corresponding with Nellie Bly on the subject of Americanizing the Merchant Marine, are not the characters that would make any strenuous efforts to attain that end themselves. The American seamen who have confidence in themselves and their fellows, who have faith in their country and its future, are not of a type who would accept the services of a lone newspaper correspondent in their behalf. Those who will not themselves defend their calling are fit only to be failures and subjects of ostracism. Some idea of the calibre of the lady's correspondents may be gathered from the anonymous manner in which their communications were signed, to-wit: "Chief Officer," "Steward," "Chief Engineer," "American Fireman," "A Seaman," 'Only an American," etc., etc. Such titles attached to the scores of letters published from time to time in Nellie Bly's section of the Evening Journal is sufficient to warrant discredit. What guarantee exists that the writers are bona fide seamen? It is an easy matter to write fraudulent letters and just as easy to have the same published, providing they read right for the timely purpose.

Invitations Ignored

Moreover, there has been a certain amount of letter writing accomplished by real seamen. While we hate to question the zeal and sincerity of such ambitious activities, we are compelled to realize the fact that the patriotic lady has manifested a degree of bad faith, and perhaps prejudice, by ignoring altogether respectful communications and valuable information given her repeatedly by bona fide organized seamen in New York.

Courteous invitations to visit the various headquarters of the Seamen's Unions and investigate conditions as they actually exist have not been accepted, for what reason we might be at a loss to understand if it were not for the fact that Miss Bly's sudden interest in an American Merchant Marine comes at a crucial period and is somewhat belated. The lady should have begun operations about thirty or forty years ago, when there were very few Americans at all numbered amongst those present in the Merchant Marine; when to go aboard an American ship was to relinquish all rights as a citizen or freeman.

An Hysterical Outburst

In a particularly patriotic explosion, Miss Bly dramatically exclaims, "If the American seamen are to be a power sufficiently strong to prevent their being discriminated against, they must band together and form an association of real American seamen. They must resign membership in all institutions and associations where foreigners and aliens are admitted to membership." Some idea that, for men who are expected to be at home in any port of the world.

Where Education Fails

It would be worse than useless to attempt enlightenment of Miss Bly regarding the historic efforts of the Seamen's Union to gain emancipation and Americanization for seamen in American vessels during the past thirty-six years. None are so blind as those who refuse to see, and since the worthy lady has refused to investigate the real situation, we must leave her a victim of blissful ignorance or wilful deceit.

We, therefore, believe it is just as well that we forget the Miss Bly methods and attend strictly to our own knitting, i. e., organizing and educating genuine seamen for the Americanization and perpetuation of our Merchant Marine and naval forces.

J. H. W.

HONEST CRITICISM

Turning from Nellie Bly's unknown correspondents, it is refreshing to read a protest from a real American seaman on the subject of alien seamen in the Merchant Marine.

The following letter reprinted from the New York Herald of April 7, is a straightforward expression of opinion.

Furthermore, it is plainly signed and dated by the correspondent himself, and is, therefore, worthy of credence:

"To The New York Herald: Sailors are born and never made. I have gone to sea since I was thirteen, which was in 1896, and have sailed on American ships ten years, and all the American-born sailors I have met in this space of time I can count on the fingers of one hand.

"The reason our new Merchant Marine is so far a huge failure is the absolute incapacity of our deck and engine departments to perform their duty right. Brand new ships that sailed from home in perfect condition are compelled to put into foreign ports every few days on account of engine trouble, the repair of which costs thousands of dollars. This could be avoided if capable mechanics were aboard.

"Our mates yearly waste enough deck supplies to suffice a vessel for several months. Our agents in foreign ports are unable to get freight for our ships, while no difficulty is experienced by foreign agents in getting cargoes for their ships.

"I never personally heard a word of praise spoken in behalf of our new would-be seamen, and I certainly must say that they are anything but desirable to have on one's ship. The British Merchant Marine obtained its present position while employing a large percentage of foreign, but skilled and not too finicky, sailors and officers. Although believing in America for Americans, I cannot refrain from saying a good word for the practice of employing foreign help on our ships.

"JOHN M. GARETT.

"New York, April 6."

We are not personally acquainted with Mr. Garett, but his experiences must have been similar to ours, since his conclusions coincide so nearly with our own.

It should be borne in mind by those inclined to take (Miss) Bly seriously, that alien-born seamen have been the only survivors of the American Merchant Marine since the decade before the Civil War. It was alien-born seamen who founded and developed the Seamen's Unions and abolished the pernicious crimping system in the United States, and it was the constant and insistent agitation of the Seamen's Unions extending over a period of more than thirty years that emancipated American seamen from the onus of ancient serfdom, freed them from unspeakable tyranny and oppression, secured for them humane conditions and human treatment, both ashore and afloat, and made it possible for American boys to go to sea without loss of character, prestige or self-respect.

Many of our alien-born seamen, who have sacrificed the best years of their lives for the improvement of the American Merchant Marine and the uplift of its personnel, when no others were interested, certainly deserve to be honored by a favorable American sentiment.

They are the best and most indispensible sailors in the service today, and there are no truer patriots in the United States.

COURTS USURP POWER

By HON. WALTER CLARK,
Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina.

The jurisdiction conferred on the Supreme Court by the Constitution, Art. III, is small, and then follows: "In all the other cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as Congress shall make."

The inferior courts are "ordained and established" by Congress, which must prescribe the limits of their jurisdiction. The claim of supremacy by the judiciary over its creator is, therefore, not authorized. It is asserted that it is "necessary to the independence" of the judiciary. In fact, it is the assumption by it of supreme, irresponsible and autocratic power.

Of course every department of the Government takes an oath to support the Constitution. But the supreme power to review whether they do or not is reserved to the people, and is nowhere given to the judiciary.

If Congress disobeys the Constitution, the members of both the House and Senate are chosen by the people and can be reviewed at the next election.

If the President disobeys the Constitution, he is chosen by the people, and his acts can be reviewed at the next election.

If the judiciary do an unconstitutional act they are not chosen by the people, and cannot be reviewed at the next election. That they have acted unconstitutionally has been held by themselves in reversing the legal tender decision; in the income tax decision; in the ten-hour case (Lochner case), virtually reversed in the Adamson law, and in other cases.

In the income tax case the last decision was wrong, and it required eighteen years to get the evil corrected by constitutional amendment, and in the meantime that one vote by one judge transferred three millions of dollars taxation from the predatory rich, and placed it upon the producing classes of the country.

Is it not worth while to prevent other abuses by an irresponsible court, a bare majority of whom may again, as so often in the past, mistake their own economic views for the Constitution?

The first usurpation, in "Marbury vs. Madison," during the incumbency of Chief Justice Marshall, was made by an obiter dictum in the Marbury case, as follows:

In laying the foundation of the Constitution there began the trouble between the free and slavery system of labor, which was a continuous struggle down to 1861. It was compromised by the Constitution giving three-fifths of a vote to slave owners as representatives of their slaves. It was recognized that by the increase of the white vote at the North, as well as by immigration, the South would soon lose control of the House, and that it would ultimately lose the control of the Senate, though for a long time the parity was kept up by always admitting a slave State and a free State at the same time. On the admission of Missouri in 1820, we came near a dissolution of the Union. The Mexican war was largely caused by an effort to maintain the political equality of the slave State in the Senate.

For a long time the South held the presidency by nominating a "northern man with southern principles," but when Lincoln was elected it was seen that that could not be relied on.

The Marbury vs. Madison decision was simply "throwing an anchor to windward" by giving to the Supreme Court power to invalidate any action of Congress, though approved by the President, which would jeopardize slavery, and which would thus make the court a third line of defense that would last the lifetime of the judges. This was shattered by the hostile reception given the Dred Scott case, and the results of the Civil War. The contest for slavery made the South "a section apart," and the waves have not yet entirely subsided. They have a proverb in wind-swept Spain, a land of windmills, "Though the mills are down, the winds are blowing there still."

Marbury vs. Madison having been thrown up as a bulwark for the slavery trust, when the fourteenth amendment was passed with a provision intended for the protection of the emancipated negro (which it did not affect), the interests caused by the war through the new appointees from time to time on the Supreme bench secured for themselves the construction by the court of newer and deadlier theory than Marbury vs. Madison, which was outworn. As to the reconstruction acts, Congress made the court stand off. But as the court is appointive, and for life, the people have no hand in choosing them, and no power to review them, and if their assumption of the supreme and ultimate power of review of the action of Congress shall continue to be substituted for that of the people, then aggregated wealth, following the example of the slavery dealers down to 1861, have the irreviewable power to control the Government and set at naught the will of the people on all public questions.

When the Marbury vs. Madison decision was rendered, it was at once denounced by President Jefferson as an usurpation unwarranted in the Constitution, and when it was repeated fifty-four years later in the Dred Scott case, it was as vigorously denounced by Abraham Lincoln, and these men were, respectively, the very chiefest of the apostles of the two great parties now before the country.

MORAL: TIE THE BULL

Down in Latin America it is the ambition of every youngster to be a great bull-fighter. In Mexico the hero niches in the hearts of the public, which are occupied in this country by Jack Dempsey and Benny Leonard, are filled by Rodolfo Gaona and Ernesto Pastor. Pastor's income is probably $500,000 a year, but he does not make his money easily or without danger.

During a recent bull-fight in Mexico City, at which President Obregon occupied the presidential box, Pastor escaped death by a hair's breadth. The matador had spoken his brindeis, the little speech always addressed to the President in which the swordsman asks permission to kill the bull. He had stepped out into the arena with his sword and little red flag, the muleta. The bull had charged a dozen times, but had not been maneuvered into a favorable position for the final stroke, when President Obregon decided it was time to go home.

As he rose, the band, as is the custom, broke into the Mexican national air. The audience rose as one man, removed its hat and stood silent. Pastor faced the President, drew himself up to attention, and raised his sword in salute. All were immovable except the bull. He did not understand music. On the far side of the arena he began to paw the ground, snort and switch his tail in rage. The bandmaster, a humane man, quickened the time of his musicians until they were playing the solemn hymn like a jazz orchestra, but the bull would not wait. With a bellow of rage he charged at Pastor. The matador never moved, and it became a race between the bandmaster and the bull. The bandmaster finished first, and Pastor, as the last note of the national anthem sounded, leaped aside and sprinted to safety.

CONVENTION CALL!

vexatious problems of peace and reconstruction; to emphasize the dominating and determining economic character of our movement, and to carry on such political action as the interests of labor will warrant and the trade union movement has directed; to withstand and overcome the bitter antagonism now so rampant to undermine and to destroy the greatest constructive force in our Republic, the American labor movement, for indeed, now, more than ever, "this is the time that tries men's souls"; these and other great questions of equal importance will, of necessity, occupy the attention of the Denver convention.

Therefore, the importance of our movement, the duty of the hour and for the future, demand that every organization entitled to representation shall send its full quota of delegates to the Denver convention, June 13, 1921.

Credentials

Credentials in duplicate are forwarded to all affiliated unions. The original credential must be given to the delegate-elect and the duplicate forwarded to the American Federation of Labor office, A. F. of L. building, Washington, D. C.

The Committee on Credentials will meet at the headquarters of the American Federation of Labor six days previous to the opening of the convention, and will report immediately upon the opening thereof at Denver, hence secretaries will observe the necessity of mailing the duplicate credentials of their respective delegates at the earliest possible moment to Washington, D. C.

Resolutions—Time Limit

Under the American Federation of Labor Constitution, resolutions of any character or propositions to change any provision of the constitution, cannot be introduced after the second day's session without unanimous consent.

Grievances

Under the law no grievance can be considered by the convention which has been decided by a previous convention, except upon the recommendation of the Executive Council, nor will any grievance be considered where the parties thereto have not themselves previously held conference and attempted to adjust the same.

To understand clearly the significance of compulsory arbitration in the interest of the public we have but to recall Æsop's fable of the monkey, the cat, and the cheese.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd)

Britain's vast strike demonstration, which at the time promised to include over five million men, put new confidence into the tone of the trade unionists of America.

Discussion of the railroad shop agreement and the proposed wage-slashing in the railroad, merchant marine, building trades and other lines has noticeably changed since the British miners threw down their picks and challenged Premier Lloyd George. The drive of the "open shop" fanatics, already slowed, has been stopped. American labor is going to stand and fight. Presently, it is going to counter-attack. The tide has been turned, and the example of the British coal diggers has done it. Bob Smillie, veteran leader of these miners, who has just retired, may well rest content in the proof that his gospel of emancipation has not failed.

President Harding, who was apparently persuaded that the national agreement covering the railroad shop and maintenance services could not be maintained, seems to see a new light. He has talked with Garretson, Jewell, Stone, Carter and other labor chiefs, and has had a full report on the conference held in New York between the spokesmen of the railroad bondholders and the unions. He knows now that the question is not one of pleasing the Garys and Atterburys, who clamor for the "open shop," but one of saving the credit of the railroads from disastrous collapse.

Insurance Companies Interested

Mr. Harding has learned that the life and fire insurance companies, representing millions of policy-holders, have lent $12,000,000,000 on the railroad properties, through the purchase of railroad bonds, and that the insurance companies now realize that the railroad managers are "milking" the properties for their own benefit, and to the infinite damage of the holders of insurance policies.

When President Smith, of the New York Central lines, said that the problems of railroad management were "none of the business" of the bondholders, the insurance men got very angry indeed, and replied that since they had loaned more money on the roads than the roads now seem to be worth—if dividend earning power is any index of worth—they would have a great deal to say about saving the properties.

As the insurance heads view the matter, Judge Gary and the Morgans and their corporate following have determined to wreck the whole financial structure of the railroads and the insurance companies, if necessary, to gratify Gary's hatred of unionism. The insurance men feel that this game does their business no good. They are going to try to reach an agreement with the railroad labor organizations which will be laid before President Harding for his endorsements, which will save their investment and restore dividends.

Plumb Plan Approaches

It is understood that their plan is that there shall be established a United States Railroad Corporation, which shall own all the railroads and shall operate them as four separate district units, within the boundaries of the four rate-making districts fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The bondholders, the management and organized labor shall be equally represented on the board of the corporation—thus recognizing the central principle of democratic control contained in the Plumb Plan. However, the Government is not, at present, to buy the roads. It is merely to guarantee their dividends after getting further control over their operating policy.

Every step toward consolidation is welcomed by the sixteen railroad labor organizations. They know that there can be but one end to the retreat of the investors. The Government will be asked to take over the bonds and stocks when the dividend-guaranty scheme falls down. They see the realization of the Plumb Plan nearer today than ever before, and they are not inclined to discourage any negotiations which will convince the insurance companies and the Administration that an agreement mutually satisfactory can be reached.

Open Shoppers Determined

Gary and Atterbury and the Morgan interests are redoubling their efforts to hold the railroad companies in line for a finish fight against labor. Gary would prefer to see the unions smashed at the expense of railroad stockholders and insurance policy-holders, while the United States Steel Corporation gets the benefit of their sacrifies in the industrial war. Many congressmen and senators are coming back to Washington for the special session, primed with anti-labor propaganda of the most extreme and absurd variety. They will put hundreds of thousands of words of this anti-labor discussion into the congressional record. For of all citizens, your member of Congress is the last to discover that a concrete issue such as the future of the railroads must be settled by agreement between the interested parties. He swallows the Gary propaganda whole, and without question.

Action Uncertain

It is possible that the election of Representative John I. Nolan, of San Francisco, as a member of the Republican steering committee in the House may result in a better understanding of the minimum program of organized labor by the majority in the lower branch of the new Congress. Nolan is also chairman of the Committee on Labor. In the two positions he can exercise a restraining influence on the anti-union members in the councils of his own party and in the House itself. Thus far the Republicans in Congress have shown no desire to understand what labor wants, nor any ambition to improve industrial relations.

Pending the conference which President Harding was asked by the heads of the railroad labor unions to hold, for the discussion of a plan for renewing the national agreement, there is to be a conference at the offices of the A. F. of L., for discussion of a legislative policy on the railroad situation. The sixteen standard railroad labor unions and brotherhoods are represented. Decision will be made as to the measures which railroad labor, backed by the A. F. of L., will submit to the House and Senate. The character of these measures will depend upon what the railroad managers and the administration may propose.

Unemployment Intensifies

Employment conditions are not improving. The United States Employment Service has issued a report covering 1,424 firms employing normally 501 persons or more, and located in sixty-five principal cities, having in their employ on February 28, 1,612,611 persons. On March 31 these firms employed only 1,587,786 persons, or a net decrease of 1½ per cent for the month.

This report is in line with reports from the Federal Reserve Board and from commercial organizations, which show that business is still on the down grade, that banks are in worse position than at the end of February, and that the masses of the people are steadily using up their savings while waiting for the "captains of industry" to lead them back to prosperity and a higher standard of living. The building trades are now feeling the effects of the hard times, and many contractors are trying to launch a general attack on wages and hours in the industry, although with small success. The coal miners are not directly menaced; they have the problem of unemployment in place of the strike or lockout this spring. No strain has thus far been put upon their organization except in the meeting of demands to tide over the idle period.

Postmaster-General Hays has met with a delegation of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, and discussed with them their grievances and their program of betterments of the service. He gave no pledges as to the reinstatement of men dismissed for union activity, nor did he agree to enforce the eight-hour law to reduce overtime work. But he assured President Hyatt and Secretary Flaherty and their associates that he would give these points his best and most sympathetic study, and would act as soon as he had the facts sifted. They were favorably impressed by his replies to their questions. Hays is waiting for the selection of his second and third assistant postmasters-general, and his solicitor, before outlining any definite policy toward the organized employes.

Commissioner General Husband, of the Bureau of Immigration, and Special Assistant Attorney-General Hoover, in charge respectively of deportation and prosecution of "dangerous aliens," announce that there will be no May Day scare nor May Day raids on labor parades this year. The new administration seems to have decided that the country is tired of false alarms, class hatreds and persecutions of labor organizers at the bidding of anti-union corporations.

During the year 1920, 3101 steam vessels and 177 sailing vessels entered the port of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. The distribution of the steam vessels by nationality follows: Brazilian, 1142; British, 754; American, 431; French, 191; Italian, 135; German, 14; Spanish, 6; Spanish-American, 20; Japanese, 43; others, 365. Of the sailing vessels, 160 were Brazilian, 7 American and 3 British. During the same period there were cleared from the port a total of 3205 vessels, of which 3025 were steam vessels. The total number of arrivals during 1919 was 2480, of which 2190 were steam vessels. Of these 240 were of American registry. This total was divided between 207 steam vessels and 33 sailing ships.

gress to repeal the law instanter if the lake passenger business is to be saved from ruin and decay. One of the grievances is the cost of maintaining lifeboats. The law does not compel life-saving apparatus for every passenger who sails on these inland seas, but the provisions as they exist are too expensive, saith these business men, who insist that the lifeboats take up too much room and interfere with revenue-producing passengers.

A. F. of L. Aims

From the inception of the American Federation of Labor it has taken the stand that while unions for the various trades and callings must each and all be left entirely free to govern themselves within their own borders, yet between the members of all these unions there should be a bond as great as that between the members of the same organization, and it is the aim of the A. F. of L. to strengthen that bond by organization, and by education and inculcation of the feeling and consciousness of unity of interest and solidarity to place the labor movement upon a higher and more effective plane. It seeks to organize the yet unorganized workers, the skilled and the unskilled, the permanently located and the migratory.

The A. F. of L. holds that whatever a man may be, so long as he works honestly and seeks to wrong no other man or to advantage himself at the cost to another, and seeks to maintain this standard regardless of how any toilers may happen to be employed, he is a man. Though the A. F. of L. does not advocate strikes, yet it encourages them when all other means to obtain justice for the toilers have failed. It urges that the workers, when struck, strike back as best they can. Though strikes do not always win, even those alleged to be lost at least induce employers to forbear in the future and teach them a lesson they do not readily forget; namely, that labor is the most important factor in production and entitled to a voice in the question of wages, hours, and conditions under which work shall be performed.

The A. F. of L. stands as the most potent factor in all our country in defense of the right of free assemblage, free speech, and free press. It endeavors to unite all classes of wage-earners under one head through their several organizations with the purpose in view that class, race, creed, political, and trade prejudices may be abolished, and that moral and financial support may be given to all. It aims to allow, in the light of experience, the utmost liberty of each organization in the conduct of its own affairs consistent with the generally understood practice of the identity and solidarity of labor.

The A. F. of L. establishes intercommunication; creates agitation and educates not only the workers but the educators. It is in direct correspondence and conference with the representative workers and thinkers the world over. It urges the interests of the toilers in Congress, State legislatures, municipal legislative bodies, administrative offices, and judicial agencies. It initiates measures in the name of labor and liberty, and decides upon acts according as they benefit or are calculated to injure the masses of the people. It has secured vast relief from burdensome laws. It seeks and will achieve freedom and justice for all.

It encourages and has largely achieved the interchange of ideas, ideals, and methods. It seeks to cultivate mutual interest, and to secure united action to announce to the world the wrongs and burdens which the toilers have too long endured. It voices the aims and hopes of the toiling masses. It asks and demands the co-operation of the organizations, co-operation and affiliation of all wage-workers who believe in the principle of unity, and that there is something better in life than long hours, low wages, unemployment and all that these imply.

The A. F. of L. endorses as basic these economic principles: That no trade or calling can long maintain wages, hours, and conditions above the common level; that to maintain high wages all trades and callings must be organized; that lack of organization among the unskilled vitally affects the skilled, whether organized or unorganized; that generally organization of skilled and unskilled workers can be accomplished only by united action—federation; that the history of the labor movement demonstrates the necessity for the union of individuals, and that logic implies a union of unions—federation.

The A. F. of L. urges the concentration of efforts to organize all the workers within the ranks of the organized, fair and open contest for the different views which may be entertained upon measures proposed to move the grand army of labor onward and forward. In no organization on earth is there such toleration, so great a scope, and so free a forum as within the ranks of the A. F. of L., and nowhere is there such a fair opportunity afforded for the advocacy of a new or brighter thought. The A. F. of L. affirms as one of the cardinal principles of the trade union movement that the working people must organize, unite, and federate, irrespective of creed, color, sex, nationality or politics. In the language of the late William E. Gladstone, "trade unions are the bulwarks of moderate democracy."

The A. F. of L. stands unalterably for the abolition of all forms of involuntary servitude and devotes its time and efforts to making every day a day of a better life.

The trade union movement fosters education and uproots ignorance; shortens hours and lengthens life; raises wages and lowers usury; increases independence and decreases dependence; develops manhood and balks tyranny; discourages selfishness and establishes fraternity; induces liberality and reduces prejudice; creates rights and abolishes wrongs; lightens toil and brightens man; makes the workers' workshop safe and brighter; cheers the home and fireside, and makes the world better.

The union label is an appeal to principle—principle that is above price; the principle that a dollar expended in the maintenance of fair labor is worth more in the end than a dollar saved at the bargain counter.

The man who knows least about the strike talks loudest about its evils. The man who knows most about the strike most clearly perceives the "soul of good in things miscalled evil."

How can we expect another to keep our secret if we cannot keep it ourselves.—La Rochefoucauld.

Labor News

At Albion, Mich., the cigarmakers have been notified of a reduction in wages of $2 for each one thousand cigars manufactured.

By a vote of 513 to 6, employes of the Hazard Manufacturing Company of Wilkes Barre, Pa., refused a wage cut and suspended work.

Suspension of copper production, effective immediately, has been announced by E. G. Dean, general manager of the Superior and Boston Mining Company. Approximately fifty men will be retained for development work, it was announced.

At Canton, N. C., the Champion Fibre Company is attempting to re-establish the eleven and thirteen-hour work day. Trade unionists throughout the State are developing a public opinion against the abandoning of the shorter work day by this concern.

At a recent conference of the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor, the executive board was instructed to carry on an educational campaign among workers to show that anti-union propaganda is paid for by funds amassed by reducing the wages of non-unionists.

Building contractors of Philadelphia are taking full advantage of the present unemployment situation by cutting the wages of their unorganized and unskilled workers from 50 cents per hour to 35 cents per hour, and in some instances as low as 30 cents per hour.

As a result of the work of the Minimum Wage Board of the District of Columbia, women employed in the business establishment of the national capital have received an average wage increase of 38 per cent, according to Miss Ethel M. Smith, member of the wage board and legislative secretary of the National Women's Trade Union League.

Eastern railroads appearing before the Railroad Labor Board, April 18, opened their drive for sweeping wage reductions for all unskilled labor and, in some instances, for shop and train service employes. Over the protest of the labor organizations, the board decided to proceed with the consolidated wage hearing of disputes certified by ninety-three railroads. The board decided to proceed, although there are three vacancies due to the fact that Congress has not yet confirmed President Harding's appointees and that one member is absent. Five members, a quorum, remain, however. Scores of exhibits, most of them dealing with the cost of living and wages for similar labor in other industries were filed as carrier after carrier laid its evidence before the board. Nearly two score roads had finished their presentation when the session adjourned. Following a protest earlier by the employers, the board had extended the time limit for each side's testimony to five days of five hours each. The board ordered the St. Louis Southwestern Railroad to restore the positions and pay of section foreman and track laborers, who went on strike in protest against a reduction in their wages, to the status of last July 20. The board also ruled that the men should receive back pay during the time they have been out, minus the amount they have earned by personal service in the meantime. The decision was based on the ground that the road had violated the board's wage decision.

Domestic and Naval

Prohibition against the shipment of arms and munitions to any country, where they might be used for revolutionary purposes, has been asked of Congress by the State Department.

Forty-five aliens, for whom deportation warrants are held by Federal officers in Detroit, have disappeared. The aliens have been at liberty under bond since shortly after their arrest in the Department of Justice raids more than a year ago.

Icy battalions from the Polar seas have moved south to latitudes in the North Atlantic that correspond with Boston and have forced the moving of trans-Atlantic steamship tracks 180 miles south of the usual lanes at this season.

The Northwestern Towboat Owners' Association has addressed a communication to Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover, suggesting that the forty wooden hulls now moored in Lake Union, the Seattle inner harbor, be used as lightships at Puget Sound and North Pacific coast points.

The United States means to establish and maintain a great merchant marine. Private monopolies tending to prevent the development of needed facilities should be prohibited. Government-owned facilities wherever possible, without unduly interfering with private enterprise or governmental needs, should be made available for general usages.

Immigration officials at Ellis Island have been notified by Charles Recht, attorney in charge of Russian Soviet interests, that no additional deported Russians would be admitted to Russia until further advices from Soviet officials. This will check the Government's plans for the deportation of thirty-five Russian extremists scheduled to leave in the near future.

Long-distance flights, which will cover practically every section of the country, are being planned by the Navy Department with the big dirigible "ZR-2," which is now nearing completion in England, and is expected to arrive in the United States early in July. The flights will be largely experimental, to determine the feasibility of the use of rigid airships for commercial purposes. The "ZR-2," nearly the size of the British naval "R-34," which recently made the flight to the United States and return, will be flown across the Atlantic by an American naval crew.

Western Alaska is offering a life-sized kick on inadequate mail service. A small boat, the "Venus," is operated out of Seward to the west and the Aleutian Islands on an irregular schedule, and with a capacity of only nine passengers, by a Portland shipping man, who has the Government mail contract. Service has been poor ever since the "Dora," operated by the Alaska Steamship Company, was pulled off the run because of failure to bid lowest on mail service. Seattle men are understood to have a four-hundred-ton boat for the service if the Government will pay adequate compensation for mail service. Trips once a month during the winter, and once every two weeks in the summer, are promised if Congress will take necessary action. Western Alaskans say poor mail and passenger service is strangling that part of the Northern territory.

Domestic and Naval

The "Scorpion," veteran warship of the Spanish-American War, interned when the United States joined the Allies, and now Admiral Bristol's flagship, has been ordered sold by the Navy Department.

During the month of March, twelve new shipping concerns were organized with an aggregate capitalization of $5,650,000. This compares unfavorably with companies organized for the same period last year, with an approximate capital of $61,850,000.

The three vacancies on the Railroad Labor Board have been filled by President Harding by the nomination of Walter L. McMenimen of Massachusetts, deputy president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, to represent the labor group; Samuel Higgins of New York, former general manager of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railway, to represent the management group, and Ben W. Hooper, former Governor of Tennessee, to represent the public group.

Only a slight decrease in shipbuilding is shown by the last returns issued by Lloyd's Register, when the figures are compared with those of the preceding report. The apparent decline in figures is said to be partially due to the fact that the work is not carried on at the same speed as formerly. An increase in motor vessels over sailing ships is shown in the quarterly issue of the register.

The SS. "Col. Bowie" foundered in the Gulf of Mexico last week, and at first it was feared that nineteen of the crew had been lost. Later advices reported the rescue of thirteen persons. The exact casualties are not known at present date.

Ten wooden freighters, originally built as steamships by the United States Shipping Board, have been converted into sailing vessels, according to a report by the division of operations of the Shipping Board, a total of 211 wooden ships having been sold. Of this number, however, sixty-one were tugs. Five wooden steamers, tied up for some time in foreign ports, are now said to be laid up at Norfolk, and twelve similar vessels have been bought by private corporations. Of the entire fleet of three hundred wooden ships, only fifteen are at present listed as active.

According to press dispatches the Argentine Government is evidently determined not to intervene in the "Martha Washington" incident despite protests from the United States. Members of the Cabinet are playing chess with American Government representatives, the foreign minister referring them to the finance minister, who, in turn, insists that the case must be decided by President Irigoyen. It was stated in the foreign office this morning that Foreign Minister Pueyrredon has gone to his country estate, and had not left anyone authorized to act. The undersecretary of foreign affairs stated that he knew nothing of the "Martha Washington" except what he had read in the newspapers despite the fact that the United States Embassy had sent a strong note to the Ministry, repeating the verbal protest, requesting an immediate reply. Persons near the Government appear to think that the strongest United States step would be not to permit Shipping Board vessels to call at Buenos Aires.

News from Abroad

Late advices from Rome state that fourteen persons were killed and one hundred wounded in recent fighting between the Fascisti and Communists in Tuscany province.

A critical situation has arisen between France and Norway owing to certain demands by France, which are considered inadmissible, with regard to the renewal of the commercial treaty between the two countries.

The Canadian House of Commons, voting under cloture rules, has sustained the Meighen Government in its shipbuilding program and granted the administration an interim supply vote for carrying on public expenditures for the first part of the present fiscal year.

Work will soon be started on a wireless station to be conducted near Pisa, for communication with the United States. This announcement was made in a lecture by Marquis di Solari, who collaborated with Marconi in his wireless experiments. He said it was hoped to begin operation in 1922.

Russia has resolved to maintain her military strength in spite of the fact that fighting has ceased on all fronts. The organization of the new "international army" has been commenced. This force will replace the old Soviet army, and is to be available for enforcing the dictates of the third internationale.

The Austrians are determined that there shall be no more king-raising attempts in that country. A measure, making the presence in Austria of a former king a felony, punishable by from one to five years' rigorous imprisonment, has been forced through the constitutional committee by the combined Pan-German and Socialist Democratic vote.

The Belgian Government has made arrangements with Holland, whereby workers of both countries will have reciprocity of treatment in regard to compensation for industrial accidents and the advantage of social insurance. An agreement with the French Government guarantees to workers of both countries who work in French or Belgian mines the workers' pensions in force in each of these countries.

According to a dispatch to the Tidningen, the Soviet Government of Russia has worked out a plan for the restoration of the Russian fleet. Three armored cruisers will be placed in fighting condition at once. These vessels, completed during the war, register 35,000 tons each. Diplomatic negotiations are under way for the purpose of obtaining delivery to Russia of Russian merchant ships lying in foreign harbors.

General Baron Wrangel's army remnants have become a white elephant upon the hands of the French. Official France is making desperate efforts to convince the half-starved hordes who went down to defeat in South Russia at the hands of the reds that they must work out their own salvation not as an army, but as individuals. The Government has officially announced, that owing to the persistent efforts of General Wrangel to keep his army intact, "it is indispensable that we break his contact with the soldiers." Asserting that France already has expended 200,000,000 francs in feeding refugees, the note warns that this cannot continue, and that the men must work out their own salvation.

A farmer was showing a friend over the farm. "How many sheep do you think are in that flock?" he asked.

The visitor considered a minute and then replied: "About 500."

The farmer was astonished. "Absolutely correct," he declared. "How did you do it?"

"Well, I just counted the legs and divided by four," the guest explained. —Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Bensonhurst—Yes, she did.

Flatbush—And she thought of taking up law, you said?

Bensonhurst—Yes; but now she's satisfied to lay it down.—Yonkers Statesman.

"Did you buy that ninety-dollar hat you were raving over?"

"Yes."

Fond Parent—Reason, my boy, is that which enables a man to determine what is right.

Inquiring Son—And what is instinct?

Fond Parent—Instinct is that which tells a woman she is right whether she is or not.

The roughneck politician burst into the lawyer's office and in an excited manner asked:

"What would you do if a paper should call you a thief and a liar?"

"Well," said the lawyer scrutinizingly, "if I were you I'd toss up a nickel to see whether I'd reform or pay no attention to the statement." —Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

A LEGAL VICTORY

Right of Seamen to Use of Municipal Court Upheld by Court of Appeals

The following copy of a decision of the Appellate Term of the Supreme Court of the City of New York, in the case of Danielson vs. Sigsbee Humphrey & Co., is of more than ordinary interest to all seamen, inasmuch as it means a better opportunity of obtaining hearings within a reasonable period of time.

Mr. Silas Blake Axtell conducted the case in behalf of the plaintiff-appellant, under authority of the International Seamen's Union.

The appeal was taken from a decision dismissing the complaint for breach of contract of employment of a seaman on board an American vessel owned by the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Judge Hayes of the Municipal Court, N. Y., held that that court was without jurisdiction because of certain limitations in the statute, which created the jurisdiction of the Municipal Court. Attorney Axtell took the other view. His chief argument to the court, however, was that we had become a maritime nation. The Federal Courts are cluttered with work, thousands of seamen live in New York and naturally seek trial of their cases for injustices done them in foreign ports here.

To deprive them of the use of the Municipal Court, where a trial may be had within two weeks by a jury or by judge, as the plaintiff elects, was wrong, and unless it clearly appeared that the Legislature had intended that the Muncipal Court should not have jurisdiction over seamen's claims, then the jurisdiction should be maintained.

Further argument was urged. How can a court show that it will enforce the rights of a traveling salesman for breach of contract in foreign trade, or of a passenger for the loss of his goods, and deny to the seamen the right of trial by jury in the Municipal Court for breach of his contract of employment on an American ship in foreign trade, merely because he is a seaman.

The decision was argued at length and fully briefed, receiving most careful consideration by the court, which found for the appellant.

Appellate Term, First Department, Supreme Court, January, 1921. Present—Hon. Charles L. Guy, Hon. Robert F. Wagner, Hon. Philip J. McCook, JJ.

Rudolph Danielsen, plaintiff-appellant, against Sigsbee, Humphrey & Co., Inc., and ano., defendants-respondents. (No. 38 Mun.)

Appeal by plaintiff from judgment and order of the Municipal Court, Borough of Manhattan, First District, dismissing his complaint on the ground that the Municipal Court had no jurisdiction of the action. Harrington, Bigham & Englar (Horace M. Gray, of counsel, for respondents). Silas B. Axtell (Arthur Lavenburg, of counsel, for appellant).

McCook, J.:—

This action is brought by a seaman to recover wages against a private corporation and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation. The plaintiff alleges that he was regularly employed as a member of the crew of the vessel "Cabegon," and was wrongfully discharged. Plaintiff alleges the ownership of the vessel in the following language:

"Third—Upon information and belief, that at all time hereinafter mentioned, the defendants owned and/or operated and/or managed and/or controlled a certain merchant vessel known as the 'Cabegon.'"

Defendant Sigsbee, Humphrey & Co., Inc., moved to have this paragraph made more definite and certain, and the trial court, upon such motion, held it had no jurisdiction of the action and dismissed the complaint, relying as shown by the opinion upon Roche v. McCaldin, 1 Misc. 174.

The basis of Roche v. McCaldin, supra, is Chapter 410, Section 1286, Subdivision 4, of the Laws of 1882, which re-enacts in substance Chapter 71, Section 2, of the laws of 1819.

In 1819 the present Municipal Court was not established, but a similar court, presided over by the "Assistant Justice of the City of New York," was then in existence. By the Laws of 1819, Chapter 71. it was provided:

"I. That the Justices' Court in the City of New York, having marine jurisdiction, shall be called and known by the name of the Marine Court of the City of New York.

"II. That the assistant justice of the City of New York shall not have jurisdiction to hear and determine any actions to be brought by any seaman or mariner or other person, belonging to any ship or vessel, for seaman's wages, particularly mentioned and specified in the one hundredth and sixth section of the act hereby amended."

The statute above quoted referred to Section 106 of the Revised Laws of 1813, Chapter 86, which gave jurisdiction of all actions for seaman's wages to the Justices Court. The name of the "Justices Court" by Chapter 71 of the Laws of 1819 was changed to the "Marine Court" and later became our present City Court while the "Assistant Justices," of whom there was one for each city ward, as enacted by the Laws of 1807, Chapter 139, eventually became our present Municipal Court.

The Code of Civil Procedure adopted in 1849, in which the laws relating to Justices Courts in the City of New York were incorporated, provided in Section 463 that "all statutory provisions inconsistent with this act, are repealed." However, Collins v. Underwood, 1 E. D. Smith, 318, decided in 1852, held that the provisions of the code had not repealed the prohibitory act depriving the district or justices courts of jurisdiction in actions brought for the recovery of seamen's wages.

By Chapter 741, Section 4, Laws of 1870, the Code was amended in reference to jurisdiction of district courts, as follows: "Section 66 of the said Code is hereby amended so as to read as follows: The district court of the City of New York shall have such jurisdiction as is provided by special statutes."

Turning to the laws of 1882, Chapter 410, which was "An Act to consolidate into one act and to declare the special and local laws affecting public interests in the City of New York," we find under Section 1285 that district or justices courts in the City of New York shall "have such jurisdiction in civil actions and special proceedings as is specially conferred upon them by statute, and no other." Section 1285 gives such courts the jurisdiction therein prescribed "except as otherwise provided in the next section."

The next section, viz., 1286, excluded jurisdiction in certain cases, and among them the cases named in Subdivision 4, which reads as follows:

"Where the action is brought by any seaman or mariner, or other person belonging to any ship or vessel, against the owner or owners, master or commander of any such ship or vessel, for or by reason of the non-performance or breach of any agreement or contract made by such seaman or mariner, or other person, with the said owner or owners, master or commander, for services, or compensation for service, on board of any ship or vessel, during any voyage performed, or in part performed, by such ship or vessel."

Section 2143 provides:

"Sections (enumerating various sections) twelve hundred and eighty-six, except subdivisions four and five of this act, being intended only to contain the substance of certain sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, shall not be construed as making any new enactment or as repealing, modifying, amending or superseding any provision of said Code, but shall be treated and considered as embraced in this act solely in order that it may contain all provisions of existing laws which are of special application in the City of New York."

It is clear from the marginal note to the official edition of the Laws of 1882 that the source of Section 1286 was Section 2863 of the Code with the exception of subdivision 4, whose source is stated to be subdivision 2, Chapter 71 of the Laws of 1819.

At this point it is essential to ascertain the effect of the consolidation Act of 1882, Chapter 410. In view of the title to the act, was there a repeal by implication of Chapter 71 of the Laws of 1819? Do the provisions of Section 2143 change the ordinary rule in reference to repeal by implication? The same questions were raised in matter of New York Institution for Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, 121 N. Y. 234. In that case the question was whether Section 8 of the Act of 1865, relating to acquiring land, levying assessments, etc., for the laying out of Central Park, was repealed by the same Consolidation Act we are now discussing. In that case the court said:

"We have not, therefore, a case where some prior statute has been wholly omitted and no provision of any kind substituted in its place. But this is a case where the prior provision of law has been entirely dropped, and provisions upon the same subject are found in the new act. Under such circumstances, how is the Consolidation Act to be construed? It was the manifest intention of the Legislature that it should take the place of the numerous special and local acts applicable to the City of New York, which had been enacted for more than a century, and to rescue them from the obscurity, uncertainty and difficulty caused by their scattered condition; and that intention should have effect. We have, therefore, reached the conclusion that Section 8 of the Act of 1865, although not specially repealed, was superseded by the Consolidation Act, and that the order of the General Term should, therefore, be affirmed with costs."

In the case just cited, the provisions of the omitted section were covered by other legislation in the new enactment which did not follow the omitted provisions. For this reason the Court of Appeals held that the former act was superseded. In the case at bar, the provisions of the old act (Chapter 71 of the Laws of 1819) were incorporated in the new act by the use of almost the identical language, and, in addition, the effect of such provisions was extended so as to cover not only actions for seamen's wages, but also any action for services brought against an owner or master of a vessel, providing such services were rendered during any voyage of such vessel. Thus the new act is somewhat broader than the old. Section 2143 seems to have been incorporated in the new act for the purpose of protecting Code sections and certain other laws, therein enumerated, against repeal by implication, stating that they were incorporated therein for the sake of embracing all provisions affecting the City of New York in one act. It is significant that subdivision 4 of Section 1286 was expressly excepted from the operation of the provisions of Section 2143. The Legislators knew the source of this subdivision, and yet did not state that Section 2 of Chapter 71 of the Laws of 1819 was not to be deemed to be repealed or superseded by the new act, which enlarged the scope of the original act. It is a fair inference that they thus intended that the old act should be superseded, and that they contemplated that the consolidation should repeal or supersede some prior enactments is obvious from the language used in Section 2143.

Chapter 580 of the Laws of 1902 is the Municipal Court Act. Section 1 states the jurisdiction which is wide enough to include the plaintiff's claim in the present case. Section 364 repeals "the laws or parts thereof, specified in the schedule hereto annexed." Then comes the "Schedule of Laws repealed" with a list of laws and sections in which appears at page 1596 (Laws of 1902, Vol. 2) the following: "1286 .... No jurisdiction in certain cases."

Thus by a double identification we have the provision in question done away. We find Section 2, Chapter 71, of the Laws of 1819, was superseded by the Consolidation Act (Subdivision 4, Section 1286, Chapter 410, Laws of 1882), and that Section 1286 of Chapter 410 of the Laws of 1882 was repealed by Chapter 580 of the Laws of 1902, and that the right of the plaintiff in this action to sue in the Municipal Court is conferred by the Municipal Court Act. The present Municipal Court Code (Chapter 279, Laws 1915) states the jurisdiction which is wide enough to include this plaintiff's claim and contains no provision denying jurisdiction to the Municipal Court in the present case.

In passing, it may be said that Roche v. McCaldin, supra, relied on by the court below, was decided while Section 1286 of the Laws of 1882 was in effect, namely, in 1892, and thus before the repeal of 1902, and hence the question here presented was not before that court.

The court below, therefore, erred in dismissing the plaintiff's complaint as to defendant Sigsbee, Humphrey & Co., Inc., on the ground that the Municipal Court had no jurisdiction of the action, and also in dismissing the complaint as to the defendant Shipping Board (Ingersoll Rand Company v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, Appellate Division, First Department, decided January 1921.)

Judgment and order reversed with $10 costs and motion denied with leave to defendants to serve answers within five days after service of copy of order to be entered herein, upon payment of said costs.

All concur.

That the effect of the foregoing would be followed by immediate results is elucidated by a concrete example, in the case of John J. Irving vs. Phelps Brothers.

Irving and one Hockery, second cook and messman, respectively, were driven out of the Olympia at Salonica, Greece, because of their knowledge of certain extensive thefts from cargo by the chief steward.

The consul discharged them over his signature on the ground that "they disturbed the discipline on the vessel," and told them to take their money. Hockery's case was settled. Irving refused to accept less than the full amount of his claim. Two judgments by default were taken during the process of litigation, which extended over a period of six months. On one occasion the city marshal was in possession of all of the furniture, chattels, etc., of Phelps Brothers, New York City.

Finally bonds were filed, defaults opened, and the case set for trial. Then, the defendants obtained another delay, by having the court issue a commission to take the testimony of the American Consul at Salonica. This would have required three or four months longer. It was finally agreed between counsel that the American Consul or Vice-Consul, if called, would testify that "he had given the seamen a fair hearing and that he had discharged them after he was satisfied they should be discharged for a cause." This stipulation went into the record.

The attorneys for the shipowners argued at great length, but the jury were out less than five minutes and they returned a verdict for the plaintiff, for the full amount, together with costs, interest and waiting time; in fact, they gave him everything they could give him and indicated that, in their opinion, he had been given a mighty rough deal and should have more money.

Judge Hayes of the Municipal Court then threatened to set the case aside for want of jurisdiction, and the decision of the Appellate Term in the Danielson Case, reversing Judge Hayes on his previous attitude, not having been rendered, the seaman nearly lost his case, but now it is sure and Irving will receive his money.

The Municipal Courts will undoubtedly continue to exercise jurisdiction in seamen's cases, which means better service and quicker trials than ever before.

CO-OPERATION WILL CURE THEM

"It is an ill wind that blows nobody good." The present "open shop" drive bids fair to result in some beneficial changes for the general public, although not intended to work out in any such manner by the open shoppers.

All those elements of our social structure which can be regarded as economic waste, such as brokers, insurance agencies, real estate sharks, middlemen, small and large jobbers, etc., including the average building contractor, are lined up with the arrogant and ruthless element of employers.

These numerous useless appendages to the body politic maintain their status only by the most intensive methods of united action, such as rotary organizations, boom and boost clubs, civic improvement (?) leagues, brag, bluff and bunk and an overwhelming class consciousness. They realize the power of thorough organization and the necessity of preventing its adoption by the masses of workers upon whose efforts they thrive, therefore, their weight is thrown in the balance against labor at all times. A continuation of aggression from the exponents of open shop methods has awakened some of the toilers to the situation, particularly in the building trades.

A recent issue of the Denver Labor Bulletin states that:

"The building crafts of Denver that have refused to take wage cuts and are locked out by the contractors have decided to form a company to do contracting work, and the proposed name of the company will be the Denver Building Trades Council Construction Company. This plan has been tried out in several of the small towns in the State where the 'open shop' movement is on, and it has proven very successful.

"This move on the part of union labor in the building industry shows that the workers are waking up to their real power and it will be the most effective method they could adopt to defeat the 'open shop' movement, as they will be able, through co-operating, to do building much cheaper than is being done at present and will show up the profiteering methods of the large contractors and building supply companies, who have virtually a 'closed shop' combination to keep prices up."

Such intelligent action upon the part of union mechanics is encouraging; it not only means a thorough check to the operations of arrogant employers, but it foreshadows relief from the serious dwelling shortage which confronts the United States at this time.

By means of collusion, which was in many instances criminal conspiracy, the cost of building and material has been elevated to exorbitant levels.

Successful co-operation by the workers assures the end of building restriction due to overcost, lower rents and a more equitable distribution of the wealth created by the building mechanic.

FINLAND'S GROWING FLEET

That Finland has ambitions for the ownership and operation of a merchant fleet is shown by the following statistics recently issued at Helsingfors:

On November 25, 1920, the Machinery and Bridge Building Joint Stock Co., at at Helsingfors, launched the cargo steamer "Ostrobotnia" (1500 tons dead weight) for the Atlantic Shipping Co. In January, 1921, a sister boat, the "Karelia," left from the same wharf, and both steamers will carry cargo on the Finland-England-Mediterranean line, where the steamer "Finlandia" of the same size and belonging to the same firm has been running since May, 1920. All three vessels are strengthened against ice and of the special type used in Finland for winter traffic.

The Finland Transoceanic Trading Co. (Ltd.) is building two cargo steamers of 1700 tons dead weight of the same type, also iceproof, which are expected to be ready in the spring of 1921.

A Rotterdam firm is building for the Finland Steamship Co. (Ltd.) four cargo steamers, meant for Finnish winter traffic and of a special ice-proof type, The first was launched December 12, 1920, under the name of "Argo." With a sister boat of 2200 tons dead weight it will be placed in the Helsingfors-Liverpool line in the spring of 1921. Two smaller boats of 1700 tons dead weight will be launched in May and June, to be placed on different lines between Helsingfors and European harbors.

"MEDDLESOME OLD FOGIES"

"Meddlesome old fogies who cannot tell the fore from the aft of a ship" was the term applied to the Detroit Chamber of Commerce by Secretary Hunter of the Marine Firemen, Oilers and Watertenders' Union.

The business men recently denounced the seamen's law, while refusing to permit members of the Seamen's Union to present their side of the case. Secretary Hunter said that R. J. Maclean, chairman of the business men's conference, admitted that he had been on board a ship but once in his life, and that he never read the seamen's law. Maclean promised the unionists that he would arrange for them on the program—and then forgot his promise.

The union label is the "In Hoc Signo Vinces" of the crusade to rescue the child from the workshop, factory and mill; the woman from the sweat shop and tenement house, and the millions of labor from the clutches of greed, degradation and poverty.

Judicial Usurpers—Have Slippery Defenders

The declaration by trade union representatives at their recent Washington conference that workers should disregard labor injunctions has brought every slippery defender of judicial usurpation to the fore.

The eel-like advisers (?) of labor assume to possess a knowledge of the injunction process, but confess their ignorance when they insist that labor should "observe the Constitution."

Labor injunctions are not based on the Constitution.

And no legislature—National or State—ever empowered courts to issue these writs, which are court usurpation and can not be defended except on the slave theory that labor is a commodity.

The injunction, as originally intended, is a necessary part of our judicial system. It is for the protection of property and property rights where the plantiff has no recourse at law. It was never intended to interfere with personal rights.

In late years courts have departed from the purpose of the injunction.

The courts have revived the slave theory that labor is property and workers on strike are enjoined from exercising personal activities that are legal beyond question if no strike exists.

Under the labor injunction speech is gagged, the dollar placed above constitutional guarantees and the judge assumes the role of lawmaker, judge and executioner combined, with no trial by jury and sentence to suit the whim of the court.

Those who advise labor to secure injunction relief "through constitutional methods and observe the law" should give this advice to the courts.

For years labor has appealed to State courts for relief. In some cases this has been successful, but State Supreme Courts have set the act aside.

The Massachusetts Legislature declared that labor was not a commodity; that to labor is a personal right. The State Supreme Court replied that labor is a commodity, and outlawed the act.

The same situation is found nationally. Congress passed the Clayton law, wherein is stated that labor is not a commodity or article of commerce—that it is not property.

At its first opportunity—in the Duplex-Machinists' case—the United States Supreme Court nullified that declaration.

These disregards for law by the courts are ignored by slippery advisers (?) of labor who add to the gaiety of the nations by lecturing labor on law observance.

Roads Invite Tie-up

"The reason for the present plight of the railroads is their illegal and dishonest expenditure of money for maintenance and their prohibitive rates which have stalled traffic," said Senator La Follette, in an address before the People's Reconstruction League.

The lawmaker assailed the Cummings-Esch act and declared that the railroads were the authors of this legislation.

"Having dictated the terms of this law," he said, "and having failed completely to put the transportation system on a sound basis under its operation, the railroads are again here in Washington preparing to make another raid on Congress.

"Any difficulties that the carriers are now in is due to misfeasance before Government control and to artificial and malicious obstructions by men in high railroad places to make the system fail.

"The time will come when the truth will be known about the sabotage they practiced in order to discredit the operation of the administration."

The Senator declared that mismanagement and not high wages is responsible for the present condition of the railroads. "I have read hundreds of affidavits of men who were employed on the railroads who stated under oath," he said, "that they were ordered and required to execute orders which blockaded transportation, orders which undermined and retarded the work, orders which destroyed material."

Defends Americanism

A bill introduced by Senator Borah provides for a fine of $10,000 and five years' imprisonment, or both, for any officer or agent of the United States in the civil, military or naval service "who injures, oppresses, threatens or intimidates any person in the free exercise of enjoyment of any right or privilege secured or guaranteed to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States."

Heavy penalties are also provided where an officer or agent of the Government attemps to interfere with any one who would "advance, promote, agitate for or discuss any new statute of the United States or amendment of a statute of the United States, or any proposition, policy or measure, or any legislative, executive or administrative action, the carrying out of which, under the Constitution of the United States, would fall within the scope of Federal jurisdiction or would involve an amendment of the United States Constitution."

Severe penalties are also provided where an officer or agent of the Government seizes papers or other property without warrant of law or enters a hall or other meeting place for the purpose of breaking up the meeting. In addition to fines and imprisonment, the offender shall be discharged from the service of the United States.

Freight Rates a Menace

Railroad freight rates are so high that they tend to remake the geographical and industrial map of the United States, declared Secretary of Commerce Hoover. The Federal official said it costs 30 cents to ship a bushel of wheat from Missouri to New York by rail and the same wheat can be shipped by water from New York to Argentine, South America, for 10 cents a bushel. The speaker declared that if railroad rates are not lowered quickly there will be a shifting of agricultural industry.

World's Workers

At Hamilton, Ontario, the building trades unions have voted to resist all wage cuts and the "open shop."

Nearly 12 per cent of the total population of the German-Austrian republic are members of trades unions.

The Social Demokraten in Christiania says that in consequence of the reduction of wages ordered by the Norwegian shipowners, the Federation of Sailors and Stokers has decided that all members shall leave the ships. The order has already been extended in several Norwegian ports.

The school teachers of Canada have decided to organize into one big federation. One of the principles involved is the right of collective bargaining. The Canadian Teachers' Federation asks that no Ontario teacher apply for a position in Alberta until the troubles in that province have been settled satisfactory to the teachers.

Complete cessation of work and the holding of ten meetings in Parisian suburbs has been decided upon for May 1 by the Union Syndicates of the Seine Department. Subjects to be discussed at the meeting will be: No infringement of the eight-hour law, amnesty, protest against war, and assistance to the Russian revolution.

The miners' strike in Britain is still in the conference stage. Several efforts have been made during the past week to bring the employers and miners to an understanding that would form the basis of a settlement. To date, however, all efforts have resulted in failure, and the industries of the United Kingdom are feeling the effects of a serious coal famine.

Organized workers of Holland are resisting attempts to cut their wages with great effect. This is due to the solidarity of the workers. There are five general federations of labor unions in Holland, comprising a membership of over half a million. Although differing in opinion as to tactics, etc., the five federations can be relied upon to act together on any quesion of wage scale or strike.

The coal miners of New Zealand refuse to be put on the defensive in the same manner as their fellows in other parts of the world. They are demanding a six-hour bank-to-bank working day, two weeks holiday each year on full pay, a five-day working week, and compensation, at the rate of full wages, for sickness or injuries caused by working in the mines.

The New South Wales labor government has for its declared policy preference to members of trade unions in all Government workshops. The Government also allows the posting of all union notices and distribution of union literature in the workshops, as well as the right of entry to union officials to [illegible]

If you are an American or want to be one, or if you don't know, get Axtell's book and find out what America stands for today. What are you doing to see that equal opportunity to each Citizen of the United States in this great land, is preserved? The Seaman's Act, the Emancipation Act of seamen, a bloodless victory for the organization of workers, freeing more men than the Civil War of 1865 and without bloodshed, is fully explained in this book. Postpaid retail price, $1.00.

Silas B. Axtell, author of the book, has been attorney for the International Seamen's Union, Eastern & Gulf Sailors' Association, Marine Cooks & Stewards' Association, Marine Firemen & Oilers' Association and for seamen of the world, of all countries and nationalities for twelve years; has probably argued, tried and appealed more cases for seamen than any other single attorney in the United States.

Pacific Coast Marine

The "Dunsyne," which is said to be the first sailing vessel to bring a cargo of general merchandise from the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific Coast through the Panama Canal, is en route to San Francisco from New York.

The steamer "Eastern Importer," which has returned from a voyage around the world, will be turned back to the Shipping Board. The ship has been in the service of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Advices received by the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce state that the Japanese liner "Kiyo Maru" is being changed into an oil tanker at Molleno, Peru. As soon as the changes are made the vessel will be operated by the Toyo Kisen Kaisha as an oil transporter between Tampico and Japanese ports. The "Kiyo Maru" is a 5000-ton vessel.

Preparations are under way for a larger wharf at Lahaina, Maui. More than half of the concrete piling for the new landing have already been constructed, the date for the completion of the work being set for next year. With the new docking facilities steamers of all types will be enabled to lie alongside the warf and not anchor in the stream, as is done at present.

A drop of five shillings in the rate on grain from North Pacific ports to the United Kingdom and Europe has been made by the Shipping Board in chartering one of its vessels to Kerr, Gifford & Co., for 65 shillings. The vessel will load on the Columbia River for the United Kingdom, with an option on the Hamburg-Bordeaux range and the Mediterranean to ports on the west coast of Italy.

A number of San Francisco shipping firms are adopting the policy of placing watchmen at the gangplanks of steamers lying alongside the piers. Some of the guards, from private detective agencies, are in uniform. Formerly only a few operators followed this practice, but it has spread recently so that watchmen are found at nearly all vessels, in addition to the watchmen at the head of the piers and the customs guards.

Steamers operated by Swayne & Hoyt between San Francisco, New Orleans and West Indian ports, have discontinued calling at Cartagena and Puerto Colombia, due to port congestion. The change in schedule is expected to reduce the sailing time between here and New Orleans by five days. The company's steamers "Iris" and "Lake Gunni," to sail for Eastern ports next month, will touch at Galveston, providing freight shipments to the amount of five hundred tons are secured.

Three huge cigar-shaped log rafts, containing a total of approximately 15,000,000 feet of lumber, will be towed to San Diego from the lower Columbia this summer, it was announced by officials of the Benson Lumber Company. A fourth raft, now being assembled in the cradles at Wallace slough, probably will not be completed in time to be towed to San Diego before stormy weather sets in on the north coast. The first raft will leave the Columbia River June 5. The others will be towed south in July.

Renewed strength in the grain charter market from North Pacific to Europe was shown in two charters announced by The Guide. The Shipping Board steamers "West Nomentum," 3522 tons, and "Meanticut," 3771 tons, were taken by the Pacific Grain Company at 70 shillings to load on the Columbia river for optional ports from Hamburg to the Mediterranean. The "West Nomentum" formerly operated between Portland and the Orient, and the "Meanticut" is a new vessel which has never left San Francisco bay since completion.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Company have adopted a new schedule, which reduces freight rates an average of 25 per cent, to West Mexico and Central American ports. One of the biggest cuts is in the rate on lumber, from $27 to $18. General merchandise will be accepted hereafter at $14. New rates on other important exports to these countries are as follows: Flour, $6; cement, $6; soap, $6; tallow, $11; and matches, $12. The purpose of the reductions is to stimulate the movement of American products and manufactured articles to the republics of Mexico and Central America.

Lumber chartering on the Pacific Coast is being given its death blows by the regular line steamers, according to a prominent broker. To the East Coast, South America and Australia, the regularly berthed outsiders do not have a look-in, he declared. Grain remains the only present salvation of the chartering business on this Coast. As indicated by the two Shipping Board fixtures announced recently, this market shows firmness. Lumber, nitrate coal and copra are dormant and the oil companies are easily caring for their own needs. The general freight market continues to reflect a better tone—a fact which is now admitted even by most of tl pessimistic.

At a bid of $32,000, which was $9000 lower than the next competitior, the Moore Shipbuilding Company was awarded the contract for repa- ing the Pacific Mail freighter "Point Bonita," which grounded recently on Cardon Island, in the harbor of Corinto. Coincidentally, it is announced that the steamer "Cuba," carrying passengers and freight, will be returned to the Havana and Baltimore run, and take out the cargo intended for the "Point Bonita." The "Cuba" will also call at San Pedro. She was placed on this run several months ago, as a forerunner to the "Columbia," "Ecuador," and "Venezuela," but was put back into the Canal Zone route to care for the coffee movement.

Two additional Java-Pacific liners may be placed on the run between San Francisco and the Dutch East Indies. The vessels, which are now under construction in Europe, are expected to be ready for service in a few months, and the inclusion of San Francisco in their run is being considered. Four steamers altogether are being built by the Java-Pacific line, two in Holland and two in England. They are the "Tjikarang," 12,000 tons; the "Tjisaroea," 12,000 tons, and two 13,500-ton vessels, the "Tjikandi" and the "Tjibesar." The 4149-ton steamer "Saleier" is now at Batavia, scheduled to sail for San Francisco at an early date on her first trip to this port.

Japanese steamship lines are beginning to feel acutely the agitation in this country against their countrymen, and the number of Americans and Europeans in the passenger lists of the Japanese liners is rapidly falling. The tendency of Americans to keep off the Japanese boats is of great importance on this Coast, for they undoubtedly carry more passengers between this Coast and the Orient than the vessels under any other flag. Whatever the cause of the recent friction on board Japanese steamers, such as the fist fight on the T. K. K. liner "Siberia Maru" in San Francisco bay, the effect is to drive Americans and other white races from Japanese patronage. Each succeeding misadventure turns American travelers against the Nipponese boats, representatives of other passenger lines say. Noticeably, too, the Japanese are taking passage on American liners now only when necessity demands. The racial question has long had a vital influence on the trans-Pacific passenger trade. Ever since the Chinese boycott against Japan the Chinese have avoided the Japanese steamers almost without exception, and, similarly, but few Japanese are ever booked for vessels of the China Mail fleet.

The arrival last week of the Oceanic liner "Ventura," bringing what may be the last shipment of Australian wool to get in before the proposed emergency tariff, emphasized the serious outlook which this tariff gives to the trade with the Antipodes. Steamship operators on this route admit that a high tariff would be a very severe blow to their prospects. In order to avoid payment of the duty, should it be imposed before the "Ventura" had made her entry at San Francisco, some of the consignees appealed to the Oceanic Steamship Company to have their goods entered at Honolulu, where the "Ventura" touches. The consignees were advised that this was impossible. From Australia, the shippers asked Captain J. H. Dawson to do the same thing, but permission was refused by the Collector of Customs at Honolulu. Then one of the shippers requested that four hundred bales of his cargo be discharged at the Hawaiian port, but this was found to be impracticable. All the worry went for nothing, however, as the "Ventura" made port in ample time to avoid payment of duty. She had 3132 bales of wool in her holds.

From 39,584 tons in November to 62,472 tons in December, is the growth of the intercostal trade of San Francisco, as revealed in the detailed report of the Board of State Harbor Commissioners for the latter month, issued recently. Shipments from this port to New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, Norfolk, New Orleans, Jacksonville and Savannah totaled 34,035 tons, while the receipts at San Francisco from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston and Norfolk were 28,437 tons. This is an average of slightly over 1000 tons a day, both inbound and outbound, not including cargo for other Pacific Coast ports. The board's report shows total imports and exports of 175,006 tons for the month as compared with Seattle's 93,514 tons. Exports of 21,280 tons of bulk oil are not included in San Francisco's figures. San Francisco's exports were 118,663 tons, and imports 56,343 tons. For November, the exports were 74,090 tons, and imports 150,356 tons, so that exports gained, but not sufficiently to overcome the big drop in imports. Central America, Canada and Oceanica showed improvement, but the Orient was very weak. Oriental exports fell from 43,715 tons in November to 15,214 tons in December; imports from 19,737 tons to 10,258 tons.

STAND BY TOP'SL HAL'YDS!

What old-time sailor who has "rounded the Horn" in a square-rigger that is not affected with memories of his first experience at "running the Easting down." The first real hard blow encountered in the most tumultuous regions of the world invariably leaves lifelong impressions.

Perhaps a day has been one of hard squalls, and before nightfall the vessel has been snugged down to a reefed foresail and topsails. Running gear is hitched to the pins, and halyards are made clear for running, while heavy seas pound over the rails, washing every movable thing around the decks. The banging of hinged ports to lee lurch or weather roll adds to the noise of clanging stays, blocks and gear aloft, while the wind howls in blasts of fury. As the gale increases the necessity for further shortening of canvas becomes apparent, and the watch below nervously await the call for all hands on deck. Perhaps a few old salts agree that it is a hard buster and swap yarns of dreadful experience on previous voyages. A terrific squall strikes and the vessel heels to leeward, scooping over water up to the main hatch; then above the roar of the gale comes the command, "Stand by top'sl hal'yds!" Another terrific gust and, with a crack like a gun, away goes the fore-topsail. To the tune of "lower away" the crew flounder around up to their necks in water, feeling for the gear in pitch black darkness and clutching at every secure hold for safety. In driving hail, rain or snow, they swing aloft, and it is here that the mettle of the beginner is tested. If he is a shirker he hangs back in the darkness and crawls to cover, leaving his watch mates just that much harder task to perform—they must carry the added weight of a coward's delinquency. This type of man never becomes a seaman; he is eliminated by natural selection. If he has courage worthy of the calling he knows his duty is to get first out on the yard-arm, and sometimes this is no easy matter, especially if the gear has carried away. Icy blasts tear away his sou'wester and send it spinning to leeward, lightning flashes leave him temporarily blinded for seconds which seem hours, and the roll and pitch of the vessel makes his precarious hold still more insecure. If it should be a particularly tough job a very stiff trial begins. Time after time a few inches of canvas are skinned on the yard only to be snatched away again by each strong puff. Finally, disheartened after long struggle, with torn and bleeding fingers, he peers along the yard and notes the experienced seamen working steadily and taking advantage of each slight lull to gather in the canvas. With that exhibition of confidence and determination he receives, as it were, his second wind; he thinks no more of warmth and safety below. With exhilaration he puts his face to the gale, grits his teeth and glories in the very harshness and struggle of it. From then on the only thing that can prevent that sail from being snugged to the yard is for it to be blown from the bolt ropes.

As the sail is stowed and the men stagger down the riggings, exultant feelings of conquest control the man who has stood the test and he is ready for the next tussle—a man and a sailor every inch of him. He can laugh at the gale, hold his head to the elements and bless his maker that he has been constructed of such mold. Such men enjoy the struggle; they do not know what it means to shirk or quit.

We are at this present period standing by the topsail halyards; our test will shortly come. If we are of the mettle worthy of our calling we cannot shirk and dare not fail. Let us face the struggle as we furl the topsail, knowing our duty must be done and glory in the performance of it. Against such a spirit our opponents can never prevail. The final victory will be ours.

AN EASY INTERPRETATION

The Journal has refrained from extended comment on the situation confronting organized seamen because of the belief that such is not always timely, the uncertainty of international commerce, and the doubtful atmosphere surrounding our National Administration. However, the President's message to Congress has left nothing to the imagination. It is a cold-blooded ultimatum to labor, with implied threats and intimations of what is to follow given to certain industries. The seamen are given to understand that their "bill of rights," for which so many sacrifices have been made, is in jeopardy. The Seamen's Bill is to be amended, emasculated or repealed, or at least something detrimental of a legislative nature is about to take place in the very near future.

The speedy follow-up by "big business" everywhere, coupled with recent public statements of certain influential Administration officials, shows that the meaning of the President's message was not only easy of interpretation, but it was widely anticipated. During the war period, when wages in every other industry were jumping by leaps and bounds, in vain effort to keep pace with the rise in the cost of living, the demands of the seamen were conservative, notwithstanding the fact that profits in the shipping industry were excessive. Many vessels paid for their original cost in one voyage and, in some instances, returned a profit in addition to cost in one trip. Therefore, we nursed the belief that, inasmuch as our present wage is far below that required to maintain an American standard of living, we would be, to a certain extent, immune from wage-slashing attacks.

The drive to subjugate the workers is world wide. The seamen of the United States, who are enjoying the same rights and freedom guaranteed to all citizens under the Constitution, through operation of the Seamen's Act, are a menace to the forces of greed and oppression. Therefore, every effort is made by "big business" and its mercenaries to reinstitute serfdom in the American Merchant Marine, as a nucleus for aggressions upon the rights and liberties of all workers.

WHERE ARE WE DRIFTING?

Revulsion and horror permeated the civilized world when first news was flashed telling of the use of poison gas on the battlefields of Flanders. The terrible nature of its effects was astounding, and the sentiments of our people were aroused to a pitch of overwhelming indignation. The employment of such weapons was condemned as fit only for the denizens of Hades.

The war in Europe has now been ended for a period over two years, and peaceful activities are beginning to erase some of its cruelest impressions. The voice of cannon are stilled, and the publication of casualty lists are no more. Vessels of commerce now travel the ocean lanes uninterrupted by man-o'-war or lurking submarine. We have had time to recover our normal poise, and our trend of thought should naturally follow along peaceful lines with a better feeling to all mankind.

But, what are the actual facts in this regard? The manufacture of still more deadly gases goes on unrestrained, and laboratories are feverishly experimenting with still more powerful destructive forces for the use of man against his fellows.

If coming events cast their shadows before, it is not intended that a state of war shall be necessary to encourage or warrant the employment of these death-dealing devices; they are to operate commonly in civil life and to be used by our own people against each other.

Could devilish ingenuity construct a scheme more diabolical?

From all parts of the United States have come reports of efforts made by the ruling classes to establish State police, or Cossack systems. Suggestions are made for their equipment with armored cars, with machine guns. Recent reports glowingly described the furnishing of gas bombs to the Chicago police department, for the stated purpose of smoking out criminals or persons who may be resisting arrest. Another report reveals the completion of a device for use of mustard gas in bank vaults, which has been installed in a bank in Southern California, and now we are informed that these mediums of destruction are to be augmented by turning our peaceful postoffices into armed camps, by distribution of arms to postal employes. To stimulate desire and assure proficiency in the use of these weapons, a $5000 reward goes with the proper use.

To what extent, and how much longer, is the multiplication of implements of death and their employment to be fostered? What has become of our vaunted civilization? Where are we drifting, and for what are we, the declared bulwark of civilization, preparing?

These are thoughts that might well cause concern to patriotic Americans.

SINISTER TRAILS

"It is the bright day that brings forth the adder"; and so it is proven centuries after the words were written by the immortal Shakespeare.

Incessant pressure of public opinion is slowly but surely bringing to a climax the conspiracy of the bomb case persecutions; therefore out from his hole emerges the arch-conspirator, Martin Swanson.

In a recently issued booklet this chief factor of a modern day inquisition endeavors to cover a slimy trail behind the illustrious name of Theodore Roosevelt. But that is not the most significant aspect to the contents of his insidious pamphlet.

There are a few of us in the labor movement who have always felt that there might be some hidden force which impels hostility to certain bomb case defendants, and intensifies the blind prejudice of their enemies. The recent vaporings of Martin Swanson assure us that we are not altogether mistaken in our suspicion.

Time will not permit and space is too valuable to attempt answer to the deliberate distortion of facts contained in the venomous effusion; but after perusal of certain matter contained in the peculiar booklet, we realize more than ever the enormity of this violation of right.

The State of California has missed, by a very narrow margin, being made the unconscious party to a sinister plot; and there is yet time to straighten out the whole situation.

If the execution of Mooney had taken place, in accordance with desires of the persecutors, such a miscarriage of justice would have become irrevocable. However, the bomb cases must be thoroughly cleared up before the State is relieved of all stigma and a serious responsibility for the perpetuation of this affair.

There are 4013 hospitals with 311,159 beds in the United States, according to a report of the Council on Medical Education and Hospitals of the American Medical Association. It is estimated an average of 206,024 beds are occupied each day. Nevada has the largest proportionate supply of hospital beds, there being one for every 139 persons. The ratio of hospitals to square miles ranges from one to every forty-two square miles in Massachusetts to one hospital to every 5760 square miles in Nevada.

The constant clamor of big business for Government aid in developing markets abroad comes from the same men who loudly lament the interference of the Government in matters of business initiative.

Always demand the Union Label!

ALVES VS. "EASTERN ADMIRAL"

Attorney Arthur Lavenburg, 116 Broad street, New York, has favored the JOURNAL with the following communication:

Seamen's Journal,
59 Clay Street,
San Francisco, Cal.

Gentlemen:

On March 30, 1921, I tried a case for one Alvarro Jose Alves, a member of the Marine Firemen's Union, who was wrongfully discharged at Manila, Philippine Islands, by the master of the American SS. "Eastern Admiral," a Shipping Board vessel and operated by the Barber Steamship Lines.

Alves and five other coal passers of the same vessel were discharged by the master at Manila on November 18, 1920, claiming that the men laid down on their jobs and failed to keep sufficient steam up, thereby delaying the vessel with consequent loss of time and money. The men claimed that the low pressure was due to the inferior quality of the coal, which the captain and engineers denied.

On the trial the captain, general engineer and second assistant engineer testified on behalf of the shipowner and operator, but the jury did not believe them, inasmuch as they returned a verdict in favor of Alves for full damages, consisting of his maintenance at Manila, transportation to San Francisco and to New York, and additional two months wages that he would otherwise have earned. The case was bitterly fought by the ship's attorneys, but without avail.

I thought this case would be interesting to your readers in view of the article in the Seamen's Journal of March 23, relative to the number of seamen being discharged from other vessels at Manila.

Yours very truly,
ARTHUR LAVENBURG.

The foregoing is of considerable interest to seamen, due to the fact that it sheds some light on conditions prevailing at Manila, P. I.

During the past year, over eleven hundred American seamen were discharged from their vessels at Manila, of which 159 were discharged for cause, and 295 at expiration of contract.

American Consulates at a number of Asiatic ports make a practice of shipping destitute seamen in their respective districts to Manila, thereby artificially swelling the ranks of unemployed seamen at this port. A few shipmasters have proved that they are not slow to take advantage of the situation, and frequently seamen are discharged, booked as deserters, or left behind on the least possible pretense.

Comrade Alvarro Jose Alves has acted in a very creditable manner in obtaining his rights. By his efforts he makes the way so much easier for others to follow, and at the same time gives a salutory lesson to any ship's officer who might nurse a tendency to be unreasonable in conduct towards those working under his orders.

If one body of men have a right to quit work to compel a necessary improvement in the conditions of their lives, no other body of men can have a right to take their places. The court of morals takes no cognizance of the right to scab.

If Abraham Lincoln were alive to-day he would probably say: "Thank God, we have a labor movement that can sustain a strike until it accomplishes something."

Reports in shipping circles are to the effect that likely candidates for the appointment to the position of inspector of hulls to fill the vacancy made by the death of Captain James Guthrie are Captain Axel Cahling, former Lieutenant-Commander David B. Castle and Captain Frank Cook. Captain Herriman, well-known mariner, is said to be another aspirant for the position. The appointment of an inspector of hulls and boilers is under the rules of the civil service and the selection for the position is then passed on by Washington.

The new 458-foot 20,000-ton floating drydock of the Moore Shipbuilding Company has been placed in position at the Oakland yards.

DIED

Chas. Theodor Ferdinand Anderson, No. 696, a native of Sweden, age 42. Died at Philippine Islands, June 23, 1920.

William Jackson, No. 2808, a native of California, age 48. Died at Oakland, Calif., April 23, 1921.

Carl Sandell, No. 897, a native of Finland, age 43. Died at Berkeley, Calif., April 15, 1921.

The port of San Francisco has maintained a fair average in her foreign trade, despite the sharp slump in the shipping throughout other ports of the world. A compiled report issued by the Chamber of Commerce covering February shows that the total amount of imports and exports passing through here for the twenty-eight days of the above month was more than $16,000,000. Imports amounted to over $7,000,000 and exports were in excess of $9,000,000 for the above period. Asia was the largest trader with this port in February with goods valued at $2,772,145 being imported from there. Exports to the sum of $4,573,503 were shipped from here to various ports of Japan, China and the Orient during last February.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

MEMBERS KNOW TRUTH

It has become necessary that we again make a fight for our liberty, and the life of our organization which protects that liberty.

Not content with the proposed reduction of 20 per cent in wages for seamen, the wage revision committee of the American Steamship Association have submitted further intended reductions approximating 30 per cent in the deck department.

They also propose to eliminate overtime pay without the intention of eliminating overtime, and to terminate all working agreements with the various seafaring organizations.

These changes are not proposed under the spur of necessity or in a spirit of fairness, or with intention of building up an American Merchant Marine; but it is in line with a world-wide attempt upon the part of employers to disrupt organizations of workers forever, in order to enslave the laboring classes.

Our members generally are awake to the situation and we are preparing to meet all issues. We have weathered storms before, and will not give up a ship in face of a coming squall. Having our quarrel just we are doubly armed, and intend to keep on until a decent living is assured to all.

H. G. Taylor, Jr.,
Galveston, Texas.

A REASONABLE VERDICT

The legal outcome of an important action for damages on behalf of an injured seaman has recently been reported by Mr. Frederick R. Graves, attorney and proctor for the seaman, Michael J. Dalton.

According to the testimony in this case, which has been submitted for the use of The Journal by Mr. Graves, it appears that Dalton was serving as an A. B. on the SS. "Felix Taussig," of the Crowel Thurlow line of Boston at the time he was injured.

The ship at that time, in October 1919, was returning from Rotterdam to a United States port in ballast, the master being one Fred. B. Balano, "a hard case skipper from Down East."

On the passage across, about October 9, the crew were set to work painting inside the hatch by the Master's orders. It was found, however, that the ship was short of stage planks. Whereupon the master personally ordered Dalton to use a ladder in lieu of a stage. There was a lumpy sea running at the time, and the ship being in ballast was rolling heavily; therefore, Dalton protested that the ladder would be an insecure and dangerous contrivance to work upon under the circumstances. But Captain Balano insisted that he must use the ladder or be punished for refusing duty. Thereupon Dalton set up the ladder as directed, with the foot stepped on the between deck hatches and the upper end resting against the main deck hatch coaming.

The danger in working in this predicament was greatly increased by the fact that the between deck hatches were covered only on one side, and in case of a tumble the seaman was more than liable to be precipitated clear to the keelson or the bottom of the hold with every prospect of being killed. Dalton was, therefore, fully justified in protesting against being compelled to work in such a dangerous position, but as already stated his protest was not only ignored, but actually offset with threats.

While endeavoring to perform his duty in this hazardous position, and against his own better judgment, an unusually heavy roll, greatly accelerated no doubt by the fact that the ship was in ballast, capsized the ladder which appears to have been without a head lashing, and flung it clear across the hatch. The head of the ladder brought up against the opposite coaming with such terrific force that Dalton's hold was broken and he was catapulted into the between decks with such speed that he, fortunately, cleared the lower hatch coaming, but as a result of his fall, sustained an impacted, or seried fracture of the large bone of his lower left leg, and also a fractured knee cap.

Neglect of Master

The master admitted on cross examination, that he could have made the port of St. John, N. F., in two days after the accident.

Mr. Martin, chief officer, also testified that the ship was passing through Steam Ship Lane at the time, and that a wireless call would have brought prompt relief for the injured seaman from any of the liners within the area, as all of them carry surgeons and are usually ready to respond to such emergency calls from cargo ships.

Captain Balano made no effort to secure relief for Dalton until the ship arrived in Norfolk, Va., nine days after the accident. The only treatment extended to Dalton during this period was through the attentions of the second mate, who set his limb as well as he could, and fished it with splints hewed out by the carpenter. Moreover, the master neglected to wireless ahead for assistance to land Dalton at quarantine on entering Norfolk, and in consequence, the injured member was obliged to remain on board over night after arrival, and was not landed until the following day.

Crippled for Life

As a result of these cumulative acts of callous indifference and brutal neglect on the part of the master, Dalton is now permanently crippled, and upon this basis the suit was argued by his attorney.

The surgeons at Norfolk found upon examination of his injured limb, that the splintered edges of the fractured bone had been very imperfectly replaced by the unskilled hands of the second mate, and that it was now too late, after nine or ten days' contract to reset or correct the misshapen limb except by a very delicate, difficult, and somewhat dangerous method of chiseling, of doubtful utility at best.

Therefore Dalton must go through life with a twisted shank, although, fortunately for him, his knee cap has been correctly reset, and has mended perfectly.

After receiving the surgeon's report at Norfolk, Dalton returned to New York, and entered the United States Marine hospital, where he remained under treatment from October 24, 1919, to February 25, 1920. Thereafter he placed his interests in the hands of Attorney Graves with the favorable result recently announced.

Compensation Awarded

The action first came to trial in the State Supreme Court, Kings County, before Judge Lasansky and a jury, on February 16, 17, 18, 1921. But the jury disagreed on some technicality, and a new trial was ordered. The second trial took place in the same court before Justice Dyke and another jury, March 15, 16, 17, last, and resulted in a sealed verdict for the plaintiff for $12,000.

Both seaman Dalton and his attorney deserve to be warmly congratulated on the award of this substantial verdict by a State court which recognizes the right of seamen, in common with all other classes of workers to maintain an action for damages when they have been injured, through the indifference, neglect and reckless driving of heedless employers on land or sea.

Prevention and Remedy

It has frequently been our painful duty in the past to dwell at length on these needless killings and maimings of defenseless seamen, as we fear it will be in the future. And, inasmuch as we cannot invoke the Mosaic Law of an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, and a life for a life against those responsible for these frequent injuries to human beings, our only recourse is to the modern law which assesses personal injuries, like damages to property, in terms of dollars, and often allows property rights the greater consideration.

But for the present at least, we must enforce the laws, State or Federal, exactly as we find them for our own protection. And every seaman who is needlessly injured through the negligence of owners or the contemptuous recklessness of bucko masters and mates, owes a duty to every other seaman similarly exposed, as well as to himself or his dependents to invoke the laws designed for his protection and redress and fight to a finish. J. H. W.

APPLAUDING THE PRESIDENT

American shipowners manifested a great deal of jubilation over certain references to the Merchant Marine contained in President Harding's recent message to Congress.

Particularly gratifying to the point of view of these eminent sea lords was the inference drawn by their own interpretation of the President's message, that if a strict enforcement of the neglected provisions of the Jones Merchant Marine Act should prove inadequate to overcome the unfair (?) competition of foreign shipping so strenuously complained of by the American shipowners, other, and further relief in the form of direct or indirect subsidies might be provided to afford them additional advantage.

At the same time, they insist, the war

cost valuation of the Merchant Marine must be discounted in their favor, and the government which built the ships with millions of public funds must hereafter refrain from all pretense of owning or operating its fleets, and subsidize them in favor of private operators.

Well, if such be the policy of the new National Administration, so be it. Far be it from us insignificant seafarers to obstruct government policies for private purposes.

But why not be consistent about it?

If the sihps are to be linked to government interests by subsidies, why not shackle their crews by government retainers as well? In case of war, or national emergency, or in case the subsidized operators create an artificial emergency as an excuse for so doing, the Government can at once reassume control and priority over the ships, and restore them to national service.

But of what use would be the ships without the human element constituting their indispensable personnel?

Obviously, we cannot in a free country, as this great Republic is supposed to be, shackle a free man down to the degradation of involuntary servitude without a legal reason for so doing.

Under the ancient operation of the Merchant Marine, prior to the enactment of recent legislation, the seaman was always regarded as the property of the vessel, because he was always presumed to be in debt to the owner, and he could be apprehended, arrested and imprisoned, and impounded, or otherwise pounded, by the master, owner, agent or any other person —or anybody else, as a runaway slave without a warrant or any legal process, and subjected to an indeterminate term of imprisonment, or forced on board and compelled to fulfil his contract, simply because he had signed an advance note for wages backed by an employer whom he had never seen.

Now in this case, since a man cannot be held under compulsory servitude without a retainer, or other valuable consideration, real or imaginary, then why not insert in the proposed subsidy law a clause providing for a bonus, or retainer of say $1000 per annum, for every American seaman duly enrolled under the act, payable quarterly at the office of the United States Shipping Commissionoer same as wages. Then in case any seamen refused to serve on a mail steamer, or any ship chartered to carry government cargo or supplies, or that could be shown by any pretense or stretch of the imagination to be engaged in the remotest degree in government service, the law would do the rest, and those recalcitrant mariners, whether masters, mates or men, would go with that ship or go to Chokee.

We are not boosting for a ship subsidy act, we simply desire to draw attention to a slight defect in the proposed scheme that its eminent promoters appear to have overlooked.

The surest plan on earth to encourage foreign competition, discourage American seamanship and supplant the present personnel of the Merchant Marine with Asiatics and low-grade foreigners generally, is a national ship subsidy law, with its correlated evils.

Standardize American shipping conditions and commercial relations by rigid application of the Merchant Marine Act, as passed by Congress, and indiscriminate enforcement of the stabalizing provisions of the La Follette Act, then foreign ships will be shorn of their chief advantages in competing with American ships, subsidies will be thrown in the discard and patriotism, not serfdom, will be the compelling sentiment of the Merchant Marine, and American boys will follow the sea.

J. H. W.

AGREEING TO DISAGREE

Whether to agree or disagree, that's the question now agitating the minds of the special conferees of shipowners and seamen alike in considering the wage problem.

This has been conference week, and next week will be squabble week in the port of New York, and upon the outcome will depend the working status and wage adjustments of all seamen on the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts after May 1. The conditions adopted on this Coast, too, will have a bearing on the same questions on the Pacific Coast, for the problems coming before the Atlantic conferences will be similar in kind.

The difficulties and responsibilities confronting the conference of the Seamen's Unions are, therefore, unusually serious and exacting.

That the situation is particularly acute is made clear by the tardy and reluctant attitude of the American Steamship Owners' Association to consider any agreements with the seamen at all after May 1.

Now that they have been practically forced into conference through the urge of the United States Shipping Board and the prodding of public opinion, they are evidently determined to reject all proposals unless dictated by themselves.

Judging by their present attitude, the shipowners are not actuated by motives of good faith or a desire to maintain peace in submitting to the present popular demand for a conference with their employers.

In their three days' conferences with the representatives of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, at which the Pacific Coast Engineers were also represented, the shipowners have shown their duplicity by appointing a committee fully authorized to confer, to argue and dictate to the engineers, but utterly powerless to conclude any agreement with them. That no agreement was reached was due to the uncompromising attitude of the shipping representatives, who attempted to enforce a reduction of 30 per cent in wages and utter emasculation of the terms of the expiring agreement of last year. The shipowners' proposals were presented in the form of an ultimatum to a vanquished victim, and not in the spirit of upright negotiations in a sincere effort to preserve peace and good-will between parties, and protect the public and national interests afloat. The shipowners now agree to meet the representatives of the Seamen's Unions next, when they will insist on a radical reduction in wages to meet the declining European-Asiatic scales, elimination of overtime, re-establishment of the two-watch system on steamers, and back-to-buckoism generally.

It is too early yet to predict results, but if a strike ensues as a result of the bulldozing tactics of the shipping interests, we hereby notify the American public in advance that the Seamen's Unions have done their utmost at all stages of the proceedings to preserve peace. J. H. W.

FIRE DOWN BELOW!

A serious fire occurred at the hearquarters of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, 67-69 Front street, New York City, on April 8, which, but for the timely and energetic actions of Comrades Claude Guynn and George Lorange, baggagemaster and janitor, respectively, might have resulted disastrously to the whole premises. Fortunately, the blaze was mainly confined to the baggage room in the basement, where it originated.

According to Comrade Guynn's statement, the fire was discovered in the furnace room in the basement of the building at about 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and when detected it had already gained considerable headway.

The basement of the building is lined with concrete, but is divided by a wooden bulkhead, which separates the baggage room from the furnace room.

This bulkhead soon caught the blaze, which was quickly communicated to the baggage piled in tiers on wooden platforms extending the whole length of the building.

The beams in the lower floor also caught vre and the flooring was partly destroyed before the blaze was subdued.

The damage to the building, which has not yet been fully estimated, but which will total at least five or six thousand dollars, is covered by insurance, but the loss in baggage and personal effects owned by individual members is a very serious one.

Mr. Guynn states that there were about twelve hundred pieces of baggage, including parcels, in the basement when the fire occurred.

Five hundred of these, at least, were either burnt or badly damaged by water.

All this is a dead loss, and a very serious one, to our members, some of whom have been stranded all winter and have not the means with which to acquire new outfits.

This unfortunate incident brings us back to the old problem of the baggage room, which started on Commercial street in Boston more than thirty years ago.

Since the very beginning of the Seamen's Union movement on the Atlantic Coast, the problem of caring for and protecting members' baggage has always been a difficult one to solve.

In the beginning, since the original members were all homeless, a baggage room was necessary, in order to enable them to escape the crimping dens, where the possession of a sailor's bag constituted a first lien on his body, soul and wages.

When the original constitution of the Atlantic Coast Seamen's Union was revised, in November, 1900, special provision was made for the maintenance of baggage rooms, and baggagemasters were appointed at headquarters and most of the branches to have charge of the same. But members have always deposited their dunnage at the halls with the distinct under-

(By Laurence Todd)

U. S. Employers Arrogant

At the moment when Britain's workers are proving to British employers and the British government the folly of goading organized labor too far, the organized employers and their political allies in the United States are bringing to a climax their own campaign against the workers' standard of living.

The Railroad Labor Board, following a conference between President Harding and its chairman, has annulled the national agreement between the railroad employes and the railroad management, and has ordered the system federations and the companies to seek new agreements separately between now and the termination of the national agreement on July 1.

Reports are current here that the board will follow up with a decision that the employes in the shops and in the maintenance of way division shall take a cut of 15 per cent in wages, beginning May 1.

The companies are making great efforts to split off the transportation brotherhoods from the shop and maintenance and miscellaneous employes, in order that any strike caused by the attempt to crush the unions shall not be assisted by the running trades. The engineers, firemen, enginemen, trainmen, conductors and switchmen are being fairly smothered in fine words from the management, in the hope that the men will forget the lesson of 1916 and desert the majority of the railroad employes in their common battle. The spokesmen for the running trades, however, show no signs of having been hoodwinked by these tactics.

President Johnston of the Machinists points out that the cost in time and money of negotiating separately with 165 railroads of Class A, by the system federations, will be ruinously high, and that it will serve no useful purpose from the public standpoint. It will merely postpone the real settlement.

Glenn E. Plumb suggests that it is evirently the policy of the board or of the administration to lay down the rule of national unity of treatment for railroad capital and railroad rates, but local treatment for railroad labor.

President Noonan of the Electrical Workers remarked that it was strange that the board allowed only two and a half months for the making of the new and separate agreements as to rules and conditions, when more than six months were required to draft the national agreement, and even then less than 60 per cent of the proposed rules were agreed upon. He maintained that the Electrical Workers would not abandon the principle of national agreements, upon a basis of general basic rules nationally applied.

Future Action Uncertain

If the dissolution of the national agreement is followed by a cut of 15 per cent in shop and maintenance wages, will there be a strike?

One of the best-informed railroad labor men in the capital said today that the chance of a strike is rapidly diminishing. Seventy-five per cent of the shopmen and maintenance forces are already laid off, the shop work is being let to outside firms, bridge repairs are let to private contractors, and as traffic decreases the number and the degree of want among the unemployed become more serious. The unions must hold their position and their membership, so far as possible, even if they have to yield some minor concessions just now.

However, he added, the cost of operation will not be greatly reduced by a 15 per cent reduction in the rate of pay; the workers will be just that much less interested in their work.

Viewing the railroad situation from the outside, one is bound to recognize the temptation placed upon the organized railroad workers to slow up, when they believe a strike is being forced upon them by the organized alliance of big money and big politics, backed by the courts and the anti-labor press of the country. If the men stay at their jobs, with reduced pay and inferior conditions of bargaining with their employers, they will do so for reasons of strategy and not because they do not hotly resent the terms imposed upon them by their enemies.

Printing Trade Lockouts

There are abundant evidences of industrial war in other directions, this week. The approach of the inauguration of the forty-four-hour week in the allied printing trades, on May 1, has brought on a lockout of the Bookbinders in New York and Boston. The Master Bookbinders' Association in New York has posted "open shop" notices in its member plants, as the result of a provocative refusal to pay an arbitrated increase in wages for bindery women in one shop. The men employed there refused to work unless the award were accepted, and all were locked out.

A recent circular letter to locals from Walter N. Reddick, president of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, explains that the forty-four-hour week was offered to the union by the organized employers, who solemnly pledged themselves to make it effective May 1, 1921.

"All locals are directed," he says, "to confer with other printing trades unions with the view to having a uniform manner of approaching the subject. All of the organizations in the printing industry find themselves in the forty-four-hour campaign in an identical position, but it should be understood that strikes should not occur except with sanction to the local union from the executive council through the office of the international president." However, he specifies that "It matters not what pretext may be offered by the employing printer, the fact remains that they have executed a binding contract to deliver to the printing trades of America the forty-four-hour week by May 1, 1921, and we expect them to make good their contract."

Reddick warns the Bookbinders' locals that immediate and complete reports should be made to the international as to the manner in which every employer meets the issue, so that action in defense of the rights of the union may be duly planned and carried out.

Building Trades Affected

In the building trades the wage-cutting outbreak has rapidly spread during the week. Secretary Dobson of the Bricklayers' International has telegraphed to Secretary of Labor Davis, telling him of the wholesale wage reductions imposed by the contractors in violation of existing agreements, and in contempt of the rule of arbitration which has prevailed in the trade for the past twenty years. One of the most conservative and "safe and sane" of the labor bodies of the country, the Bricklayers find themselves fallen upon by the same "open shop" wolves as are trying to devour the radical unions in the garment trades.

Sailors Will Fight

Maritime workers are getting ready for a fight for their lives. The American Steamship Association, meeting the Marine Engineers' representatives in New York, have demanded a cut of 30 per cent in wages and the "open shop" rule. The Marine Engineers have rejected these demands and offer to tie up shipping on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts. Within a week the International Seamen's Union must meet the same demand. Intervention from the Government has failed to materialize. The Shipping Board, which owns four-sevenths of the ships, waits to accept the terms made between the two sides, or to line up with the shipowners in case of a strike.

Exploiters Seek Court Aid

To give a finishing touch to the situation, the anti-union employers are being secretly organized into a League for Industrial Rights, which waits for the Supreme Court to render a decision in the Golconda Coal Company case to the effect that any employer can collect damages from a labor union and its members for damage suffered because of the union's seeking to organize his employes. All members of the secret league of employers are to bring suits, after this decision is made, to seize the funds of labor unions, according to reports here. Having tied up the union funds in court, they will proceed with the campaign to starve organized labor into peonage.

Harding's Message Interpreted

President Harding's message to Congress is read by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce as a full endorsement of its slogan of "Business Uber Alles." The President, yesterday cordial toward labor, now is cold. He warns railroad labor that the public must be served more cheaply. He warns the country that our merchant marine must be run as cheaply as the ships of other countries. He insists upon a big navy, and he demands that expenditures in other parts of the administration be cut to the bone. This means, apparently, that the Labor Department will be curtailed in its work under pretense of national economy, while an expensive fight of the private shipowners to whip American seamen will be financed from the public treasury by the subsidy route.

Against this whole policy of reaction and oppression the protest of organized labor and the organized farmers was raised, in the conference held here this week by the people's Reconstruction League, which demands Government operation of railroads, heavy income and inheritance and excess profits taxes, a high standard of living for American producers, encouragement to cooperative production and trading, and the defeat of universal compulsory military training. Thirty labor and farmer organizations took part in the program, and joined in presenting their demands to Congress.

BROOMMAKERS CO-OPERATE

The city of Los Angeles is to have a co-operative broom factory, which will be 100 per cent union, with practically all the stock owned by trade unionists. It will be launched with the official sanction of the Central Labor Council.

Should this enterprise prove a success, in all probability the Central Council will go upon record as favoring co-operative institutions in every craft where the craft itself will take the initiative and guarantee a union shop.

The broommakers are thoroughly organized in Los Angeles, and are enthusiastic in their support of the proposed co-operative factory. They have come to the conclusion, as have many other organized wage earners, that so long as Labor continues to be content with wages, the profits of business, which far exceed wages, always will go into the pockets of the employers, who almost invariably use a part of their profits to keep wages down.

Advocates of Labor embarking in business on a co-operative basis say that in no other way can union-hating business men be more quickly brought to their senses.

It is believed union-labeled brooms made by a co-operative company will sweep the cobwebs from the eyes of Labor and enable it to see its own interests.

"Wall Street Control" Exposed

"The power of Wall street" is not fiction but grim fact, according to a 125,000-word document filed with the Railway Labor Board by W. Jett Lauck, economist for the railway trade unions.

Mr. Lauck names twelve New York financial institutions that control a majority of the country's important railroads and the country's basic raw materials. This is accomplished through one hundred directors of these banks, who have interlocked their interests in ninety-two Class 1 railroads, in twenty railroad equipment companies and twenty-four coal railroads and coal companies. Through non-banking directors this combine is still further interlocked.

"The evidence shows," says the survey, "that there is a capital combine consisting of the major banks, the railroads and the industries controlling basic materials, and that this combine has and exercises a power over the economic destiny of the United States. It shows that within the identical capitalist group lies the power to adjust or misadjust relative prices in a manner that will stimulate or suppress industrial activity.

"It points out that this focal capitalist group has deliberately maintained high prices of steel, coal, cement and other basic materials, and that the railroads financed by the same interests have refused to place the orders for plant maintenance or even the orders necessary to prevent plant and equipment deterioration.

"The exhibit shows that the greater factors in American industry—the railway equipment producers—all are closely bound together by intercapital relations and interlocking directories, coming to focus in the house of Morgan.

"The industrial paralysis, which has staggered America, is 'capital on strike against society.' And capital, national and international, organized and concentrated, takes the stand that the 'capital strike' shall go on until labor comes to its knees and consents to sweeping reductions of wages, and also consents to surrender its right to bargain collectively on a scale co-extensive with the organization of the employers."

It is shown that while agricultural basic raw materials have dropped in price, the combine has maintained prices for the mineral products, and that the combine controls the mineral products. It is also stated that "the combine is holding up the prices of steel and other railway supplies with a view of accentuating the depression and then persuading the public that the railways cannot agree with the equipment companies over prices," although the railways and equipment companies are controlled by the same combine.

Of the twelve New York banks that are in this combine, the Guaranty Trust Company leads with directorships in fifty railroads. The National City Bank is next with forty-eight directors.

The directors are named and the report states that a number of them "belong to the inner banking circle centering around the house of Morgan and the National City Bank."

ATLANTIC COAST AND GULF

standing that they did so at their own risk. While the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association always has and will exercise all reasonable care for the safety and protection of effects belonging to its members, it assumes no financial responsibility for any loss.

The constitution provides no insurance against such loss, and it surely is not covered by the Shipwreck Benefit, which distinctly refers only to loss by disaster at sea or on shipboard.

The baggage room is, in some respects, a source of mutual benefit, because it tends to keep the members together and enables them to get away quickly when a hurry call comes for a crew, and affords them considerable convenience in other ways as well.

But it is doubtful if the baggage room is any longer worth the trouble which its maintenance imposes upon the union and upon individual members as well.

The crimping system is a dead issue now, and we believe it the essence of prudence and good sense on the part of our members to take their baggage with them to their homes or lodgings whenever possible, and thereby minimize the possibility of loss by storing much baggage in one vault.

It is probable that we shall always have a baggage room, at least until most of our members marry and become independent, but, meanwhile, everyone should endeavor to reduce the expense and risk of maintaining it as much as possible.

We deeply sympathize with our many comrades in their personal losses and believe that everything possible will be done for them to relieve their destitution and enable them to get to sea again, but this unfortunate incident should be a lasting lesson to all concerned—that it is safest to take care of your own dunnage.

Labor News

The striking painters of San Francisco have been ordered back to work by the District Council of Painters.

At Scranton, Pa., a reduction of 20 per cent in wages in all building crafts, effective May 1, has been announced by the Builders' Exchange. About 10,000 men will be affected.

Aggressions of open-shop employers have forced a strike of all union longshoremen on the lower Columbia River, which affects shipping at Astoria, Rainier, St. Helens, and intermediate points. Several steamers are already tied up at these places.

The building trades in Chicago are threatened with a lockout April 30, unless the unions sign up for a 20 per cent cut for skilled, and a 30 per cent cut in wages of unskilled labor. The announcement was made by the builders April 21.

The Copper Queen, Calumet and Arizona Mining Companies have announced reductions of from twenty-five to sixty cents in daily wages of mine workers to become effective May 1. About 1500 men will be affected.

The headquarters of the I. W. W. at Chicago have informed Charles F. Clyne, United States District Attorney, that it has notified virtually all members affected by the Supreme Court's recent refusal to review their convitions and that they will start for Leavenworth immediately.

Several printing shops of Stockton, California, have declared an open shop. The employing firms had asked their employes if they would hold to their forty-four-hour week demand on May 1, and when answered in the affirmative the union employes were replaced by non-union help.

Those who guide the destinies of the Butte County Farm Bureau seem to be anxious to re-establish pre-war conditions of discontent amongst their labor forces. The meowing in the jungles has been stilled for some time past, so the Butte County farmers have decided that farm laborers are to receive as little as $12 per week of seventy-two hours' work.

The Alaska Codfish Company have decided not to send any of its vessels to the Behring sea this year. The company proposed a reduction in wages and lay to their fishermen approximating 45 per cent, which was rejected in a decided manner, the men feeling their opportunities are greater in any other industry with considerable less hardship.

Home work (sweat-shop system) is to cease in Rochester, N. Y. By agreement between the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and the Rochester Clothiers' Exchange, which comprises all large clothing factories in the city, work on garments now done in private homes will cease on May 1. The Rochester manufacturers claim to be the first in the country to take this step.

Wage reductions have been announced affecting approximately 2000 employes of mines and smelters in the Coeur d'Alene mining district of Idaho. The cut amounts to 50 cents per day for mine employes and 75 cents for smelter men. The reduction, which becomes effective May 1 will bring wages of miners to $4.75 to $4.75 a day, and those of smelter men from $4.50 to $4.25 per day.

You Want the Truth

This year there will be stirring times in the Nation. Under government censorship it is increasingly difficult for the average man to get the real meaning of the social and political movements of the day.

LA FOLLETTE'S MAGAZINE

will be specially represented at Washington and will analyze and present the news from the capital truthfully and fairly. Senator La Follette is making a real fight to lift some of the tax burdens from the common people and place them where they belong — on excess profits, war profits and surplus fortunes and incomes. Because of this he is being attacked more bitterly than any other man in public life.

Send in your order today.

Domestic and Naval

The New York State legislature has passed a bill which makes it a misdemeanor for landlords to discriminate against tenants with children.

A bill has been introduced at the opening of Congress, which provides for repeal of Panama Canal tolls for vessels flying the American flag. The measure will be vigorously pushed by its adherents.

Profiteering prosecutions brought against the "Big Five" meat packers have been dismissed by a Federal judge in New York, following the action of the Supreme Court holding the Lever Act unconstitutional.

A new halicopter, an aeroplane that will rise directly from the ground, has been invented, and is about to be patented in America, by T. Siborsky, the well-known Russian engineer and aviator and the builder of the famous Russian ninety-passenger aeroplane, "Hia Murometz."

Peking, China, is not the only place where overcrowding prevails. Edward Ambrose Brown, chief camp inspcetor of the State Housing and Immigration Commission, recently reported an asparagus camp near Stockton, Cal., in which twenty-five adults and sixty-six children were housed in one small building.

What is declared to be the largest shipment of cotton to Germany since 1914 is aboard the British steamer "Highmead," which cleared from Galveston, Texas, last week for Bremen. The ship's manifest shows 16,800 bales and eighty-one cases of relief goods aboard. There are hundreds of American-owned vessels of the Shipping Board fleet resting on the mud flats that could have carried this large cargo of American products.

The United States has asked the Italian Government to lend to America the services of an engineer skilled in the construction of semi-rigid dirigible airships, and several other men to aid in the building in the United States of craft like the Roma, the big dirigible purchased from Italy. The Italian Government has granted the request, and the Italian engineer, Celestine Usuelli, designer of the Roma, will supply plans and instructions for the proposed American craft.

As an additional safety device for handling a vessel at the dock or in close quarters, an indicator showing whether the engines of a vessel are running ahead or astern, has been invented by Thomas G. Plant, manager of McCormick & McPherson and former assistant district director of operations of the Shipping Board, and Samuel Mills, marine superintendent of McCormick & McPherson. The device, for which patent has been applied, is called the Plant-Mills Direction Indicator. The apparatus is connected to the main propellor shaft, and electric wires register the engines movements on the bridge, in front of the navigating officer. The number of revolutions is shown, with a green light indicating that the engines are running ahead, and a red light that they are running astern. The dial is dark when the engines are not running, and on long voyages the lights can be switched off at the bridge. The first installations of the invention will be on the new Matson freighters "Manulani" and "Manukai."

Domestic and Naval

The Louisana Constitutional convention recently adopted a clause prohibiting Japanese ownership of property in that State.

Starvation menaces 26,000 persons in the coal fields of Northern Alabama, the Salvation Army told Governor Kilby of that State.

Hereafter stowaways from foreign ports will receive a hearing before a special board with the privilege of appeal as recently announced by the Secretary of Labor.

Representatives of Nebraska farm organizations recently met at Omaha and decided to form one union May 6 to work for mutual co-operation. A committee to perfect the plan will meet on that date.

After becoming unmanagable in a stormy sea off Point Arena, the steam schooner "Catherine" recently sent distress signals broadcast, but was able to make Santa Cruz under her own power. The little steamer reported the loss of two blades from her propeller.

Built by the Government for operation by the Pacific Coast Guard Service to furnish aid in case of marine disaster, and to curb the smuggling of liquor, the big cutter "Haida" has been launched at the Union Construction Company's yard, in Oakland. The new cutter will carry a crew of 120 men, and will be equipped with six three-pounders.

A new record for net tonnage passing through the Panama Canal, and tolls earned was established in March. The aggregate net tonnage for March was 1,112,818 as compared with 1,094,323 for January and the tolls in March amounted to $1,105,-529, about $10,000 more than in January.

The Cunard Line anticipate large passenger bookings in European sailings. Five of the large ships, including the "Berengaria," formerly the "Imperator," will be supplemented by a fleet of smaller vessels. Construction work on two new ships, the "Scythia" and "Tyrrhenia," is being rushed in order to have them ready for the summer traffic.

A contract for installing two kilowatt, five hundred cycle radio sets on four new tankers under construction for the Standard Oil Company, has been awarded to the Radio Corporation of America. The vessels to be equipped are the tank-motor-ship "F. H. Hillman," 15,000 deadweight tons, building at the yards of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation; the tank motor-ship "H. T. Harper," 4750 deadweight tons, building at the Moore shipyards; the "H. M. Stroey" and the "W. S. Rheems."

Charges that the Shipping Board freighter "West Hartland" was "entirely to blame" for the collision in which she rammed and sunk the steamer "Governor" with the loss of eight lives on the morning of April 1, are contained in a libel memorandum filed with United States District Attorney Robert C. Saunders by counsel for the Aubrey Becker Sales Company, a Colorado corporation. The libel alleges that the collision was due to wilful violation of article 27 of the navigation regulations by officers of the "West Hartland," in that they "failed to take due prudent and timely measures to avoid the collision." The libel is directed against the United States, the United States Shipping Board, the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the steamer "West Hartland."

Repatriation of prisoners taken during the conflict between Bolshevik Russia and Poland has been commenced by the two governments.

France has decided to grant amnesty to political prisoners. The general amnesty bill, covering offenses committed during the war, has been passed by the chamber. The vote was 528 for the measure to 14 against it.

Maxim Litvinhoff, Soviet representative at Reval, recently declared that despite the fact there was no formal trade agreement between the United States and Soviet Russia, at least one American steamer arrived at Reval every week with goods for Russia.

While the spectre of starvation stalks through all the countries of Europe, and unemployment grips the masses of the world, the mad whirl of debauchery goes merrily on in "Gay Paree." Americans with families or consorts are reported to be well represented at the races and gambling palaces.

Further hostilities appear to be brewing in the Balkans. The Greeks are maintaining a blockade of the Black Sea. The Greek destroyer "Jerax," recently seized and took to Piraeus a Bulgarian steamer. Bulgaria has protested. The Turkish nationalists are reported to be placing orders for tents, rifles, artillery and airplanes in Russia.

The disabled United States Shipping Board steamer "Wenatchee," with Major General Leonard Wood and other prominent passengers on board, in its maiden trip from the United States, is being towed to Yokohama by the Admiral Line freighter "Edmore," according to wireless advices. The "Edmore" picked up the "Wenatchee" 115 miles out of Yokohama.

What has happened to the movement in Russia, which our American press informed us was shortly to sweep the soviet form of government off the earth? Moscow reports show that the Communists have secured a majority over all of 857 in the elections to the Moscow Soviet. The final results, announced recently, showed: Communists, 1027; non-party delegates, 157; scattering, 11.

Reports from Stockholm, dated April 23, state that considerable quantities of Russian gold have been smelted into rubles and other gold articles by the Swedish mint lately. Seventy tons and most of this smelted gold, according to the mint director, has been sent to the United States in payment for goods. The United States is getting Soviet gold anyhow.

A shipment of naval shipbuilding material has reached Kobe from England on board the steamer "Inabu Maru" and will be used for the carrying on of Japan's naval projects. The cargo amounts to 3000 tons, including heavy boilers and machinery. During the war Japan bought from England some 120,000 tons of shipbuilding material and it is understood that immediately after the war a similar order was placed. According to officers of Japanese merchantmen, Japan has purchased submarines in Germany and is shipping them to the Far East in parts.

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

THE SEAMEN'S JOURNAL

FOR THE SEAFARING PEOPLE OF THE WORLD.

A Journal of Seamen, by Seamen, for Seamen. Our Aim: The Brotherhood of the Sea. Our Motto: Justice by Organization

VOL. XXXIV, No. 35. SAN FRANCISCO, WEDNESDAY, MAY 4, 1921. Whole No. 1751.

ALASKA FISHERMEN'S CONTRACT

Conditions and Compensation Provisions for Season of 1921

Secretary Peter E. Olsen has forwarded to the Journal a copy of the agreement entered into between the Alaska Salmon Packing Companies and the Alaska Fishermen's Union for the coming season of 1921. The agreement, which includes seamen, fishermen, beachmen, trapmen, is as follows:

AGREEMENT

Seamen, Fishermen, Beachmen, Trapmen

THIS AGREEMENT attached to and made a part of the shipping articles between ——————————, a corporation, the party of the first part, and hereinafter referred to as——————————, and each of the men signing the articles as party of the second part, WITNESSETH:

Section 1. The parties of the second part hereby engage in the services of said—————— and agree and promise for the consideration hereinafter mentioned to give their whole time and energy to the business and interests of said—————— and to work day or night (Sundays and holidays not excepted), according to the lawful orders of the captain, superintendent or whoever may be in charge; that they will during the time that they shall remain in the employ of said——————work and labor in the capacity of

SEAMEN, FISHERMEN, BEACHMEN, TRAPMEN.

Also to work on boats, lighters, vessels and in canneries, salteries and/or in any other capacity, up and down, and at and about the cannery or salting station assigned to, as per specifications of this agreement, and for the compensation herein provided.

Sec. 2. (a) Before and after the fishing season the following conditions shall apply: Forty-eight (48) hours shall constitute a week's work, time figured from Monday morning six o'clock until Saturday evening six o'clock in each week, provided, however, that at no time shall any men be compelled to work more than eleven (11) hours within each twenty-four (24) hours. If less than forty-eight (48) hours have been worked by any man between Monday six a. m. and Saturday six p. m., he shall not have to make up this time. Any man working over forty-eight (48) hours during a week or over eleven (11) hours during twenty-four (24) hours shall receive extra compensation at the rate of Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour for each excess hour so worked. In weeks containing a holiday, forty hours shall constitute a week's work. Before and after the fishing season any man working between the hours of six p. m. Saturday and six o'clock Monday morning shall be paid extra compensation for such work at the rate of Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour. During this time, and on holidays, men sent aboard or taken ashore shall receive extra compensation at Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour for time of transfer, except on being taken ashore at time of arrival or taken aboard at time of departure.

(b) Except during the fishing season, work done on Decoration Day and Labor Day shall be paid for at the rate of 75 cents per man per hour.

(c) In Alaska the forty-eight (48) hour week's work shall not apply to men selected as ships' watchmen; these watchmen, however, shall during this time have one night off within each week unless Five Dollars ($5.00) is paid therefor.

(d) Men must have their working time entered daily in their time books.

(e) For men working ashore actual working time to be credited. For men not working ashore actual working time and time in transfer to and from vessel to be credited. No time to be credited on being taken ashore at time of arrival or taken aboard at time of departure.

(f) For refusal to work each man shall pay the——————Five Dollars ($5.00) for every day refused.

(g) The beginning and the ending of the fishing season to be determined by the superintendent.

Sec. 3. (a) No seamen, fishmen, beachmen or trapmen, shall be compelled to work as cooks or waiters (except in emergencies caused by sickness or accident), or to work in fireroom or engine-room of steamers other than filling coal bunkers, or to do any painting, or to work at any other cannery than the one to which they are assigned, except as provided by Section 7, or to work building new canneries, salting stations, houses, lighters, boats or permanent ways, or wharves or extensions to same, or telephone or telegraph lines, or painting, or handling lumber or other construction materials for new canneries, salting stations, houses or for shipbuilding purposes, or handling cargo or materials from or to other parties, or handling cargo, machinery or other material for a cannery or salting station not in operation, unless extra compensation is paid therefor.

(b) Before and after the fishing season men shall not be required to work as mechanics in canneries or make boxes, lacquer and label cans, or pile cans unless extra compensation is paid therefor.

(c) Men put to work on telegraph or telephone lines shall be remunerated for extra wear of their oil skins and rubber boots in addition to extra compensation and all other earnings.

(d) Extra compensation shall be paid for all work above specified under this section at the rate of Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour. Money so earned to be equally divided among all fishermen, beachmen and trapmen at the cannery or salting station to which men doing such work are assigned, with the exception of hours worked by these men over eight (8) hours within each twenty-four (24) hours, which extra earning shall be paid to the individual men doing such work at the rate of Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour.

(e) In cases of emergency such as safety of ship's or company's property being in danger, such work shall be done at any and all times without extra compensation.

(f) No extra compensation shall be paid for repair work. Painting shall not be considered repair work. Coaling any of the company's steamers shall not be considered extra work and no extra compensation shall be paid therefor except as provided in Section 2.

Sec. 4. (a) The time of service shall be from the date of sailing from until return to San Francisco, all on vessels to be designated by the—————— except in case of shipwreck or necessitated abandonment of the ship through stress of weather or lawful discharge, then all wages shall cease at the date of such casualty or discharge, except for such men as are paid for the run. If such disaster occurs before or after vessel has arrived at its destination in Alaska, these men shall receive the full run money.

(b) All shipwrecked men transferred to another vessel shall continue to work in accordance with these articles on any vessel to which they may be assigned.

(c) For the homeward voyage, the —————— to have the right, in case of emergency, to transfer men from one vessel to another assigned to same station.

Sec. 5. COMPENSATION.

GILL NET FISHERMEN. (a) Each gill net fisherman shall receive in addition to the wages of ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY DOLLARS ($150.00) for the run and all other moneys earned under this agreement, TWENTY CENTS (20c) for each King Salmon, THREE AND ONE-HALF CENTS (3½c) for each Red or Coho Salmon, ONE AND ONE-HALF CENTS (1½c) for each Chum or Dog Salmon, and THREE-QUARTERS OF ONE CENT (¾c) for each Pink Salmon, caught and delivered to the——————

(b) The —————— shall not be compelled to take any Dog or Pink Salmon, but if received they are to be paid for at above rates.

(c) Fishermen put to cleaning or repickling salmon after fishing season shall be paid extra compensation at the rate of SIX DOLLARS ($6.00) per day per man. Money so earned to be divided equally among all the fishermen, beachmen and trapmen attached to the cannery.

(d) Fishing boats and crews ordered transferred to fish at another station than the one originally attached to shall be selected by lot and shall receive for loss of time in transfer credit for average catch during such transfer of boats remaining at the respective canneries. Before and after fishing season crews of these boats shall work at the cannery they were originally assigned to. No fishing to be done on any fishing grounds closed by the United States Government.

LIMIT. (e) Limit 1,200 salmon per day.

BEACHMEN AND TRAPMEN. (f) Beachmen and trapmen in any part of Bristol Bay shall receive in addition to the wages of ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY DOLLARS ($150.00) for the run and all other earnings as provided by this agreement, compensation equal to the average amount paid for salmon to all gill net fishermen at the same station.

(g) All canneries operated by one company on the same bay or river shall be considered as the same station.

(h) For every line of canning machinery for tall cans operated in Bristol Bay canneries, three beachmen shall be employed exclusive of men on traps, steamers and launches. Beachmen in excess of this number may be transferred to other work.

(i) The number of filling machines to be operated at the respective stations shall be specified in this agreement.

(j) Beachmen and trapmen shall be assigned to their stations and fishermen shall be assigned to their respective canneries at the time of signing this agreement.

(k) Fishermen, beachmen and trapmen hired in Alaska shall commence work with the arrival of the first sailing vessel and cease work with the departure of the last sailing vessel of their respective stations and shall each receive in place of run money the sum of SEVENTY-FIVE DOLLARS ($75.00), together with all other compensation as provided for fishermen, beachmen and trapmen in this agreement.

(l) Fishermen, beachmen and trapmen, other than natives, hired in Alaska and not performing such work before and after the fishing season, shall not receive said sum of SEVENTY-FIVE DOLLARS ($75.00); credit shall be given to the fishermen, beachmen and trapmen at the respective stations for all such sums of SEVENTY-FIVE DOLLARS ($75.00) not so paid and it shall be shared equally among them.

(m) Men remaining in Alaska to be paid after last vessel is loaded. Men on regular annual or monthly pay not to be included.

(n) Should any fishermen, beachmen or trapmen be detained at any of the Bristol Bay stations after August 31, extra compensation shall be paid them at the rate of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS ($100.00) per month for the time of such detention, including day of sailing. During such delay after August 31, eight hours within each twenty-four hours shall constitute a week day's work. During such delay after August 31 work done on week days over eight hours within each twenty-four hours and work done on Sundays and Labor Day shall be paid at the rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS (75c) per hour to each man so working.

(o) Should any salmon be taken from traps more than twenty-four hours after the superintendent of the station has ordered the gill net fishing season ended, credit at the price under this agreement shall be given to all fishermen, beachmen and trapmen at the respective stations and be shared equally among them.

(p) For salmon transferred to Nushagak, Kvichak, Naknek, Egegak or Ugasik from other stations, or purchased from other companies, all fishermen, beachmen and trapmen employed at the station where such salmon are received shall share alike in an extra compensation equal to fifty per cent of the price paid for such transferred salmon where caught. No such extra compensation shall be paid for salmon caught by boats transferred to another station. All red salmon caught by fishermen at stations receiving such transferred fish shall be accepted in preference to salmon sent from other stations. Boats shall not be placed on limit while salmon are bought from other companies.

(q) Extra compensation at the rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS (75c) per ton shall be paid for all gravel or rock landed from vessels. Money so earned to be equally divided among all fishermen, beachmen and trapmen at the cannery or salting station to which men doing such work are assigned, including the crew of the vessel discharging gravel or rock.

(r) The basis of compensation of wages if paid by the case shall be a case of salmon containing forty-eight (48) one pound tall cans. For wage purposes, if any salmon are packed in half pound cans three cases of forty-eight (48) half pound cans each to be computed as [illegible] forty-eight (48) one pound tall cans, and three cases of ninety-six (96) half pound cans each as four cases of forty-eight (48) one pound tall cans. If salmon are salted, each barrel of salmon is to be computed as four cases and each half barrel as two cases of forty-eight (48) one pound tall cans. Regular red salmon prices shall be paid for any and all [illegible] that may be put up for the company in cans or barrels, dried, smoked or salted.

(s) The [illegible] men shall receive the compensation set opposite their respective names on the [illegible].

(t) Men with family dependent upon him shall be allowed no less than SEVENTY-FIVE DOLLARS ($75.00) per month payable on the first of each month. Payments to commence on May 1.

(u) All wages earned to be payable in San Francisco after the return of the expedition, except the sum of TEN DOLLARS ($10.00) which is to be paid on the homeward voyage to each man signing this agreement.

(v) The other men shall receive the compensation set opposite their respective names on the [illegible]. All moneys earned to be payable in San Francisco after the return of the expedition, except the sum of Ten Dollars ($10.00) which is to be paid to each man signing this agreement on the homeward voyage.

Sec. 6. (a) Men not on monthly or season's wages shall be paid in addition to full run money and all other earnings, extra compensation at regular coasting rates and conditions if vessel they sail on from home port to Alaska calls for cargo on the up trip at any port not in Alaska, the extra time to be computed from date of departure from home port until departure from such intermediate port, both dates included.

(b) Men not on monthly or season's wages returning on vessels leaving canneries for home port via any intermediate port shall be paid in addition to full run money and other earnings, coasting rates and conditions from date of leaving canneries until date of leaving such intermediate port, both dates included.

(c) Men arriving from Alaska on..... vessels at a port of destination other than San Francisco, shall receive at that destination, in addition to their agreed pay, first-class transportation to San Francisco, or the equivalent thereof in money and Two and 50/100 Dollars ($2.50) per day for maintenance while waiting for transportation.

(d) Men hired by Seattle, Astoria or Portland companies in San Francisco, or vice versa, shall receive first-class transportation to port of shipping and return, and Two and 50/100 Dollars ($2.50) per day maintenance for time detained at port of shipping. Such transportation shall not be required to be furnished to men who have shipped in the same United States Customs District as the port of destination.

(e) Each man signing under this agreement at home port shall receive additional compensation at the rate of Two and 50/100 Dollars ($2.50) per day for each day delayed in home port if the vessel on which he sails is delayed more than two days after the date he is ordered on board, provided that this additional compensation shall not be paid if the delay is caused by order of the Government, stress of weather or action of men signing under this agreement. Notice of sailing dates to be furnished to the Secretary or agent of the Alaska Fishermen's Union in writing.

(f) If any man signing under this agreement and discharged before sailing without fault on his part justifying such discharge, and without his consent, shall receive One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) as compensation in full to be paid within forty-eight (48) hours after discharge.

Sec. 7. (a) In case of permanent stoppage of salmon canning at the cannery, by reason of inevitable accident or casualty during the fishing season, and before three-quarters of the pack has been made, according to the Chinese contract guarantee, such men as are not transferred to another cannery shall then receive in addition to percentages earned, full run money and monthly wages then earned, One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) per month from time of such stoppage or destruction of cannery until return to home port.

(b) If three-quarters of the pack has been made according to the Chinese contract guarantee, the men who are not transferred to another cannery shall continue to do such work in accordance with reading of Sections 2 and 3 as the superintendent may direct, for not over twenty-one (21) days from the date that cannery operations cease without extra compensation; but if retained longer than twenty-one (21) days they shall receive, in addition to percentages earned and full run money, or monthly wages then earned, wages at the rate of One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) per month from time of expiration of the twenty-one (21) days until return to home port. Eight (8) hours within each twenty-four (24) hours to constitute a day's work. Extra time worked to be paid at the rate of Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour to each man so working.

(c) If men are transferred to fish at other canneries, men retained at the destroyed cannery shall, in this case, receive average of boat's catch by men so transferred.

(d) Men transferred to work at another cannery shall receive in addition to all monies then earned, percentages and conditions prevailing at the cannery to which they are so transferred.

(e) Each cannery shall be supplied with material sufficient for twenty-two thousand cases of forty-eight (48) one pound cans, or the equivalent, for every line of canning machinery for tall cans operated. Except in case of loss of material, wholly or in part through shipwreck or otherwise, fishermen, beachmen and trapmen shall be paid at the regular ratio of pay prevailing at such cannery for the amount of any shortage, provided, however, that the material on hand has been used up in canning before the run of salmon ceases.

Sec. 8. (a) On sailing vessels there shall be deducted from the run money of each fisherman, headsman or trapman not able to both steer and go aloft, the sum of Twenty Dollars ($20.00) on the outward voyage to Alaska and Ten Dollars ($10.00) on the homeward voyage from Alaska. MEN NOT ABLE TO BOTH STEER AND GO ALOFT SHALL NOT BE PLACED ON THE LOOKOUT, BUT SHALL STAND THEIR RESPECTIVE WATCHES AND DO SUCH OTHER WORK AS THEY MAY BE ABLE TO DO IN ACCORDANCE WITH SECTIONS 9 AND 10, provided that no deductions shall be made from the earnings of netmen, watchmen, lamp-trimmers or water-tenders, and further provided that in no instance shall there be more than one lamp-trimmer, three water-tenders and three watchmen. Lamp-trimmers and water-tenders to be non-sailors if available. From every twelve gill-net fishermen aboard such vessel, one man may be detailed to work on nets. On the homeward voyage netmen not able to steer or go aloft shall do such work as they may be able to do in accordance with Section 10. All money deducted on a voyage of a sailing vessel shall be equally divided among the following men aboard,—the mates of the vessel (if such mates have signed as fishermen, beachmen, or trapmen in addition to other services), and all fishermen, beachmen and trapmen able to steer and go aloft, INCLUDING NETMEN. Watchmen, lamp-trimmers and water-tenders shall not share in money so deducted. In all sailing vessels carrying cannery crews, the master of the vessel shall assure himself that a sufficient number of sailors be assigned to his vessel for three watches.

(b) Men not steering or going aloft on outward voyage shall not steer or go aloft on return voyage.

(c) All men assigned to steamers shall each receive full run money.

(d) For the outward voyage of sailing vessels having accommodations for two watches only, the men shall be paid Twenty-five Dollars ($25.00) each in addition to all other earnings. For the homeward voyage paragraph (a) of this section shall apply.

(e) On Bristol Bay vessels there shall be selected a sufficient number of men to discharge and load the vessels, these men to do such work in any Bristol Bay port, but they shall be required to do this work on their respective vessels only in accordance with Sections 2, 3 and 9, except on vessels carrying two watches only the superintendent may put additional men on such vessels while discharging and loading. On all vessels with destinations other than Bristol Bay ports all men signing under this agreement shall discharge and load cargo. In all vessels, except steamers and schooners, there shall be no less than eight men working in the hold during the actual time of discharging and loading.

Sec. 9. (a) Men who stay on vessels while discharging and loading agree to work all cargo to or from any lighters, steamers, vessels or canneries belonging to the.....; also to moor and clean ship, bend and unbend sails and prepare hold for cargo in accordance with Sections 2 and 3, but all lightering shall be done by the crew of the cannery to which cargo is consigned.

(b) Any man put to work scraping sailing vessels on the outside shall be paid extra compensation for such work at the rate of Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour per man. Extra money so earned to be paid the man doing such work.

Sec. 10. After vessels leave Alaska for San Francisco all men shall clean ship and scrape and oil down masts and booms when ordered. Men shall not be required to clean quarters of Orientals.

Sec. 11. Each boat used for gill-net fishing shall be equipped with tent, pump, bailer, one double and three single blocks, two water breakers of not less than four gallons capacity each, and one oil pressure stove, one oil can, one piece of canvas to roll bedding in and two life preservers. Boat and all equipment to be returned at the end of the season to cannery in good order. Articles missing to be paid for by boat's crew, except lost by unavoidable accident.

Sec. 12. (a) At the time of signing these articles gill-net fishermen shall be given the numbers of their respective boats.

(b) All gill-nets shall be numbered and selected by lot before fishing begins.

(c) After gill-net men have selected their fishing partners, the captains shall remain in their respective boats for the season, and no changes in boat pullers can be made except by the mutual consent of the men making the changes.

(d) If any man is incapacitated for gill-net fishing on account of illness or accident, he shall, upon recovering, be given the privilege of returning to his original boat.

(e) If any gill net fisherman loses his partner through sickness or accident, or by partner leaving the boat, and is unable to find another partner, the superintendent may select a new partner for him. If such partner be unobtainable the fisherman so left alone shall be placed to work until a fishing partner is secured. While not fishing such man shall receive credit for the average catch of boats fishing for his respective cannery or limit when boats are on the limit.

(f) A gill-net fisherman refusing to go fishing or work otherwise shall be considered as having quit the employment of the company, and shall be paid in accordance with Section 18

Union Teachers Show Grit

School teachers in the City of Memphis, Tenn., are organized, which accounts for them standing up as Americans, rather than accept the word of some politician who poses as an "educator."

The modern teacher was shown in action at the meeting of the West Tennessee Teachers' Association, which is the usual combination of county superintendents and other office-holders, who permit teachers to be present and act as stage scenery at their annual confabs. This has been the rule, but at the last conference of the association the union teachers abandoned their "yes-yes" policy to the dismay of their "rulers."

The teachers smashed the slate for officers and elected as president Dr. Austin P. Finley, one of the strongest men in the faculty of the West Tennessee Normal School.

The teachers also put up a stiff fight against a resolution passed last year in which affiliation with the trade union movement was condemned. The resolution was rescinded, but not before the biggest kind of a row was staged.

One of the teachers writes: "If you have never witnessed an event of this sort or have never seen a group of higher-ups explode when mere privates take the floor, just try it some time in your own State convention. The scene can better be imagined than described."

Operating the Blacklist

Coal miners and their families in Alabama are starving because of the blacklisting policy of coal owners.

This condition is the culmination of a strike that was forced on the miners several months ago. At their solicitation, the United Mine Workers of America came to their aid and spent several hundred thousand dollars in this movement to compel the coal owners to pay a living wage. Troops were put into the strike zone, Chambers of Commerce denounced officers of the Miners' Union, and the public press and every other influence that the coal owners could muster was lined up against the workers. It was finally agreed to leave the matter in the hands of Governor Kilby for settlement and the strike was declared off. The Governor's award gave the miners nothing, while legalizing the blacklist if the coal owners were so inclined.

The hint was quickly acted upon and hundreds of miners have been refused work, while their families are in actual want.

The Governor gives notice that he can do nothing, and those influences that screamed their friendship for the miners during the strike now ignore them.

Officers of the State Federation of Labor have voted $500 to relieve the miners until a call can be issued to every affiliate for weekly contributions. The appeal will also be issued to trade union sympathizers.

Governor Kilby is being denounced without stint for his part in the strike settlement, and it is declared that he had it within his power to insist that the public welfare demanded harmony in the coal industry, and that the coal owners should improve conditions.

Steel and Coal Blamed

Profiteering, chiefly in coal and steel products, was held responsible for a large part of the financial difficulties of American railroads in an exhibit prepared by W. Jett Lauck, economist, and filed by the railway shop unions with the Railway Labor Board.

It is stated that "a conservative estimate of what this profiteering cost the railroads from 1916 to 1919 is $75,000,000 a year in coal bills and $200,000,000 for steel and iron products, including equipment and repairs for locomotives and car companies.

"The railroads expended for coal and other materials and supplies in 1920 about $2,000,000,000. According to figures published by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, there was, up to February, 1921, a decline of 38½ per cent in average wholesale prices of all commodities, although the decrease in the cost of living in the same period was less than 10 per cent."

The exhibit shows that the net income of eighteen steel companies averaged $337,000,000 a year during 1916-1918, as against $74,450,000 a year during 1912-1914.

The war profits of seven railroad equipment concerns were nearly two and one-half times as large as in pre-war times. The New York Air Brake Company increased its profits from an average of $622,013, or 6.2 per cent, in pre-war years, to an average of $4,053,000, or more than 40 per cent for the years 1916-1918.

Official Doesn't Know

At a hearing in Philadelphia, April 30, before a representative of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Samuel Rea, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, said he didn't know the difference between repair costs of his company and the Baldwin Locomotive Works.

When the railroad official's attention was called to a newspaper statement by him that repairs cost less when done by private concerns, he said the statement was prepared by the railroad's publicity agents.

Alien Bill Passed

The House of Representatives, April 30, passed the immigration bill on a vive voce vote. Under the proposed Act the number of aliens of any one nationality admitted during the next year will be 3 per cent of foreign-born persons of such nationality residing in the United States according to the 1910 census.

The bill is practically the same as that passed by the last Congress and vetoed by President Wilson.

World's Workers

Observance of May Day throughout Italy was accompanied by clashes between Communists and Nationalists. Several were killed and many arrests made.

Employes of the entire Guatemala railway system have been ordered to strike as a result of the appointment of Juan Machado as station agent at Puerto Barrios.

As a sequel to the burning of the labor headquarters in Turin by Fascisti, Turin Socialists occupied a number of the factories there, according to messages from Rome.

At Winnipeg the Joint Council of Industry has issued a report reducing the pay of bricklayers to $1.15 per hour and carpenters to 90 cents per hour for the year ending April 30, 1922.

Operations of the Price Bros.' paper mills at Kanagami, Canada, have been suspended and 1600 hands are out of work, as the result of a strike in opposition to anticipated wage cuts.

In Great Britain the National Union of Railwaymen has instructed its members not to handle coal from colliery sidings or from overseas. Coal for hospital and household use and for public utilities purposes will not come under the embargo.

Unemployment in England is increasing at "an alarming rate." In Birmingham more than 100,000 persons are idle, an increase of eight thousand per week during the last three weeks. An unprecedented volume of German goods is being dumped upon the British market.

Latest reports from London show that negotiations for the settlement of the coal strike having become deadlocked through the rejection of the Government's temporary subsidy offer by the representatives of the miners. The three parties to the dispute, miners, owners and the Government, have once more returned to their respective camps. The members of the miners' executive board scattered to the coal fields, apparently without expectation of any early adjustment of the difficulty.

Recent advices show that over one million tons of shipping is tied up in Norway on account of the opposition of the maritime unions to an attempted cut in their wages. The attack on the Norwegian seamen was timed in conformity with the ultimatums submitted by shipowners of Great Britain and the United States. Norwegian shipowners are reported to be closely watching the progress of events as they relate to the controversies between maritime unions and shipowners on this side of the Atlantic.

The port workers of Uruguay are giving their unqualified support to their fellow-workers in Argentine. Late reports show that the United [illegible] Shipping Board steamer "Acolus," which arrived at Montevideo last week, has been boycotted by the ship repair workers' union of that port. The boycott was placed at request of the Port Workers' Union of Buenos Aires which has kept the steamer "Martha Washington" of the same line (Munson Line) tied up at the latter port for several weeks. Each succeeding day exemplifies the solidarity of the workers in our South and Central American Republics.

The Pacific Mail steamer "Point Bonita" will leave for Baltimore and way ports on May 15. The vessel is at present tied up at the Moore shipyards for repairs.

The Williams liner "Willholo," 10,560 tons, the largest vessel ever entering Gray's Harbor, has been safely docked at the Hullrest mill. The vessel will load 2,200,000 feet of lumber.

With California products filling the holds to the plimsell marks, the motor-ship "Asia" and the motor-ship "Indien" of the East Asiatic Company sailed from San Francisco April 30 for Hamburg and Scandinavian ports.

Three thousand tons of relief supplies for Armenia are to be loaded at San Francisco and Puget Sound for Constantinople by the steamer "Esther Dollar," now on the berth at New York in the Robert Dollar 'round-the-world service.

The "Manulani," a 14,000-ton freighter, built by the Moore Shipbuilding Company for the Matson Navigation Company, is considered by a number of shipping men the finest finished freighter ever built in this country.

Eleven ocean steamers departed from Portland on April 30 in a rush to be under way before Admiral Benson's ultimatum slashing mariners' wages went into effect. The vessels signed under the old agreement, and it is considered the record day for departures from that port.

K. I. Matsukata, president of the International Steamship Company of Japan, states that Japan's shipbuilding industry is at a standstill on account of the slump in the freight offerings of the world and numerous contracts for tonnage have been allowed to lag or be completed without being accepted.

With the inducement that graduate students of the United States Shipping Board School of Engineering rise rapidly to the ranks of marine engineers, D. W. Dickie, in charge of the school, announces that there are several openings awaiting men desirous of becoming engineers in the school.

The steam-schooner "Fred W. Fenwick" has been purchased for $150,000 from her Norwegian owners. This price is demonstative of the drop in tonnage prices during the past eighteen months. The "Fenwick" was built in San Francisco during the war, and is of steel construction, of 3000 deadweight tons. Her arrival to her new owners is scheduled for June.

Portland customs-house figures show wheat shipments for April amount to 1,246,132 bushels, with a valuation of $1,654,260. Flour shipments amounted to 72,680 barrels valued at $148,598. Lumber shipments to the Orient went better than five million feet in parcel lots, no full cargoes being dispatched. The value of the lumber is placed at $100,568. Intercoastal shipments of wheat and flour amounted to approximately eleven thousand tons.

Officials of the E. K. Wood Lumber Company say that they have received no report, as yet, concerning the safety of the schooner "Defiance" en route from Gray's Harbor, December 21 for Callao. The vessel with a shipment of 600,000 feet of lumber for delivery to the Peruvian port has never been reported. The owners, however, declare that they are not unusually worried over the arrival of the vessel, as weather reports received here indicate that the weather conditions have been contrary.

Officials of Balfour, Guthrie & Co. state that an increase is noticeable in British exports to this country. The steamer "Guthrie," which is operated by the company, is said to have a consignment of general merchandise from England larger than any she has brought in some time. Exports from the Pacific Coast to Great Britain are also growing, the "Rotarian" having sailed for Liverpool Thursday with her hold full. The "Rotarian" put in at San Francisco to load six hundred tons of canned goods.

The steam schooner "Alliance" has been sold at San Francisco to satisfy certain claims against the vessel which follow the withdrawal of the Gulf Mail Steamship Company from the Mexican trade. The "Alliance," of 431 tons net register and 164 feet long and thirty-five feet beam, was built in Eureka in 1897. Virtually every port from Sitka, Alsaka, to the lower west coast of Mexico, knows the "Alliance," as the craft during her long career has been in operation mostly in the coastwise trade of the Pacific Coast.

For the purpose of providing adequate and safe berthing for the convenience of vessels in the operation of the quarantine and customs service at San Francisco, a proposal has been advanced by the State Harbor Board that the present wharf at the foot of Hyde street be extended. The Government boats at Meiggs wharf have been frequently compelled to seek other piers to tie up to while waiting for foreign vessels to anchor off the quarantine station because of the numerous vessels which called in there for fuel.

All but two of the sailing fleet of Hind, Rolph & Co. will be laid up with the arrival at Victoria of the barkentine "Puako," which is now due in ballast from Newcastle, Australia. Five of the vessels are now laid up at Sausalito and Oakland Creek and the two ships now at sea probably will be taken out of commission when they arrive in port. The ship "W. T. Lewis" is now loading coal at Newcastle for South America and the "Honoipi" will sail shortly from Peru for Apia to carry a cargo of copra to San Francisco. Both the barkentine "Lahania" and "Conqueror" are laid up temporarily at Sausalito, while the "Makaweli," "Muriel" and the "Robert R. Hind" are awaiting improvement in cargo offerings at the Oakland Creek vacation field for idle vessels.

To meet the drastic cut of thirty-five cents per one hundred pounds on all dried fruit in boxes made by the Isthmian Line two weeks ago, six steamship lines in the North Atlantic and Pacific Eastbound Conference agreed to meet the reduced rates. The Isthmian Line, which is not a member of the conference, slashed the rate on dried fruits in boxes from Pacific Coast ports to the Atlantic from ninety cents to fifty-five cents. When news of the drastic cut was learned no action was taken by the other operators in the inter-coastal steamship service, because they believed that some action could be taken to force the Isthmian Line to rescind. A peculiar situation was brought about by the six companies meeting the reduction. Three other steamship lines, who are members of the conference, have refused to agree to the reduction, and unless there is some adjustment made, it is predicted that there will be a rupture in the conference. In the event that there is a break in the ranks, there will be some lively reductions made under cover to secure freights. The three lines that refused to join in the reduction are the Luckenbach Steamship Company, the Williams-Dimond Company and the Matson Navigation Company. It is understood that the former two lines have been opposed to some of the actions of the rest of the lines in the conference in the past. The ones making the reduction were the Pacific Mail, North Atlantic and Western, Williams Line, Atlantic Gulf and Pacific and Swayne & Hoyt. The fifty-five-cent rate on dried fruit in boxes favors California packers, as the rate on dried fruit in sacks stands at sixty cents. When the reduction was made in sack fruit the packers here were "up in arms," as they said the rate favored the Eastern packers.

That the arrival of the first "535" liner in the Orient has been cause of great concern to the Japanese is shown by the following editorial comment, which was translated by officials of the Pacific Mail Company and forwarded by John H. Rosseter to Admiral Benson. The Yamato Shinbun, of Tokyo, said on March 25: "The S. S. 'Golden State' of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which is the first to be dispatched of the State type steamers menacing our marine circles like thunder, will arrive at Yokohama on the 2nd of April, carrying more than two hundred tourist parties to this country. The make of the steamer is very similar to those of men-of-war, but the inner accommodations are luxurious and complete, with full capacity for cargo and passengers. The usual speed power is said to be seventeen and a half miles an hour, but can speed to twenty-three miles an hour on an extraordinary case. Twelve other of the same type steamers will continually be operated after the 'Golden State.'" On the same day the Jiji Shinbun of Tokio carried the following: "It is a great menace for the N. Y. K. and T. K. K. that the American Shipping Board has given instructions to the Admiral Line and the P. M. S. S. Company to operate each five '535' type passenger boats in trans-Pacific lines. The new steamers will continually show their big shape in Yokohama harbor after April. Among the above ten ships the first ship to arrive at this port is the 'Golden State,' which is operated by the P. M. S. S. Company. She is expected to arrive on the 4th of April, sailing from San Francisco March 19, carrying full cargo and passengers to the East. These steamers will call at Shanghai, Hongkong and Manila to secure cargo and passengers. A terrible competition is expected and it will be a big blow for the T. K. K. and N. Y. K. It is said by the Japanese side that the American temperance law not allowing to take a drink on board the steamer, they are not much afraid to compete passengers against American ships, because some of the passengers will select Japanese ships in this case. The '535' type steamers can carry 259 cabin passengers and 300 steerage, and 10,000 tons of cargo. She can provide fuel oil on use to navigate 11,000 miles. Her highest speed, twenty miles, and usual speed power is seventeen and one-half miles an hour."

DISCLOSED BY THE PRESS

Although credence can seldom be placed in press reports, due to the manner in which they are frequently colored, there are times when truth is brought to light by the subject matter contained therein.

The extent to which the seamen's contentions, relative to maladministration of the Seamen's Act, have been suppressed by the commercialized press can never be fully understood by the American public. There are instances, however, when contradictory facts give the lie to a volume of subsidized propaganda.

It has been the everlasting ambition of certain coolie-loving shipowners to completely Orientalize the deck and engine-room departments of the American Merchant Marine.

Congress perceived the danger of permitting this trend of sea control towards Asia, and enacted a law which had for its purpose establishment of an American personnel for the merchant service; and from the time the bill was signed by the President until the present day its provisions have never been permitted to function. Some sections of the law have been ignored, and the language clause has received the most hostile interpretation. In fact, the operation of this section has been made impossible by officials of the department entrusted with its enforcement.

These subordinates to coolie policy have done all in their power to make the required examinations a huge joke.

The following interesting item recently appeared in the shipping news of the San Francisco Chronicle:

[illegible] Furuseth [illegible] Labor Union, that [illegible] the regulations of the [illegible] Law on the Pacific has been [illegible] by Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, following [illegible] Colonel J. S. Irby, Surveyor of Customs.

Furuseth [illegible] that the language test setting forth that foreigners employed on American vessels be able to understand the English language sufficiently to receive orders [illegible] was not being held up to its [illegible] the law.

"While there were certain instances shown on some American vessels employing Chinese crews that the seamen were not qualified to meet the Seamen's Law, a survey showed that on the [illegible] in this regard was of the highest standard."

As a proof of the "highest standard" of Colonel Irby's work, the following article by Gilbert G. Weigle appeared in the San Francisco Examiner, May 1:

A New Lexicon

"The United States has a new language. It was given official confirmation yesterday at the Customs House in a dispatch received from Secretary of Commerce Herbert C. Hoover, Stanford graduate and famous American.

"As for the language itself, it was discovered by Capt. John T. Stone, special deputy surveyor of customs under Col. John S. Irby, at whose suggestion Stone sent his discovery on to Hoover at Washington for approval before placing it in the Government records at the Customs House as 'English recognized by the laws of the United States.'

"The approval having arrived, Capt. John Stone's 'Revised English Dictionary' will now include some 'perfect forms of English speech' that must certainly, as polemics go, start something in the realms of philology.

"Imagine if you can Noah Webster considering this for his dictionary: 'Hola! You ketcham clean fire velly quick!" Yet that expression is legal United States language in Captain Stone's new dictionary. It means, 'get down into the fireroom and clean the clinkers out of the grate!'

"Noah Webster was a student striving to preserve our language.

"Captain Stone is a student striving to preserve and prosper our commerce overseas.

"It all came about through orders received from Washington by Surveyor of Customs Col. John S. Irby that Captain Stone be directed to make a careful and thorough survey of all ships' crews at San Francisco and enforce the provision of the famous Seaman's Act that 'all ships shall have able-bodied crews and certified lifeboat men, 75 per cent of whom must be able to understand orders in English by the officers of the ship.'

"Captain Stone began his investigations and soon he found himself robbing ships of perfectly able-bodied sailors and certified lifeboat men just because they couldn't understand his faultless flow of discriminatingly chosen English.

"Yet he had to uphold the Seaman's Act. Being a resourceful man of thirty years' experience in enforcing American laws, Captain Stone bethought himself of the ingenious plan of stretching the English language a bit. He did it, and here are a few samples of how far he stretched it:

"'Suyia nara kodomo grab that fire bucket,' spoken to a Jap in English satisfactory to the Seaman's Act if, as his report to Secretary Hoover noted, it is 'spoken while energetically inhaling sea air through the teeth.' The expression means, 'Quick, now, my lad, grab that fire bucket.'

"Spoken to a French sailor, 'Tres vite with the halyard, Francois!' is equivalent to 'Hurry up and grab that rope that keeps the boom in place.'

"A Portuguese sailor will understand, 'Ho! Jo! Grabba pretty queeka da rope!' No Mexican will ever loiter when he hears this 'English' order: 'Caramba andalay with that life belt!' 'Get a move on you,' is mildness compared.

"Chinese respond with alacrity to 'Lun lifeboat velly fast muck a hai!' It is equivalent to 'Quick to the lifeboats! Get 'em on the davits and ready for the passengers!'

"These and scores of other new English expressions, now that they are approved, will, in Captain Stone's opinion, permit hundreds of otherwise disqualified sailors to stay on their jobs—which means fully manned ships plying in foreign trade instead of 'graveyards' and idle bottoms.

"As a promoter of American trade overseas, Captain Stone is a good dictionary maker."

Off-hand, the implication is that the only salvation for the U. S. Merchant Marine is unrestricted employment of coolie labor. Therefore, in the interest of these Mongolian proteges of mercenary shipowners, Colonel Irby holds to ridicule a law which he is expected to enforce.

That the Secretary of Commerce is also in full accord with efforts for Orientalizing the American Merchant Marine can be gathered from another recent press report, as follows:

Washington, April 25.—Despite requests from the International Seamen's Union for stricter [illegible] of the language test provisions of the Seamen's Act, Secretary Hoover said today that the existing interpretation of the Bureau of Navigation would remain unchanged.

Hoover said that the union's request that provisions which require seamen on American ships to understand orders from American officers be construed that the seamen understand English brought up the question of Chinese crews on American ships in the Pacific and the [illegible] use there of "pidgin" English. The American shipping situation in the Pacific is "already desperate" as a result of Japanese competition, Hoover added, and if American ships were forced to dispense with Chinese crews all hope of the upbuilding of the American Merchant Marine in that ocean would have to be abandoned.

What could be more convincing as to the reasons why the American shipowners refuse to arbitrate, and Admiral Benson announces a policy of no compromise?

ILLUSTRATED BY CONTRAST

The inefficiency of Chinese seamen has never been a matter of conjecture, it has always been proven and well known, while their tendency to stampede in face of danger makes them the most undesirable of all ships' crews.

The following story from Peking calls for reflection as to what may be expected at any time as a result of carrying coolie crews:

"Sinking of the steamer 'Hong Koh,' bound from Singapore to Amoy with approximately eleven hundred Amoy and Swatow Chinese and thirty thousand bags of rice aboard, just outside Swatow, precipitated a panic in which the passengers fought each other with knives, axes and hatchets for places in the boats, according to consular advices from Swatow. About a thousand passengers and most of the native crew were drowned or killed in the rioting.

"The 'Hong Koh' was drawing twenty-two feet of water when she approached Swatow. A pilot went aboard, but refused to bring her into port because of insufficient water over the bar at the harbor entrance. The Swatow Chinese were told that they must go on to Amoy and return. They threatened a riot, but the captain and officers cleared for action with firearms and a hot water hose and the trouble was averted for the time being.

"When the vessel struck the rocks, a panic followed. The boats and rafts that could be launched were swamped from overcrowding or wrecked against the steamer's side by the heavy swell. The captain, Harry Holmes, was drowned, but the other officers, who were foreigners, escaped. The steamer flew the British flag."

It might be interesting to know if the captain and officers of the wrecked vessel ever took a post-graduate course in Captain Stone's lexicon of "pidgin" English, as approved by Secretary Hoover, for use in examination of prospective candidates for able seamen's certificates.

In striking contrast to the low standards of courage and efficiency of these coolies was the conduct of the crew who were in the steam schooner "Klamath," when she ran on dangerous reefs in Northern California.

Commenting on the occurrence, one of the lady passengers said:

"No one but those who actually saw them work will know what a wonderful crew the 'Klamath' had when she went on the rocks.

"Without any aid from shore, the crew got lines to the rocks towering over the ship and carried all of the passengers in safety to the bluffs overhanging our little ship, pounded higher and higher on the beach by a surf running so high that it was frequently sweeping the decks.

"It was about 2 o'clock in the morning when a sailor leaped into the tossing sea in an attempt to swim to the nearest rocks, about two hundred feet away. He had two lines tied to him, so that if one parted he could still make the other fast.

"We all held our breath while he fought those angry waves, and you can imagine our feelings when he called from the rocks that he had anchored both lines. Then they rigged a breeches buoy and started taking the women ashore.

"We all made the trip safely and then came Mrs. Buckley's little girl, eighteen months old. She didn't cry once during all of the excitement. They put her in an ash can and then lashed it to the back of a sailor, who rode across safely in the breeches buoy. When he landed on the rocks with the baby, there was almost as much cheering as when the other sailor had gotten ashore with the first lines."

Notwithstanding frequent illustrations of like kind, profiteering shipowners receive the support of subservient officials in their efforts to eliminate white crews in favor of Asiatics.

THE SQUALL BREAKS

Failure of negotiations between the U. S. Shipping Board, represented by Admiral Benson, the shipowners, and the representatives of marine unions, resulted in a declaration by Admiral Benson of a wage cut which is in the aggregate of 35 per cent.

The new scale was ordered to take effect midnight, April 30.

After several conferences, at which representatives of the seamen exerted every effort to avoid a break and bring about a fair or reasonable adjustment, Admiral Benson took arbitrary action and declared the cut.

Since the order went into effect, every seaman reaching port has left his vessel as soon as notified, and as we go to press there has not been one single vessel leave under the new scale. Everything that could be accomplished to avoid a nation-wide tie-up was resorted to within the bounds of fairness and self-respect by the seamen's representatives; but Chairman Benson of the Shipping Board and the American Steamer Owners' Association assumed an attitude of arrogance which finally terminated with an ultimatum, and declaration that they would not agree to have the controversy submitted to arbitration.

It is unfortunate for the welfare and advancement of the Merchant Marine that this situation is forced upon us in such ruthless manner by greedy and shortsighted employers. Every move of the shipping interests has betrayed their eagerness to subjugate the seamen by an almost world-wide attack. Fortunately, we are prepared in a world-wide manner to receive it. We were never in better spirit or condition to meet aggression or to insist upon our rights, or to defend our liberties. The substance of the ultimatum and the manner of its launching is an insult to the intelligence and an inspiration to the resistance of any red-blooded individual.

Whatever may be the result of this disagreement, the seamen will be blameless. We have not sought a quarrel with our employers; but having it forced upon us by attempted degradation to conditions reaching two decades, we shall not seek to avoid any issues further.

Insofar as relations with our employers are concerned, they have been broken off and the situation at present bears the aspect of prolonged antagonism. The morale of our membership is perfect. We have nothing to lose but our chains. We are fortified with the knowledge that our cause is just, and in the strength of that conviction we must prevail. In the meantime we must keep our running gear clear, our sails well-trimmed, and a sharp lookout.

"On March 5, the date of our last weekly report," says the Surgeon General of the U. S. Public Health Service, "about 2050 beds were vacant in our hospitals. Of these about one thousand were in hospitals just opened or additions to older hospitals and were rapidly being filled. The remaining one thousand was less than 6 per cent of our total capacity of 17,648, a very small allowance for new arrivals. This does not, of course, include our patients in rented beds in contract hospitals, who numbered 10,506."

Always demand the Union Label!

BOYS WON'T SCAB

If the proponents of the Sea Service Bureau should be entertaining the idea of operating that institution as a strike-breaking agency, they are doomed to disillusionment, and the causes will be perfectly natural. The highest characteristics of our American boys are appealed to in the recruiting for the sea service personnel. The spirit of youth that can only be satisfied with adventure and romantic ideals is the urge to follow a seafarer's calling. Such attributes do not coincide with the low instincts that are embodied in the man who would take unfair advantage of a fellow in trouble for temporary emolument or false praise.

Young Americans are generally jealous of their honor and not backward in asserting their manhood.

IS BENSON FAIR?

The following lettergram, which was forwarded to the Chairman of the U. S. Shipping Board by William A. Westcott, President of the Seafarers' Council, is self-explanatory:

San Francisco, Cal., May 1, 1921.

Admiral Benson, Chairman U. S. Shipping Board, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir:

The press quotes you as having made the following statement on April 29: "The efforts of the United States Shipping Board and steamship interests to avert a break with marine labor have come to naught. The refusal of the men to recognize the need of readjustment on a reasonable basis has ended prolonged negotiations. The Shipping Board has endeavored to meet the men in the fairest and most conciliatory spirit. It is, however, deeply conscious of its obligations to the people of the United States to protect their interest in the merchant marine. It is reluctantly compelled to meet with all the resources at its command the situation which confronts it."

Assuming that you were correctly quoted, and believing you made the statement in all sincerity, we the Masters, Mates and Pilots' Association of the Pacific, with a membership of two thousand and two hundred masters and mates of ocean and coastwise vessels cannot agree with you that the Shipping Board has endeavored to meet the men in the fairest and most conciliatory spirit.

The Masters, Mates and Pilots' Association of the Pacific entered into an agreement with the Shipping Board to take effect August 1, 1919, and received the regular thirty days' notice as called for by the agreement. Six days prior to the termination of the agreement, or on the twenty-sixth day of February, 1921, a communication was sent to the district director of operations asking for a conference, he in turn notifying the Association on March 1 that the cancelled agreement would remain in force until further notice on account of change in the Administration on March 4. Our request for a conference and the further notice received consists of a written notice delivered by special messenger on April 13, notifying the Association to the effect that the rate of pay for masters and mates on all Shipping Board ships would be cut 15 per cent, effective May 1 and signed by H. H. Ebey, District Director of Operations. We cannot conceive how the Shipping Board can harmonize such actions with that of the fairest and most conciliatory spirit. Whatever action may be taken by the Masters, Mates and Pilots' Association of the Pacific they do not propose that the public shall be led to believe that they have received fair treatment by the Shipping Board or shipowners.

Respectfully,

MASTERS, MATES AND PILOTS OF THE PACIFIC.

By William A. Westcott, President.

The scratch of a lion's claw is almost as deadly as his bite, for he never cleans his nails, and he always carries under them rotting meat that is rank with deadly germs. Flies and water bugs do the same thing on a smaller scale; and, "Don't forget," says the U. S. Public Health Service, "that they never wipe their feet."

OFFICIAL

SAILORS' UNION OF THE PACIFIC

Headquarters, San Francisco, Cal., May 2, 1921.

Regular weekly meeting came to order at 7 p. m., J. Vance Thompson presiding. Secretary reported shipping medium; members ashore plentiful.

It was unanimously decided that members refuse to sign on any vessel except where owners of that particular vessel sign the old agreement with this Union for one year. This does not include the vessels we have a special agreement with, such as tugboats, Catalina Island boats or any other vessels on the bays. The members are instructed, however, to remain on board and discharge their vessels until final completion of the present voyage.

Freight conditions between here and the Orient are slightly improving, according to officials of the Pacific Mail Company, the "Colombia," which sailed for Hongkong —via Manila, having fully three-quarters of her cargo space filled. She also carries $1,000,000 in treasure consigned to Chinese banks. The "Creole State," now on her way from Calcutta, has also a good freight list for Honolulu and San Francisco, the local consignment amounting to nine thousand tons. The arrival of the "Creole State" will mark the completion of the first round trip in the Calcutta service. Passenger accommodations are reported to be completely filled.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

LABOR OMNIA VINCIT

Comrades of toil and life's dire afflictions,
Co-sharers of trial, oppression and woe,
Despair not of surcease from ancient restrictions,
But stick to your Union wherever you go.

Ye kings of the garnet and wards of the nation,
Ye slaves of the monger and lords of the gale,
Ye brine-bedecked heroes who strive not for station,
Remember your Union wherever you sail.

Though tyrants may revel and gloat in their power,
Though crimps may rejoice in their ill-gotten gains,
Let ye halt not, nor fear not, for brief is their hour,
Fraternity severs the strongest of chains.

Though chilled by the blasts of the green Northern ocean,
Though scorched by the torrid Equator's red sun,
May loyalty strengthen our mutual devotion,
We're comrades forever—the many for one.

At earliest dawn, at high noon's bright glory,
In the crimson of evening, and darkness of night,
Forget not the watchword, remember the story,
"Fraternity conquers, in Union is Might!"

Fraternally,
JAMES H. WILLIAMS.

ABLE SEAMEN'S CERTIFICATES

One of the shipowners included in his recommendations to the Sub-Committee on Personnel the following recommendation: Able Seamen's certificates should be made revocable in all cases where the holder is not competent.

To the Union man and to the seaman, this recommendation, if it should become law, would be a blessing.

To the organization at large it may not seem at first glance to be beneficial, but after a due trial it would work out satisfactory.

It is a well-established fact that quite a few men have obtained Able Seamen's certificates after a very short period of sea service, and it has been the experience of the writer that men holding A. B. certificates were frequently unable to perform even the simplest duties of a sailor.

It has also been proven that many efficient seamen were not able to obtain an A. B. certificate on account of some slight physical defect, whereas men of perfect physique had A. B. certificates issued them, regardless of their ability.

The fact that the statements of thirty-six months' service is made under oath has unfortunately been no deterrant to misstatements. When the incompetents have been weeded out and no one but really able seamen hold certificates, the organizations will not only benefit morally, from having an able and competent membership, but the standing of the sailor as a craftsman will become more respected.

The Union will benefit financially insofar as it will have none but able men as members and will have a greater power by holding the key to the situation in case of a strike, because all the able men will be Union men.

If the provisions of the Seamen's Act were carried out as originally intended, this drastic measure would not be necessary, but under the maladministration of the law and the conditions created by the war, certificates were issued at random.

The honor of the calling and the strength morally and economically of the Union depends on the ability of its members to perform their duties, and if a master, mates or engineer's license can be revoked, why not the license of an able or rather unable seaman?

CHARLES MARTELL,
Providence, R. I.

A QUARTER LESS ONE

Among the many doleful wails published in the Nellie Bly correspondence, one of the most distressing was from an ex-quartermaster in the U. S. Navy, who, it appears, after a roof garden course in pictoral astronomy, managed to secure a second mate's license in the Merchant Marine.

This deluded mariner complains that the living conditions, and "iron-hand treatment," prevailing on his first ship, were unendurable; that "strong backs and weak minds are preferred stock" in the American Merchant Marine; that the master and first and third officers were "100 per cent Scandinavians," and that two audacious rats drove him out on deck the first night he tried to sleep in his stateroom.

But from his further disclosure it appears that his 100 per cent fellow mates must have been 100 per cent sailor men also, which he was not. For he complains that he was disrated to the third mate's position while the latter was promoted to second mate in his stead.

And then, to cap the climax and fill his cup of outraged patriotism to overflowing, our bold quartermaster tearfully protests that upon returning to port at the end of the voyage the captain had the unmitigated insolence to offer him a job as "seaman" and allow him to stand eleven hours' night watch in port for eight hours' straight pay.

But now this much abused ex-naval man informs (Miss) Bly that he has secured a job ashore driving a flivver at $23 per week and has left the Merchant Marine, presumably to rot in its neglected brine for want of his valuable and indispensable services.

Well, if he observes the speed laws and does not try to make his flivver climb a light pole or mistake it for a seaplane, he ought to function all right in his new occupation, and we wish him success.

Naval quartermasters are all right in the Navy. They are always well drilled in the duties assigned them there. They are always proficent in the catechism of lead, log, lights and signals, but frequently fail dismally in performing the duties required of officers or seamen in the Merchant Marine.

In the Merchant Marine they are often rated as expert loafers and are more often demoted than promoted, as seems to have been the case with our noble chauffeur just quoted.

During the late German disturbance a good many old-timers—most of them Scandinavians, by the way—were set to work in the many sail lofts in and around New York City and the navy yards making war gear for both the Army and Navy, and Army transports, because they knew how to do it.

One day an ex-naval quartermaster came up to the loft where we were employed. He told our foreman that he had just completed eight years' naval service and had been discharged in the nick of time to escape the war zone.

He was anxious to learn how to splice, and had come to procure a piece of rope to take home with him to practice on.

Picking up a fag end clipping of two-inch manilla, he asked the price of it.

When the foreman told him he could have it gratis he was profuse in his thanks, but wanted to know where he could buy a good steel marlinspike to splice it with.

A good many years ago we were decking on the old sea-going tug "Bostwell," formerly the "Norfolk & Western No. 2."

Our stunt at that time was towing coal barges between Norfolk and points on the New England coast.

Our second mate at the time was an ex-naval man, and because he was a good fellow, and we do not wish to hurt his feelings, we will considerately withhold his name.

Mr. West, as we shall call him, was not only a navigator, but likewise held a first-class pilot's license for Chesapeake Bay and tributaries.

His knowledge of seamanship, however, was purely visionary. He knew how to make just three knots: an overhand knot, a granny and a cow hitch.

Whenever there was a splice to be made, a pudding to be mended or a heaving line to be crowned, he was always on the scene, even in his watch below; not to boss the job, but to learn how to do it. To do him justice, he was sincere in his desire to learn sailorizing.

One day, off Five Fathom Bank, while we were bound East, we set sail to steady the boat as there was a very heavy swell, and we had a large tow.

The wind being Nor' West, of course we trimmed down to starboard, and set her on the port tack. That night we took everything in again, but the next day we set sail again with the wind Northeast, and trimmed down to port. thus keeping her on the starboard tack.

After we had got the after staysail trimmed and belayed the sheet, Mister West gazed at the bulging sail a moment and then turning to us with a puzzled look he said, quite simply: "Say, Jim, we didn't have it on that side yesterday, did we?"

Of course, the landlubbers will split their sides laughing over the foregoing yarns, while all the old salts will keep as solemn as figureheads. Sailors never did have any imagination anyhow.

AFTER THE FIRE

Last week we reported the damage by fire to the Sailors' Hall Building, 67-69 Front street, New York City.

The damage to the building is now estimated to be between $7000 and $8000, fully covered by insurance.

The loss to individual members, however, through the burning and flooding of the baggage room is not so easily determined.

At the regular meeting of The Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, held April 11, and an adjourned session on April 12, it was voted to appropriate $5000 to relieve, as far as possible, the necessities of members whose effects were destroyed or badly damaged by the fire.

A committee is hard at work at this writing in an effort to fairly appraise and adjust the losses of individual members, and the fund will be used to the best possible benefit to all involved.

A VOICE FROM AUSTRALIA

World-wide attempts of organized greed to enslave the toilers is reflected in news from all quarters of the globe. From Alaska to the Antipodes every independent, liberal and labor publication reveals the same trend, the same methods, and the same ruthlessness of commercialism; and, fortunately for the workers, the same determination to resist the present onslaught and counter in such a manner as to leave the legions of greed helpless to repeat their present uncivilized attacks upon the liberties and welfare of the masses.

The following, from the Maori Worker, shows that our Australian comrades have a weather eye on the situation and are prepared to set full sail when the force of the present squall shall have been spent:

All over the world at the present time labor is being violently attacked by the owners of industry, and a determined effort made to smash the existing wage scales and to reintroduce the conditions of 1914.

The cables take care to inform us that the wages of the textile workers of France have been cut 20 per cent, and that all-round reductions are the order of the day in Paris; that in the United States and Canada, wage-cutting is general, whilst in Britain there have been successful efforts made to reduce the wages of workers in various industries.

There is a reason for all this wealth of detail. If the cables take the trouble to keep us informed of successful attacks on the wages front of practically every country on earth, it is because they desire to impress upon the minds of the workers in this part of the world that they cannot escape a world-wide trend, and their minds are being prepared accordingly for the inevitable.

Not only is the unpleasant fact stated that wage reductions are to be forced upon labor, but also that the hard-won conditions that accompanied the wage are to be reviewed, with the object of reverting to those prevailing before the war.

Here and there obstinate resistance is offered to these attacks along the wages front by the workers enrolled in powerful unions or groups of unions, but the pressure is so very great and so continuous that, if persisted in, will result in first the weaker and later the better-equipped units of labor being compelled to give way, and unless great care is exercised a general debacle could very easily follow.

Arising out of this cheap labor campaign, and indeed towering above it for all to see, is the unpleasant truth that the worker's standard of living is to be reduced, and that a readjustment more in keeping with capitalist notions of the status of a mere wealth-creator—a simple wage-slave—is to be enforced. Thus labor's share of the "new world" is not likely to create a feeling of envy in the breasts of plunderbund.

How painful the disillusionment must be to those in labor's ranks who shrieked for joining hands with the exploiters to successfully prosecute the war? How far removed from the actual was their contention that the late clash of rival commercial groups was "a so different war" out of the welter of which there was to gloriously arise a new civilization?

To the intelligent worker, however, there is no cause for amazement. The inevitable subsistence level could plainly be seen. The ruthless snatching of this or that concession grudgingly granted under stress of circumstances was certain unless labor was in possession of sufficient power to successfully ward off the contemplated attack.

So now we must "get back to normal," and it will be permitted of labor to then count its victories. And its victories—the retention of its fodder standard with all the added evils that a more ruthless capitalism, drunken with a sense of unlimited power, can bestow.

The unpalatable truth is that labor proportionately never received less of its product than it does now, nor never received so little in return for its scanty wage than is the case at the present time.

The lesson for labor to learn as the result of all this is that, under existing conditions, there can be no adequate relief. That so long as the system of wage slavery continues, the workers are ever at the mercy of the owners of industry, in whose clutches there is no possibility of permanent advancement. The hope of labor lies in the building of a movement and the development of a consciousness which has for its obect the inauguration, as speedily as possible, of a system of society in which industry will be owned by the people and operated by them in the interests of a community as a whole.

If but a fraction of the energy and money spent in chimerical chasings of wage scales was devoted to sound educational and organizing effort, there would be no danger that the fruits of labor's next victory would be filched from it by a powerful combination of vested interests attacking with all the resources at its command.

WHAT BREAD COSTS

Newark, N. J., April 30.—According to a local paper, the 10 cents paid for a loaf of bread is divided as follows:

Flour, 1.4 cents; manufacturing, 1.4 cents; delivery, 1½ cents; overhead, 1 1-5 cents; retailer's profit, 2 cents; baker's profit, 2½ cents. Total, 10 cents.

FRENCH SUBSIDIES

Due to the expiration of laws, dated, respectively, April 7, 1902, April 19, 1906, February 20, 1912, French Government subventions, other than so-called postal subventions, can be accorded to no ship, whether for its construction, or for its equipment, or in connection with its operation.

Agreements have been made between the Government and certain shipping companies whereby those companies are allocated stated sums of money in return for their engagement to perform specified services on behalf of the Government. These agreements are improperly referred to as "postal agreements" (conventions postales).

These contracts cover not only the carrying of mail, but also the transportation of soldiers, Government officials, Government property, etc., at preferential rates. The boats are obliged to serve certain indicated ports at regular intervals.

A special commissioner, appointed by and responsible to the Government, maintains a general control over the execution of these agreements with the steamship companies. This functionary is paid by the various companies referred to above. He verifies the carrying out of the agreements and acts as liaison officer between the Government and the steamship companies. He often arbitrates difficulties between the companies relative to the agreements. The commissioner is present at the board meetings of the companies, and may veto measures of such a nature as to compromise the interests of the State.

French shipping companies are, in principle, free to fix any rate they please without consulting the Government. The companies receiving subventions grant no preferential rate to French commerce, nor do other French shipping companies, as far as can be learned, make a practice of giving preferential rates.

It is interesting to note that special rates are granted on the French railways on merchandise to be exported. This reduction varies from 10 per cent for foodstuffs, drinks, etc., to 25 per cent for iron and steel products and certain chemicals. The decreased rates apply equally to goods shipped in French bottoms and those handled by foreign ships.

NATIONALITY OF SEAMEN

Reports of United States Shipping Commissioners for the six months ended December 31, 1920, show that the nationality of officers (excluding masters) and crews of American merchant vessels, shipped before the Commissioners, including repeated shipments, were as follows:

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd.)

Wall Street Tricks

Jett Lauck's showing before the Railroad Labor Board this week, that the present "deflation" of farmers and wage-workers, with its accompanying bankruptcy, unemployment, misery and despair, is due to a carefully-worked-out scheme of the big financial groups to smash the producers' organizations, has been the sensation of the month in the Capital.

Railroad and banking lobbies have issued a flood of denials, of ridicule, of counter-accusation. Yet the evidence presented by Lauck on behalf of the Railroad Labor organizations has lodged firmly in the public mind. Wall Street is on the defensive again.

A second but almost equally effective blow was struck by the unions when they showed the board that the private managers of the roads are wasting over a billion dollars annually that can be recovered by the use of better methods and modern machinery. They indicted the private management of the Pennsylvania, the New York Central and other systems as being wasteful to a degree which seriously interferes with economic stability.

At the same moment, Frank P. Walsh, as counsel for these unions and brotherhoods, was assisting the examiners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in a hearing in Philadelphia, in exposing the degree of extravagance of the Pennsylvania Railroad in letting out at private contract the repair and replacement of its locomotives. P. G. Blecke, examiner of accounts for the Interstate Commerce Commission, testified that the total excess charges paid the Baldwin Locomotive Works by the Pennsylvania on account of the repair of only two hundred locomotives was $3,173,-900. He also said that $250,000 should be added to this sum because of certain improper items which the Pennsylvania has added to the estimate made as to the cost of doing this work in its own shops. In addition, $140,000 should be added for the salaries of fifty-two inspectors kept by the railroad company in the Baldwin plant, and for scrap retained by the Baldwins.

These revelations more than sustained the charge made some time ago by William H. Johnston, president of the International Association of Machinists, that the Pennsylvania had paid Baldwin's plant $1,000,000 more than would have been required for the same work in the road's own shops.

Pennsylvania Railroad officials, on the stand, had sworn that the charges were without foundation. Then, step by step, the Commission's representatives and Walsh led them over the hot coals of retraction and admission that they had misrepresented the situation.

Progressives Organize

The week's experience with railroad affairs has made more clear the need which is to be met by the People's Legislative Service, of which Basil M. Manly is director and Senator La Follette chairman. The purpose of this Service was outlined at Washington, D. C., April 16, at which trade union officials were present in large number. The Service was formed by the railroad labor unions and a group of other progressive labor bodies, acting with the La Follette-Huddleston group of liberals in Congress, to furnish to members of the Senate and House, and to labor unions and to liberal publications, the basic facts upon which the defense of labor and liberal measures may be made. Manly and his associate, Henry R. Mussey, are going to gather material for arguments in the committees of Congress and upon the floor of Congress, and before all public bodies where the battle of the producers must be fought out. Their headquarters is at 814 Southern Building, Washington. The treasurer of the organization is Wm. H. Johnston.

Employing Printers Renig

In the allied printing trades the prospect of a lockout or strike on May 1 to determine the enforcement of the agreed rule of a 44-hour week is less serious than a week ago. Employing printers are beginning to sign up new contracts on the 44-hour basis. The movement affects some 25,000 men throughout the country, including 10,000 to 12,000 members of the International Typographical Union.

In this connection it is interesting to read the "American Plan" circular issued by the Employing Printers of America, J. M. Vollmer, secretary (Chicago), under date of March 15:

"Today the employing printer is standing with his back to the wall and with his business life at stake, facing the alternatives of Fight or Fail. However, from the tone of resolutions being adopted in all parts of the country, the solemn covenants with which master printers are joining for defense, it is conclusively evident that for once the employers have decided to strike, and organized labor is riding for a fall. Among successful employers in the printing business it is generally conceded that there never has been a more opportune time than now for the printing business to 'clean house.'"

Vollmer suggests that "Money is the only fuel on which strikes can feed, and the printing trades unions are not financially able to sustain any prolonged attack of national magnitude. For this reason the unions may logically be expected to adopt the von Hindenburg 'infiltration' idea, which in anarchistic circles is known as 'boring from within,' concentrating their efforts in selected spots where the local war chest may be best filled and the employers' front appears to be vulnerable."

He urges every employing printer to "talk the situation over" with loyal employes in their shops, and "get rid of the trouble-makers" at once; after that, he wants the employers to serve notice on the unions that they have adopted the rule of individual contract and the "American Plan."

Tons of this printed rubbish are now being mailed to employers by the anti-union forces organized and financed by the Wall Street banking groups and their industrial allies. But when the showdown comes on May 1, it seems quite unlikely that the employing printers will march to their own destruction.

A. F. of L. Prestige Wanes

As the date for the A. F. of L. convention at Denver approaches, the Republican national administration furnishes more and better material for serious discussion in that body. First, Mr. Harding chose a fraternal insurance agent as Secretary of Labor. Next, he appointed to the Railroad Labor Board a man not nominated by any of the sixteen standard labor organizations in the industry. Third, he gives occasion for the report that T. V. O'Connor, president of the International Longshoremen's Association, is to be named a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fill the place left vacant by the refusal of the Senate to act on the appointment of Vice-President James Duncan of the A. F. of L.

It is not because Duncan was rejected that labor officials here are protesting against the selection of O'Connor. It is because the man is considered unfit for the job, and unrepresentative of organized labor. O'Connor has antagonized most of the executives in the Federation by his evasive tactics when loyal co-operation between his union and theirs in some crisis became necessary. His own organization is in a continual state of revolt because of his dictatorial methods and his seeming lack of sympathy with the purposes of organized labor itself. His close friendship and long association with "Fingy" Connors of Buffalo, who has held the monopoly of unloading vessels for the railroad companies in Great Lakes ports, is considered sufficient to make him dangerous to the cause of railroad labor if he becomes a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The issue is not as to his motives, but as to what he is likely to do when he gains this official power.

Better Late Than Never

Existence of a national administration which now seems to go out of its way to affront the general labor movement is forcing the progressive elements of the A. F. of L. into a closer understanding than they have had in many years past. Discussion of candidates for the executive council, needed to give that body an aggressive character to meet the attacks now being brought against the whole labor movement, is in progress. It appears fairly certain that one or two changes in the council will be made, and that the new men will be of the aggressive type.

A new proof of farmer-labor solidarity was given at a meeting in the board room of the Machinists' building recently, when delegates elected by the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia, and from a score of local unions, gathered to arrange for a drive to sell $100,000 worth of the North Dakota State bonds. Upon the sale of these bonds, to the extent of $6,200,000, depends the carrying out of the Non-partisan League industrial program—the State-owned bank, the home-building association, the terminal grain elevator and flour mill, etc. Secretary-Treasurer Davison of the Machinists presided, and announced that his organization would take $5,000 of the bonds at the start. Frank Morrison, secretary of the A. F. of L., has undertaken to sell $1000 worth. The Tailors' local took $300 worth, using one-third of its treasury. Every local union in the district is to be canvassed by union teams, both to purchase bonds from the union's treasury funds, and to purchase them as individual investments.

The drive is apparently going "over the top" in short order.

and the company thereby released from all further obligations to him.

(g) During the fishing season all gill-net fishermen must lay out nets at least once in twenty-four (24) hours, weather permitting. Boat crews not doing so shall pay the.....Five Dollars ($5.00) per man for every day they neglect to lay out.

(h) If any gill-net man is put at any other work than fishing during the fishing time, he shall during such time as he does other work receive the average (or the limit when boats are on the limit) of the men fishing for the cannery to which he is assigned.

(i) Gill-net fishermen working or ordered ashore shall be paid Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour for each hour so working, provided fishing average is below Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour.

(j) During the fishing season any gill-net fisherman working ashore shall receive extra compensation at the rate of Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour for all hours worked in excess of twelve (12) during every twenty-four (24) hours, customary working hours to prevail. Gill-net fishermen so employed at canneries shall not be required to handle salt or salt salmon. Beachmen may be transferred to salting salmon.

(k) In Bristol Bay, Alaska, no fish shall be bought except from the regularly assigned fishermen and natives or from other companies in case of disaster under the terms provided in Section 5, paragraph "p."

Sec. 13. (a) The.....reserves the right to limit each boat to not less than twelve hundred (1200) salmon per day, such limit to commence at midnight following notification. Notification of limit to be given before six p. m. by hoisting a large red flag both at the cannery and at receiving lighters.

(b) When boats are on the limit they may make one or more deliveries between midnight and midnight, but all boats must be discharged clean at the receiving station in the presence of the tallymen. Accurate account of all salmon discharged above limit to be kept by tallymen and such salmon shall be credited pro rata to all boats short of the limit, but in no event shall any boat be credited in excess of the limit except when detained as provided hereafter in this section. Any boat short of the limit is permitted to receive from any other boats sufficient salmon to fill the limit.

(c) Any boat detained from delivering salmon at receiving station for more than five (5) hours after having there reported arrival shall be credited with one hundred and fifty (150) red salmon for each hour's detention, but not more than twelve hundred (1200) salmon, in addition to all salmon delivered on such day, shall be allowed for twenty-four (24) hours' detention. The same rule to apply when boats are on the limit. Boats must have nets cleared before arrival at receiving station.

(d) Boat crew having swamped their boat through unavoidable accident, shall assist in salvaging their own equipment, provided, however, if detained from fishing more than six hours after having reported themselves at the cannery between the hours of 7 a. m. and 9 p. m. to the superintendent or whoever may be in charge, they shall be put to work until such time as boat is provided, and for which work they shall be paid average, or the limit as the case may be, according to reading of Section 12. This rule shall also apply to boat crew requiring repairs on their boat.

Sec. 14. (a) If any gill-net fisherman is prevented from fishing through some injury sustained through no fault of his own, he shall, while so disabled, receive the average (or the limit when boats are on the limit) of the men fishing for the cannery to which he is assigned. Such injured man shall do other work if able to do so.

(b) Any other seaman, fisherman, beachman or trapman, who, from injury sustained while at work for the.....through no fault of his own is prevented from working, is to continue to receive his respective pay according to this agreement.

(c) Any seaman, fisherman, beachman or trapman laid up through sickness or natural ailments before end of fishing season shall be paid in addition to full run money or monthly wages, as the case may be, and all his other earnings, the sum of Fifty Dollars ($50.00) per month from date so laid up until able to work, according to the judgment of the company's physician, or if found unable to resume work, until placed in hospital in San Francisco, Astoria or Seattle.

(d) It is hereby understood that the payment of such wages during time of disability does not release the.....from liability, if such liability exists.

(e) All parties of the second part while engaged under this contract shall receive medical and surgical attendance and medical and surgical necessities, free of charge.

Sec. 15. The crew of each fishing boat shall discharge its own fish.

Sec. 16. All salmon must be in perfect condition and not discolored on the outside when delivered and must be discharged from boats at least once in twenty-four (24) hours.

Sec. 17. (a) No person shall sell or give away any fish, except as provided in Section 13, under penalty of forfeiting Twenty-five Dollars ($25.00) of his earnings for each offense.

(b) Each fisherman, beachman and trapman is to be permitted to salt one package (not to exceed one hundred pounds) of fish for his own use. Company to supply salt. All such packages to be plainly marked and to be subject to inspection and are not to be removed from vessel on arrival without permissioin from the .....

Sec. 18. (a) The..... through its superintendent or agent in charge, may at any time discharge any party of the second part for refusal to perform tide work, or for any other just cause, and his wages shall cease at the date of such discharge.

(b) Any man who is discharged, or who quits, shall be paid only half run money and all his other earnings, including for date of discharge or quitting. If no substitutes are hired to take the places of quitting or discharged men, the run money so deducted shall be equally divided among all the men of the cannery signing under this contract.

(c) Men discharged shall be given free transportation to home port, including maintenance, but this obligation shall not apply to men quitting.

Sec. 19. All parties of the second part shall be given statement of Alaska account before vessel sails for home port.

Sec. 20. (a) Each party of the second part promises that no liquor shall be taken or sent on board vessel and agrees to allow his baggage and effects to be searched after arrival on board vessel, and in case any liquor is found in his possession he agrees to allow same to be confiscated without any question or claim.

(b) Every man guilty of drunkenness shall pay a fine to the.....of Five Dollars ($5.00) for the first offense and Ten Dollars ($10.00) for each subsequent offense, the proceeds of such fine to be devoted to the Library Fund of the Alaska Fishermen's Union, or to any charity, as may be directed by said Union.

(c) It is agreed there shall be no gambling.

Sec. 21. (a) In case of any assistance rendered to any vessel or property of the..... extra compensation shall be paid to parties of the second part therefor as follows: Any and all men engaged in repairing damages to hull or rigging caused by other vessels, while vessel assigned to is safely moored at its respective station, or who render assistance to vessels or property of any other party, shall each receive extra compensation at the rate of Seventy-five Cents (75c) per hour for all work so done. The same extra compensation shall be paid men engaged in taking cargo out of vessels stranded away from their regular station, and for actual time worked in floating and transferring such vessel to her regular assigned station.

(b) No salvage shall be paid for picking up boats, nets, lighters or bunk scows.

(c) It is hereby understood that making these payments does not release the company from liability if such liability exists.

Sec. 22. A copy of this agreement shall be placed in a conspicuous place on board ship and in the bunkhouse.

Sec. 23. It is expressly agreed that neither the superintendent in charge, nor any other agent of the.....has power or authority to change the provisions of this agreement.

SWEDISH HARBOR EXTENSIONS

Consul Pierce of Malmo, Sweden, reports that extensive harbor improvements are being now carried out by the city of Helsingborg, and will result in the city obtaining over 250 meters of well-protected quay, where the largest ocean-going vessels may come alongside. This improvement is accompanied by the reclamation of approximately 20,000 square meters of land, which will be available and suitable for warehouses. The sum of 6,000,000 crowns has been granted by the City Council of Helsingborg for this work.

The U. S. Public Health Service estimates that at least five hundred and possibly one thousand lepers are at large in the United States, and that the number is increasing. The Government did not start work on its Federal Home for Lepers a minute too soon.

Labor News

The number of women employed by the railroads in 1920 totaled 87,457, or 151 less than in 1919, and nearly 10,000 more than in 1918.

Senator Moses, from New Hampshire, has presented a resolution calling for investigationo of conditions in the clothing industry.

The police of Philadelphia continue to arrest alleged radicals and recently forty-six were rounded up in one drive in that city.

At Globe, Arizona, Manager F. W. Macklennan of the Miami Copper Company announced a readjustment of wages effective May 1. Miners who have been receiving $5.15 a shift will receive $4.50. Muckers will receive a cut of 65 cents a day to $4.

Thirty thousand women fruit and vegetable cannery workers in the State of California will be affected by the slight wage decrease announced by the Industrial Welfare Commission. The new scale for this season is effective June 21 and resulted from hearings before the commission last week.

Several unions affiliated with the San Francisco Labor Council have demanded retraction of an editorial which recently appeared in the Labor Clarion attacking Eugene V. Debs. The article in question is considered by the members of these unions as a deliberate affront to the sincere element of organized labor.

Exhibits of labor-saving equipment and graphic charts by which modern industrial relations function in companies, factories and plants are on display at the Auditorium in connection with the national convention of the Society of Industrial Engineers, which is meeting in Milwaukee.

An affidavit by George Roberts, formerly engaged at Eilers Music Company, on Market street, San Francisco, has been filed by Attorney Byron Parker in the Superior Court. It sets forth that Roberts saw Mooney and Mrs. Mooney in the Eilers building continuously on the day of the Preparedness Day parade explosion.

The wage scale paid to farm laborers will be much smaller this year than last, according to an agreement reached at a meeting held at Auburn, Calif., by the directors of the Placer County Farm Bureau. The scale will be 35 cents per hour for common labor. The scale to be paid to fruit pickers will be decided upon later. A committee is now making an investigation.

A rupture in the community of interest among shoe manufacturers seems to be impending. New England factories last week announced that they could not compete with the wages paid in Brooklyn plants, and some of them closed down. The Endicott - Johnson Corporation of Binghampton has imposed a flat 20 per cent cut on all its thirteen thousand employes.

Walla Walla plumbers and fitters have been hit in the extension of the building trades lockout by the employers of that city. In a letter to Secretary Frank W. Cotterill of the Washington State Association of Plumbers and Fitters, Local 377 of Walla Walla announces that practically all the building crafts are now affected by the lockout, and union men are urged to stay away until the trouble is settled.

Domestic and Naval

The freighter "West Chalata," bound for Hamburg, will have to put up at Baltimore for repairs, following the discovery of a leak in No. 2 hold, just as she was about to clear the port of Baltimore.

The twelve - thousand - ton steel tanker, "Albertolite," built by the Standifer Construction Corporation at Vancouver, Wash., for the Standard Oil Company, was successfully launched April 30.

Havana reports that the captain, Silas Freeman, and crew of five men were rescued from their bark when the cargo of gasoline caught fire. The accident occurred about fifty miles from that port.

In a recent communication to Samuel Gompers, Secretary Hughes stated that Russia is a "gigantic economic vacuum"; and to the effect that while the present Soviet political and economic system operates, trade with Russia is undesirable.

When the naval transport "Hancock" steamed for Hawaii she carried a full boatload of wives, children and women relatives of Army and Naval officers who are stationed at the newly constructed Army and Naval ports near Honolulu. Because of this character of the passengers the vessel was dubbed in maritime circles as the "family ship."

After defeating all amendments designed to register sentiment towards disarmament, the House passed the annual naval appropriation bill carrying $396,000,000, of which $90,000,000 is for continuing construction on vessels. The bill now goes to the Senate. No roll-call was ordered, but on a rising vote the speaker announced 212 members for the bill and fifteen against it.

Junior officers of the destroyer force who are studying engineering at San Diego will be given a short cruise to San Francisco on the destroyer "William Jones." The vessel will sail for the Bay City and return to San Diego May 10. The destroyers "Burns," "Anthony" and "Ingraham," which are to be converted into fast mine layers and sent to the Hawaiian Islands for duty, will leave for Mare Island immediately.

Narragansett Bay is to be the base of the destroyer squadron of the Atlantic fleet this summer. The rendezvous will bring 150 destroyers and auxiliary vessels to these waters. Five destroyers have already arrived. The main fleet of destroyers will leave Charleston, S. C., their winter base, on May 15, and proceed to New York for a stay of two weeks to permit the crews to have shore liberty. The squadron, under command of Rear Admiral A. H. Robertson, will then proceed to Narragansett Bay, arriving about June 5.

The Portuguese steamer "Mormugao," with 448 passengers, went ashore on Black Rock, on the west side of Black Island, in a thick fog, April 29. Transfer of passengers from the "Mormugao" to tugs and other vessels was begun late in the day. Women and children were taken off first in the coast guard surf boat. About one hundred of the "Mormugao's" passengers are bound for New Bedford, one of her ports of call. The others were to be landed at New York, en route to California for work in vineyards there. The ship sailed from Lisbon, April 12.

Domestic and Naval

The Atlantic fleet was reviewed by President Harding as it entered home waters in Hampton Roads April 28. The review occupied little less than an hour and a half.

A wireless report to Seattle states that the motorship "Kanchatka" was destroyed by fire at sea near Pirate Cave, Alaska, on the night of April 15. The crew of twenty-three were saved.

A selection board to nominate line officers for permanent promotion in the Navy has been ordered convened at the Navy Department. The board will select eight rear admirals, thirty-five captains and eighty-nine commanders.

Five men from the Umatilla Reef lightship have been reported lost during a recent storm off the Washington coast. Efforts of searching parties have failed to discover any trace of the victims.

The three-masted British schooner, "Bona H," 418 tons, last reported sailing from Port Arthur, Texas, for the West Indies, February 13, has been lost at sea. All hands were reported saved.

Use of liquors as beverages on American ships is authorized by a bill introduced in the House by Representative Edmonds of Pennsylvania. The bill provides that the Volstead Act shall not apply to ships when operating outside the three-mile limit of the coasts of the United States.

In granting a permit for an international labor parade on Sunday, May 1, to Morris Backall, representing the Socialist Party of Cook County, Chief of Police Fitsmorris of Chicago declared any effort to display the red flag would result in "somebody getting hurt."

Japanese firms in the Orient are seeking American wheat and lumber. Several Japanese freighters have been chartered to load cargoes consisting of these materials at Columbia river ports, while advices say many more are en route across the Pacific for additional shipments.

A rupture in the powerful intercoastal steamship conference and at the same time a conclusion of the dispute over the shipment of California dried fruits to the Atlantic seaboard, appeared imminent when the William Steamship Co., a member of the conference, announced a rate on dried fruit in boxes of little more than one-half the conference rates. The cut was made to meet the terms of the Isthmian Line, one of the leading steamship operators in the coast-to-coast trade, which does not belong to the conference. As the situation stood, the Isthmian Line and the Williams Line were quoting 55 cents a hundred weight on dried fruit in boxes, while the other members of the conference were asking 90 cents. It was believed in shipping circles that the resolution might cause the long-impending break in the intercoastal conference. The 55-cent rate on dried fruit in boxes favors the California packers, as a rate on dried fruit in sacks stands at 60 cents. The packers protested vehemently against the differential of 30 cents in favor of the unpacked fruit, which, they said, caused California fruits to be shipped to the East coast for packing.

Gold has been struck on a farm forty-five miles due north of Ottawa. The first gold rush in this part of Canada followed and thousands of claims have been staked.

Twenty persons were killed and 150 wounded in a clash between Jews and Arabs at Jaffa. Troops succeeded in restoring order without being compelled to fire on the fighting crowds.

Nearly complete returns from the "sentimental plebicite" held in the Austrian Tyrol indicates that 98 per cent of the inhabitants of the province voted in favor of fusion with Germany.

Belgium has not accepted the French plan for the military and economic occupation of the Ruhr Valley. Foreign Minister Jasper informed the cabinet council that no decision would be reached until the meeting of the Supreme Council.

The Hague reports: The Second Chamber of Parliament, by a vote of forty-nine to thirty, adopted the Bjambi oil field bill, thus barring the bid of the Standard Oil Company for a concession in the Sumatra oil region, which excludes American holdings in those fields.

Fifteen destroyers, mine sweepers and eagle boats have been dispatched from Pearl Harbor in search of the missing Navy tug "Conestoga." The heavy tug left San Diego a month ago, bound for Guam, via Pearl Harbor.

Unconditional evacuation of Thrace and Ionia will be demanded of Greece by the Turkish Government of Constantinople. This demand will be incorporated in proposals now being framed for presentation to the allies.

A recent London dispatch states that a number of policemen were killed and a magistrate and sub-police inspector wounded, in serious rioting at Malegaon, near Nassik, one hundred miles northeast of Bombay, India. Troops were rushed to the scene. Wires leading to the scene were cut, preventing the sending out of details.

Fifty coal mines already have been destroyed by flooding in the United Kingdom. This indicates the extent to which the entire structure of British industry is collapsing under pressure of the miners' strike. Further evidence of the growing industrial paralysis was shown by the following conditions: Only thirteen steel furnaces are operating of a total of five hundred. Train schedules have been reduced 50 per cent. All express trains have been discontinued. A curfew law is being planned for all lighting. Daylight saving is to be extended another hour. The country is expected soon to be dependent upon foreign coal. Misery and hunger are growing as the business depression increases.

Taylor's Nautical Academy
Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

LOCKOUT FACTS STATED

Marine Unions Exercised Every Effort for a Peaceful Settlement

The following statement of facts concerning the present lockout of seamen in the United States Merchant Marine reveals the extent and earnestness of endeavors by Maritime Unions to avoid a break, and to bring about a just and honorable settlement:

Native Americans exclusive of officers, 1915, less than 7 per cent; 1920, 51 per cent.

Substantially from the month of June, 1919, there was in existence an agreement between the American Steamship Owners' Association and the Shipping Board on one side and the sailors, marine firemen, oilers and watertenders, and the marine cooks and stewards (members of the International Seamen's Union of America) regulating wages, hours of labor and other conditions of employment. This agreement provided as base figures $90 per month for marine firemen, $85 per month for able seamen; higher ratings slightly above and lower rating somewhat below. Part of the agreement was three watches in the deck department, if the vessel carried six or more sailors. Further part of the agreement was that the officers of the unions should have a right to go on the docks and ships to consult with the men at times when they would not be interfering with the work in so doing, but that the right to be present when the men were being paid off should be absolute. This agreement would expire by limitation on the last day of April, 1921.

In the month of January, 1921, representatives of the sailors, firemen, cooks and stewards received communications from The American Steamship Owners' Association and from Admiral Benson, representing the Shipping Board, requesting a reduction in their wages, etc. Copies of such letters are hereby submitted as Exhibit 1, together with answers sent on January 31, 1921, in which the organizations offered to meet at once to assist in every way possible to meet competition complained of; however, stating that they could not go to the length of driving the American again from the sea. With this one exception, their letters did not bar any reduction or change. The letters further went on to say that any agreement arrived at should go into effect immediately upon the agreement being reached and continue in operation until April 30, 1922. No answer was received to those letters which were sent to the American Steamship Owners' Association, and no answer was received from Admiral Benson, except the bare acknowledgment that the letters had been received.

The seamen were called into meeting with the shipowners and the Shipping Board on April 19, and were then presented with a new proposed wage scale and new rules about working hours and conditions, which did not mention the question of three watches for the sailors, nor of any admission to the docks and vessels, but specifically stated that there would be no "discrimination against the employment of any engineer on account of affiliation or non-affiliation with any labor organization." Inasmuch as there was nothing whatever in the proposed agreement to indicate on whose behalf such agreement should be made, or to whom such agreement should apply, the seamen's delegation asked: "With whom are you meeting?" to which the answer was: "We assume that we are meeting with representatives of the International Seamen's Union of America." Whereupon we submitted the following as a counter proposition:

1. Abolish the sea-service bureau.
2. Enforce Section 13 of the Seamen's Act, especially the language clause.
3. Enforce Section 14, on foreign ships strictly.
4. Enforce Section 2 on American vessels.
5. Preference in employment to union men, for the purpose of developing efficiency.
6. The union to examine the men and not to admit to membership anybody for ratings which they are not reasonably qualified; this for the purpose of assisting that efficiency.

These questions being settled, we shall be pleased to proceed to consider your proposition in reference to wages and working conditions.

After the above had been read by the chairman of the shipowners' delegation, it was tentatively rejected. The seamen's delegation then stated that they tentatively rejected the shipowners' proposition and requested the shipowners to think very seriously over what had been submitted by the seamen's delegation. Whereupon the meeting ended, and was not called together again until Monday, April 25.

In the meeting on Monday, April 25, in New York, the seamen's delegation was informed, first, that with reference to the sea-service bureau, the shipowners believed in the bureau, but it was a matter to be determined by the United States Shipping Board. With reference to points 2, 3 and 4, those were questions having to do with the enforcement of the Seamen's Act, The American Steamship Owners' Association did not believe in the Seamen's Act and could not see any reason why they should agree to take any action with reference to something which was or should be within the duty of the Government. With reference to point 5, they would grant no preference to union men, and point 6 having been based upon point 5, was not mentioned. In other words, they refused entirely to agree to the counter proposals made by the seamen's delegation. Whereupon, the seamen's delegation refused to consider any of the proposals made by the representatives of the shipowners. During the conference in New York it was specifically stated by the seamen's delegation that the first thing to be considered is the maintenance and development of the American Mercantile Marine. The second is hours and wages. When the so-called Seamen's Bill became law, it was generally admitted that there were less than 7 per cent of native Americans sailing under the American flag, Lakes, Coastwise and Ocean, licensed officers excepted. On the 1st of December last year (1920) there were 51 per cent of native Americans sailing in the Lakes, Coastwise and Ocean trades under the American flag, licensed officers excepted. It is a conservative estimate when it is stated that there were at the same time at least 10 per cent of naturalized citizens sailing in the same trades. Whereupon the meeting ended.

On the same night, the seamen's delegation (then in New York), received telegraphic communication from Admiral Benson, Acting Chairman of the Shipping Board, inviting all those interested to come to Washington to a meeting to begin on Wednesday, the 27th of April, at 10 a. m. The meeting to which those interested were invited by Admiral Benson began at the hour specified. The seamen were then presented with the decision arrived at by Admiral Benson on behalf of the Shipping Board, which was, first, that the sea-service bureau would continue in operation; second, that, of course, Admiral Benson and the Shipping Board were in favor of the enforcement of the law standing on the Statute books, and that in so far as it depended upon the Shipping Board it would be enforced. With reference to point 5, the admiral stated that the Government could not agree to any discrimination as between citizens. He then stated (quoting from memory): "That he entirely disregarded the question of competition; that he based his decision upon the reduction in the cost of living, and that he had decided that 15 per cent reduction in the wages would be just to all parties." Papers containing wages and conditions proposed by the Shipping Board were then distributed. The leader of the seamen's delegation asked whether the 15 per cent meant a 15 per cent reduction in the total income in money received from the ships by the seamen, or did it mean a 15 per cent reduction in the base wages? The answer was: "Abolition of all overtime pay and a 15 per cent reduction in the base pay."

The question of the wages and conditions of the marine engineers was then taken up, and after some statements made on both sides it looked like an absolute break; that is to say, it looked as though those present would part without coming to any results whatsoever. The leader of the seamen's delegation then urged that the future of the Merchant Marine of America might depend upon what was being done; that this be seriously considered until the next day, when the meeting might assemble again.

Admiral Benson stated that the next day, Thursday, he had to be out of the city, and suggested that it be laid over until Friday morning at 10 o'clock. This was agreed to. On Friday, at 10 o'clock, the meeting came together again. The Admiral asked what answers the seamen and the marine engineers had to submit, and the leader of the seamen's delegation stated that before giving the final answer for the seamen it was arranged among the seamen themselves that he should ask certain questions, and he proceeded to propound the following questions:

1. The statement which we have says nothing about watches at sea. Will the sailors be permitted to retain three watches? The answer was "no."

(Explanation: Three watches at sea mean fifty-six hours per week, two watches at sea mean eighty-four hours per week.)

2. The statement contains nothing about continuing the right of the representatives of the men to visit the men on the ships, to be present when they are paid off, and represent them with the shipowners. Will that be continued? The answer was "no."

3. On Wednesday we submitted tentatively a proposition that preference might be given to American citizens for all ratings for which they are qualified; second, preference to those who hold intention papers and preference of such intention papers should be according to seniority of the papers. We now make that proposition officially and ask for an answer. There was on the part of Admiral Benson not a direct "no," but a hesitation and a number of qualifications, but on the part of the shipowners an emphatic and clear "no," in which the Admiral then joined. Again the question of whether the 15 per cent was a reduction in the whole of the income, or in the basic wages, and the same answer that had been obtained previously was given again, namely, that practically all of the pay for overtime work had to be abolished and that the 15 per cent was to apply to the basic wages.

The leader of the seamen's delegation then stated that before the meeting closed he had a blanket proposition to offer, together with a short statement of the reasons why, requesting that he might be given that opportunity. There being no objection, it was taken for granted that the opportunity would be given.

The marine engineers' question then came up for consideration. Some time was taken up with that, but no understanding was arrived at. Then the question of the pay of wireless telegraphers was taken up, but no understanding arrived at. Whereupon, the leader of the seamen's delegation stated that he was instructed to make a statement and a proposition with which he, himself, was fully agreed and which was about as follows:

That as we seamen feel that the decision arrived at here will determine whether the United States is to have a Merchant Marine or not, whether it is to have any proper share in the sea-power of the world or not, we feel that we have no right finally to determine this thing; it has national and international aspects and ramifications which we think of such importance to this country that, while we believe we are right, we are willing to surrender our judgment and to submit this entire question, without any reservations or qualifications whatsoever, to the President of the United States, and in order that no stoppage may take place, that the wages and conditions now existing shall remain until he has had an opportunity to pass upon it and come to a decision, which decision we pledge ourselves beforehand to loyally agree to and abide by. The marine engineers joined in that. So did the wireless telegraphers. Admiral Benson replying, stated that he would not burden the President with these questions; his burden was heavy enough, and it was our duty to lighten it, not to increase it. The shipowners emphatically answered "no" to the proposition that had just been propounded by the seamen's delegation, whereupon the leader of the seamen's delegation said: "We seamen do not believe that we are adding to his burden, and we are not submitting it to him with any such intention. We thought it our duty to him, to the Merchant Marine and to the country to submit this proposition to the President, and we think so still. We cannot do otherwise; we must follow the convictions of duty that is in us, and since the other side will not agree, we will ourselves, as far as we are concerned, submit it to the President." Whereupon the delegation left the hall.

(These quotations above from the meetings of Wednesday and Friday have been made from memory, because when W. S. Brown, President of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, on his own behalf and on our behalf, asked for a stenographic copy of what had taken place at those meetings (of course willing to pay for it) such request for a copy was denied. If any reason was given we know not, but as we have not received any copy we must depend upon our memory.)

After the seamen's delegation left the meeting the following letter was written to the President:

"Washington, D. C.,
April 29, 1921.

"Mr. President:

"This is a report and a prayer. All the agreements and arrangement between shipowners organized in the American Steamship Owners' Association, the U. S. Shipping Board, the organized Marine Engineers, Sailors, Firemen, Marine Cooks and Stewards, these last three [illegible] of America, will cease with tomorrow night.

"The shipowners offered us a reduction [illegible] subsistence and the abolition of all pay for overtime work. This took place in the month of January. We wrote them a letter offering to [illegible] to an understanding to the effect immediately and to run until April, 1922. There was a meeting until the 19th of this month. Then they offered us conditions that were utterly impossible for us to accept. We countered with [illegible] propositions which we deemed of absolute necessity for the upbuilding and preservation of the personnel of the Merchant Marine of America. This refused. We met them again on the 25th, and they refused to consider our proposals. This ended the meetings in New York.

"Admiral Benson, chairman of the Shipping Board, called everybody interested to meet here in Washington on Wednesday, the 27th. There was a 10 per cent reduction in the cut proposed to us here, making it 15 per cent of the actual wages signed for on the articles, but the total cut would, under the rules proposed, be from 40 to 60 per cent in the actual income of the men employed; but no other change in the other things, except that in so far as the carrying out of the law was concerned, the Admiral declared himself entirely in favor of the carrying out of the law, and that he would do what he could to have the law enforced.

"We submitted as a proposition that in the matter of employment, the American citizen would have the preference for any rating which we would be qualified to fill, and that men with intention papers should have the next chance of employment, basing their preference amongst them upon the length of time that such intention papers had been held. This was refused. There were several other propositions made and refused. Whereupon, we made the offer to submit the entire question to you, declaring ourselves willing to accept whatever you should deem most advantageous to the building up of a Merchant Marine for the United States, and that in order to prevent any stoppage at all the present condition should remain until you had an opportunity to act upon the situation. This was first refused by Admiral Benson, stating that he would not burden you with this matter. It was then pre-emptorily refused by the ship owners. We renewed our offer, and again were refused. Whereupon, it was stated by us that we felt that we did not burden you by submitting our judgment to yours. We felt that we were doing our duty to you and to the Merchant Marine.

"We now respectfully submit the matter to you in the firm faith that you will act for the development and maintenance of the Merchant Marine.

Most respectfully,
(Signed) W. S. BROWN,
President, Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association.
(Signed) ANDREW FURUSETH.
President, International Seamen's Union of America.

To the President,
Of the United States,
The White House, Washington, D. C."

This letter was taken to the President's office by W. S. Brown, President of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, and Andrew Furuseth, President of the International Seamen's Union of America. The Assistant Secretary to the President, on receiving and reading the letter, said that it would be submitted to the President at the first opportunity.

On Saturday at 10 a. m., W. S. Brown, President, Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, and Andrew Furuseth, President, International Seamen's Union of America, called at the President's office for information, and were shortly told that the President would consult with some of his Cabinet officers, and further information would be sent later. These two representatives were then taken to the office of Mr. Davis, Secretary of Labor, where the offer of leaving the whole question to the President was again made without reservations or condition, and the names of the organizations for whom the representatives so agreed were given, namely, the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, the International Seamen's Union of America and the organization of the Wireless Telegraphers.

About 6 p. m., Saturday, April, 30, the seamen's delegation received information through the Associated Press and from Baltimore that Admiral Benson, on behalf of the Shipping Board, had issued instructions to put into effect the wages and conditions proposed by the shipowners and the Shipping Board, and which had been rejected by the seamen. Information came further that similar instructions had been issued by the Ship Owners' Association. After verifying this information as well as could be done, the seamen's delegation felt that inasmuch as the President had not acted finally, such instructions seemed to be premature. There was danger that it would bring about a general stoppage of all vessels. Therefore, the following telegram was sent to all the Atlantic ports:

"Washington, D. C.,
April 30, 1921.

In conference yesterday we asked: Will you give us three watches? Answer, No. We asked: Will you give us passes to the docks? The answer was, No. We asked if fifteen per cent reduction meant fifteen per cent reduction in wages or fifteen per cent of wages, overtime pay and subsistence. The answer was: It meant fifteen per cent of the wages and practically abolition of all overtime pay. We then offered to leave the whole question to the President of the United States. This was refused. We then took the proposition to the President. We have waited for an answer since noon. It is now nine-thirty Saturday night, no answer. Don't sign in any vessel under other than old scale of wages. See these instructions are followed.

(Signed) P. J. PRYOR,
For Committee of Eastern & Gulf."

And the following telegram was sent to the ports on the Pacific, signed by Rosenberg and the other officers present at Washington:

"Washington, D. C.,
April 30, 1921.

After negotiations broke yesterday all marine organizations involved submitted settlement of entire controversy to President Harding. No word yet what he will do. Pending further information men shall only sign under terms of old agreement. Watch closely."

It may be well to explain what takes place on board of a vessel before she can go to sea. The law provides that the crew of the vessel must sign the ship's articles before the vessel can proceed to sea. The shipping articles must contain the wages to be paid. The men are called aft, the articles containing the wages and conditions are read and the men are individually asked to sign. If they fail to sign they are told to leave the ship. The information so far obtained is that no change from the usual mode of procedure was made, which means that the articles containing the new wages and conditions were submitted to the men individually for their signatures. The men individually refused to sign, and were thereupon ordered to leave the ships.

On behalf of the International Seamen's Union of America.

ANDREW FURUSETH.

American Steamship Owners' Association.
New York, January 25, 1921.

Mr. P. J. Pryor, Secretary,
Eastern & Gulf Sailors' Association, Inc.,
67-69 Front St., New York City.

Dear Sir: As outlined today in the conference between our sub-committee on the wage and working agreements and representatives of the Marine Firemen's, Oilers and Watertenders' Union of the Atlantic and Gulf and the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association, Inc., we urge a revision at the earliest practicable day of the wage and working agreements to meet the unforeseen and serious depression in the shipping trade caused—

(1) By the general decline in the volume of sea-borne commerce, and (2) the intensifying competition of foreign ships operated at lower costs than American ships.

We believe in adhering to the agreements as written so long as they are unchanged by mutual consent, and we are asking you to co-operate with us to save the new American Merchant Marine, in which we are alike interested, from the rapid decline which under existing conditions seems inevitable.

Before taking this matter up with you, the steamship companies have been and are bending every energy to effect reductions in overhead charges, repairs, fuel, supplies, and all other operating costs. They believe that with these economies and with some readjustment of wage and working costs they will be able to keep in commission ships which otherwise must go out of commission—and perhaps to restore to service some ships now laid up. You know from your own observation how many American vessels are idle, how the proportion of foreign ships is increasing in our harbors, and how many of our own officers and men are unemployed. It is a very grave crisis that is now confronting us.

We have already asked the engineer and dock officers to modify their agreements so that overtime may be eliminated, subsistence and room allowance adjusted, and wages be reduced 25 per cent.

We now ask you if you will consent: (1) To immediate elimination of overtime; (2) to readjustment of subsistence and room allowance; (3) to a substantial reduction in wages to a basis which will enable American vessels to meet successfully the wage costs of our principal foreign competitors.

Because of the emergency we urge that you make a definite reply to us as soon as possible. Every week that passes sees more and more ships laid up, and we desire to check this process just as soon as our united efforts can accomplish it.

Very truly yours,
(S) J. McCARTHY,
Vice-Chairman, Sub-Committee on Wage and Working Agreements.

Dear Sir: I understand that a letter has been addressed to your organization by the subcommittee on wages and working agreements of the American Steamship Owners' Association, this letter following a conference had with your representatives in New York.

The seriousness of the situation with which we are all confronted is not exaggerated in this letter. It is unnecessary to again describe the widespread drop in marine freight movement, which is resulting in an increasing number of ships being tied up and an increasing number of officers and men being out of employment.

In this emergency it is proper even before the expiration of the agreements, which it is our intention to maintain, to secure the co-operation

Weekly News Letter

Contributed by the American Federation of Labor

Two Kinds of "Law and Order"

In answer to the claim of cossack advocates that they stand for "law and order," Secretary Olander, of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, shows that militarism also stands for "law and order," and that the term has two very different and distinct meanings.

"One of these," he says, "is best given in the political writings of the German historian, von Treitschke, who insisted that there could be no such thing as a sovereign citizenship, individual freedom or democratic institutions, and who advocated the supremacy of the State in all things. A military State police system is an essential part of the kind of a government system advocated by von Treitschke.

"The other meaning of the term 'law and order,' as expounded by the American statesman, Jefferson, and which is best expressed in the American Declaration of Independence, holds that men are created equal and are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights. The American theory declares the sovereignty of the citizen. It upholds individual freedom and develops democratic institutions. One of its most essential parts is that of local self-government.

"It was to guard against the establishment of highly centralized government authority that our forefathers arranged the police system so that in all cases and under all circumstances those who exercised police authority would be under the control of and responsible to the people of the community in which they served.

"We are against the von Treitschke system of law and order as advocated by the proponents of the military police bill. We stand for the system of law and order provided by the American theory.

"As a matter of fact, an examination into the history and uses of State police systems, wherever they may be found, will show that they are never used for the primary purpose of ordinary police duty but are always political and industrial in character. The West Virginia law provides that no member of the State police force shall be allowed or permitted to remain at or near any voting or polling place during elections or to be in attendance at any political convention or caucus, and it further bars from all public office, either elective or appointive, every man who serves on that State police force until one year after he has severed connections with it.

"The constabulary of that State was organized at the request of the coal owners. The Legislature of that State gave the mine owners what they wanted, and then sought to safeguard the political institutions of the State by enacting the sections of the law which I have just referred to."

The Miners' Strike

Outwardly, the failure of the triple alliance to function in the miners' strike was caused by a tactical error. Secretary Hodges of the Miners' Federation made an offer that was not accepted by his associates. The confusion that resulted brought about a condition that "destroyed the firm ground on which the strike action was based."

This new condition was considered by a conference of railway workers and transport workers, when it was declared that "a partial and hopelessly incomplete sympathetic stoppage would have weakened the power of the three organizations without contributing any material assistance to the miners."

When Secretary Hodges' offer was rejected by his associates, he handed his resignation to them, but it was not accepted.

Behind this outward reason for the triple alliance collapse, however, appears a determination of workers to have a voice in the merits of the question rather than make sacrifice at the word of one of their allies. This was the case with a federation of cotton workers, which recently dissolved. One labor paper presents this reason why a plan that gives all the power to one ally will fail:

"To our mind, it seems impossible to realize a high power of solidarity between trade unions under agreements whereby the sole power of determining or continuing a dispute, or even of continuing or resuming negotiations, is the prerogative of the executive of one of the allied unions. Such an alliance is undemocratic in its methods, and will always break down under pressure. The conditions under which the triple alliance was brought into the dispute were probably responsible to some extent for the breakdown, and it is evident that some other and more complete form of organization will require to be achieved before it is possible to wield such power as was attempted in this miners' dispute."

Seamen's Law Attacked

Simultaneous with the Shipping Board's and vessel owners' attack on the Seamen's law, Congressman Edmonds of Pennsylvania has introduced a joint resolution empowering the President to suspend any portion of that law "during the existence of war or any other emergency by which the free operation of ships in the American merchant marine would be endangered."

Congressman Scott has also introduced a bill which would annul the Seamen's law.

Accidents in Logging

During the past year there has been an appalling loss of life in the logging industry by reason of preventable accidents, according to the Department of Labor and Industries.

It is stated that there are a considerable number of well established logging concerns that have done everything possible to make their operations safe, but there are a large number of others who have given the matter no attention whatever.

Barbers Gain

A new agreement secured by the Barbers' Union calls for $25 a week and 50 per cent of receipts in excess of $30.

World's Workers

All classes of society in Bulgaria have been called upon to fulfill their duties under provisions of the compulsory labor law, which requires that men must give twelve months' work to the State, and women six months' work.

Press reports state that a strike of Norwegian sailors and stokers, members of the Seamen's Union, became effective May 8. Steamers still paying the old rate of wages will also be affected, according to the Social Demokraten.

A statement recently issued by the Amsterdam Municipal Statistical Bureau shows that 25.1 per cent of the members of trade unions affiliated to the State Unemployment Insurance Fund in that city, were out of work in February. These figures include diamond workers, of whom 88.6 were unemployed.

Over 30,000 members of the National Union of Ships' Stewards, Cooks, Butchers and Bakers of Great Britain were locked out on May 7, after a refusal to accept a 17 per cent reduction in pay. The British shipowners are taking action in harmony with Norwegian and American shipping interests. The Transport Workers' Federation will support the Cooks and Stewards' Union.

The lockout of marine workers by the American shipowners, in conjunction with that of Norwegian and British, is bringing recognition of a solidarity never previously known. The Federation of Transport Workers at London on May 7 ordered their members to refuse to handle American shipping because of this attack by United States shipping interests.

Workers of France are not taking kindly to the recent mobilization orders. The ecstacy which prevailed in 1914 is altogether lacking, and in the poorer sections of Paris riots have occurred which are of serious nature. Walls of buildings in these quarters are plastered with bills urging the workers not to obey the mobilization order, and demonstrations are frequently broken up by the gendarmes.

The Workers' Compensation Act, which is part of the State insurance scheme introduced by the Queensland Labor Government, provides for compensation to workers injured by accident in the course of their employment. The payments are for death: three years' wages—minimum $1500, maximum $3000; and for the total disablement: half wages, not exceeding $10 per week up to a maximum of $37.50, with various lump sums for specific injuries. This compensation is paid out of a national fund administered by the Government.

The British Empire is being shaken to its foundations by the coal miners' strike, notwithstanding the machinations of clever diplomats and politicians of England, including the maneuvers of Premier Lloyd George. The crisis has been rendered more acute by strikes against importation of foreign coal, and the lockout of thirty thousand ships' stewards, who are resisting a proposed wage cut. There are approximately six million unemployed in the United Kingdom, with a total of fifteen million affected by the industrial chaos.

Pacific Coast Marine

The steamer Alaskan is en route from Hilo to the Delaware breakwater with a cargo of sugar, which is part of a consignment of 125,000 tons billed to the Atlantic coast.

The Newsco Line, the intercoastal company for which the Admiral Line is the Pacific Coast agent, has added Vancouver to its regular ports of call, starting with the steamer "West Isleta."

The 250-ton steel schooner 'Casco," from San Francisco for Vancouver, B. C., will serve the Hudson Bay Company in its Arctic service. She will leave Vancouver, May 15, for Mackenzie river points for furs and other products of the Hudson Bay's northern trading posts.

Under command of Captain J. H. Dawson and booked full to capacity, the Oceanic Steamship Company's liner "Ventura" sailed for Sydney, via Honolulu. The crew were signed previous to the inauguration of the new scale of wages, thereby not being affected by the maritime strike.

The appointment of Frank A. Turner to the position of inspector of hulls at San Francisco for the United States Government has been received in shipping circles. He succeeds to the position made vacant last month by the death of Captain James Guthrie. Turner's selection for the position comes as no surprise as he has been filling the post of assistant inspector of hulls for many years.

A basic rate of $20 a ton for general cargo from Vancouver to Manila, Singapore, Colombo and Suez was tentatively agreed upon by representatives of steamship lines in conference at Vancouver, B. C., to establish a uniform freight rate to the Far East. The final decision of the conference will be submitted to the Pacific Westbound Conference at San Francisco for approval. The Canadian Robert Dollar Company, the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, the Blue Funnel Line and the Pacific Steamship Company were represented at the meeting.

Passengers arriving at San Francisco aboard the T. K. K. liner "Anyo Maru" told of a battle waged with plague by Dr. Y. Okomoto, the ship's surgeon, while the vessel was en route from Hongkong for Honolulu. Eight days out from the Chinese port, five cases of spinal meningitis developed among the Japanese passengers, one dying. Dr. Okomoto then gave serum injections to every one aboard and succeeded in confining the disease to the four remaining sufferers. At Honolulu, where the ship was quarantined for two weeks, thirty Japanese were held for observation.

Negotiations are pending between the Shipping Board, in conjunction with the State and Treasury Departments, and foreign nations to dispose of the immense stock of surplus materials in the Shipping Board's hands, according to word from Washington. China is particularly mentioned as a possible purchaser of these supplies. Steamship men believe that the sale, if consummated, would mean the shipment of large quantities of the materials through San Francisco. The bulk of the surplus consists of steel, machinery and 14,000,000 feet of lumber. All of these are greatly needed in China.

Indicating that the American-Hawaiian Line is going back into the Hawaiian sugar trade on a comprehensive scale, Williams, Dimond & Co., Pacific Coast agents, have announced that every other steamer in the next few months will be dispatched to Honolulu. Vessels designated for this run are the "Arizonian," the "Floridian," from New York May 21, the "Mexican," from New York June 11, and the "Pennsylvanian," from New York July 2. Three steamers have already been returned to the East Coast via the Hawaiian port.

The rate on grain from North Pacific ports to the United Kingdom and Europe shows indications of considerable fluctuation in the latest fixtures. The general tendency seems to be downward, but chartering is brisk and the terms are not yet as low as they were before the recent rise from 55 shillings. The British steamer "Benledi," 2509 tons, has been taken by the Portland Flour Mills Company for May loading at 60 shillings to the United Kingdom. Just previously, the Dutch steamer "Aikmar" was fixed at 57s 6d by M. H. Houser.

Economy of operation has considerable influence in keeping certain vessels moving which otherwise might be decorating the boneyard. The steamer "West Kasson," said to be the only American merchant vessel twice to circumnavigate the globe, made an average speed of 11.2 knots during her running time on the last voyage, and for this reason it has been decided to continue her in the 'round-the-world service. The "Eastern Importer," which was also scheduled for the boneyard, has been retained because of her economy of operation, and is to sail May 10.

The increase in American tonnage in and out of the port of San Francisco was shown in a report for the month of April, compiled by the marine department of the Chamber of Commerce, the figures for coast to coast vessels being considerably in advance of those covering off-shore craft. The total tonnage of steam vessels in the costal service to arrive during April was 261,554, according to the list, intercostal sailing vessels having reached a total of 3661 tons. Although this was below the tonnage of sailing vessels from foreign ports, the figures for steamers in the off-shore trade was exceeded by 87,919 tons in the Atlantic-Pacific service. The tonnage of ships sailing for costal destinations was greater for both steamships and sailing craft than the tonnage of any foreign-bound vessel.

Announcement that the Pacific Coast Westbound Conference had disbanded has given steamship circles an additional shock. This conference, which for eight years has banded together the fourteen operators between the Pacific Coast and the Orient, has been functioning somewhat precariously for several months past. Inability of the conference to maintain its schedules without rate cutting was offered as the reason for the withdrawals. The possibility of a rate war was advanced following the disbanding of the conference, but the general opinion was that rates would not be cut more than they have been recently. Whether the dissolution of the conference, permitting foreign lines to make rates at their own discretion, would have a bearing on the strike, shipping men were unable to predict. An effort is to be made to reorganize the companies.

Recent surveys made by steamship officials at San Francisco, through their various domestic and foreign agents, display the fact that the bottom has been reached in the ocean trade slump and that American commerce is on the rise. In the intercoastal business, cargo offerings are heavy. Lumber, grain, California boxed, canned fruits and vegetables as well as a large portion of the citrus fruit crop of Southern California will keep the various fleets of coast-to-coast steamers busy for many months on the eastbound schedule, while the westbound movement of freight has maintained heavily all through the slump. Japan is asking for lumber and wheat and the same is true of Australia, where lumber is in much demand. Business on the lower west coast is showing slight activity as well. The long expected building boom in the United States will start this summer or fall and when that time arrives coastwise steamship operators foresee boom times.

A sharp adjustment of the present transpacific rates is expected to result from the disbanding of the Pacific Westbound Conference recently. The action of the conference in splitting was the result of the inability of the members to maintain rates. Disbanding of the conference was threatened several weeks ago, when the Java-Pacific line withdrew. The China Mail followed the action of the Java-Pacific a short time later. There has been a constant struggle on the part of the lines in the conference to force companies not governed by the association to maintain standard rates. The unsettled condition of freight offerings in the transpacific trade, coupled with the marine strike, has been the cause of the conference disbanding. Shipping Board officials say that all American lines would be in agreement as to the rates to be established, and that the different ports would act to establish and maintain uniform schedules. With the disbanding of the conference, all strings attached to American or foreign lines operating out of Pacific Coast ports will be removed and keen competition for cargoes will be carried on.

Europe realizes that the Panama Canal has made the Pacific Coast only a month distant and it is responsible for the off-seasonal movement of Western products to the Old World, according to those who have been studying the unprecedented situation this year. Formerly most of the freight from this Coast to the European markets was carried from August to December, and it was necessary to allow three to five months for delivery. The Pacific Coast market was regarded as so remote as to be worthy of consideration only as the fruit and grain crops were being harvested. The seller was at the disadvantage of having to unload in a short time when the market was glutted, and the carriers were forced to remain inactive more than half the year in order to get the few months of brisk business. The Panama Canal has changed this condition vitally, but this has just been realized by the Europeans. The canal was not open long enough before the war to affect much consideration, and during the war there was no opportunity to observe its workings in this respect. The importers of the United Kingdom and the continent are just now recognizing that they need allow only thirty-five days for delivery of Pacific Coast products.

A NEED FOR RESISTANCE

Across the wide stretches of the world's most favored continent, the seafarers of the Pacific Coast greet their brothers on the Atlantic. Comrades in strenuous hours of trial, we are conscious of the fraternity which binds us to our cause. We realize that it was against our Atlantic brothers that the shock of aggression was first and hardest flung. In the cities teeming with unemployed workers the menace of a vast army of submerged, suffering poverty and hunger, the most severe test of manly principles was sure to be felt. That the seamen of the Atlantic and Gulf, as well as those of the Pacific, will acquit themselves nobly there cannot be the smallest shadow of doubt; their courage has been tested and they have learned to understand.

One of the most powerful and ruthless combinations of employers that ever conspired have determined upon our subjection and the degradation of our calling. Obsessed by greed and arrogance, they are reckless of consequence and devoid of all human attributes. They must and will fail in their purpose. Their intense animosity welds our solidarity, and the influence of mutual adversity brings us closer together.

We are compelled to set aside all trivial differences and eliminate all that is dross; the small matters, personal antipathy, or petty desire. As seamen, we possess nothing of this world's goods; therefore, in a material way, have nothing to lose.

It is for our very liberty and citizen rights that we are compelled to strive, and with the justice of our cause is the measure of our strength.

Upon those whose ambitions urge and natural desire has directed to the calling—attainment of which has enabled them to accept the responsibilities of marriage and family life—the burden will seem to be the harder; therefore, the necessity for equally powerful resistance. Those who are not able to stand alone, and dependant for care, silently demand that at this crucial time, when the standards of living, welfare and happiness are at stake, that their protectors must not waver, but must stand firmer in defense.

The spoilers, with inordinate desire, have flung their predatory banner to the breeze. With brutal emphasis, they have declared their intentions, which are savage in their nature.

The Seamen of America are confronting a situation which would degrade them to an Asiatic standard. The shipowners and their allies are brutally frank in their declarations that seamen on the Atlantic Coast are expected to compete against the more economical method of propulsion as operating in European vessels, and we of the Pacific are told we must compete with the low living standard of Orientals. The fact that inter-coastal and coastwise trade is not affected by this outside competition receives no consideration, which further proves that this present lockout is not caused by pressure that is economical, but by the inordinate desire of unscrupulous commercial interests to subjugate the seamen and destroy our organizations. Understanding the nature of the contest, we realize what must be the extent of our resistance.

AN IMPROVEMENT REQUIRED

There is considerable agitation amongst members of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific for a more beneficial method of depositing funds. The system in operation is not at all satisfactory, due to the fact that money, which is placed in savings or commercial banks, can be used against depositors, by the financial interests, at any and all times. There are several other agencies for deposit or investment which are as secure and more preferable than commercial or savings banks; at least, our own money could not be used as a weapon against us.

Banking interests are identical with employers, due to the fact that their maintenance and success depends upon the surplus wealth mulcted from the labor which creates it through the present unfair wage system.

The certificates of the United States savings organization and other Government securities, State and municipal bonds, have proven the most substantial investments. A number of unions are giving consideration to the purchase of bonds of the State of North Dakota. By such practice they feel that they not only protect against their money acting as a boomerang through the machinations of bankers, but they furnish substantial aid to a worthy cause. They are giving support to an intelligent, progressive and sacrificing community, which is fearlessly combating the legions of greed. Success of the North Dakota idea means the breaking of the back of Wall Street spoilers. There is considerable food for thought in the matter of depositing the union funds and there are great possibilities for improvement over the present antiquated methods now in operation.

When a man tires at the "slow progress" of the labor movement a good recipe is to stand off a bit and survey the work actually accomplished.

HOOVER WILL INVESTIGATE

Under the caption, "Disclosed by the Press," last week's issue of the JOURNAL reproduced a number of newspaper items, in which Secretary Hoover of the Department of Commerce was quoted as giving condonation to wrongful interpretation of the language clause of the Seamen's Act.

Evidence that these press statements were made without authority is contained in the following from a late edition of the San Francisco Chronicle, which published one of the original items:

"Secretary Hoover of the Department of Commerce proposes to direct an inquiry into the whole question of rulings installed by the previous Administration," on the language test provisions of the Seamen's Act, he announced last night in a telegram sent to the Associated Press, with the request that it be made public. The text of the telegram follows:

> "I understand the statement has been made in the Pacific Coast press that I proposed such an interpretation of the language test in the Seamen's Act as will enable the employment of thousands of Chinese on American ships. No such statement or suggestion was made. Moreover, I have neither the right nor the intention to color the enforcement of any law.
> "In order that there can be no misunderstanding, I propose at an early date to direct an inquiry into the whole question of rulings installed by the previous administration on the subject where all parties can be heard."

Efforts of the commercialized press to serve the interests of "big business" frequently results in the most flagrant misrepresentation, of which this case appears to be an example. We trust that an early and thorough investigation by Secretary Hoover will clear this situation and result in putting an end to wrongful interpretation and maladministration of the Seamen's Act.

MINERS GIVE WARNING

In order that there may be a full and complete understanding of the position of the United Mine Workers of America on the subject of reductions in wages, and to set at rest all rumors and reports in regard to that subject, International President John L. Lewis has issued the following statement:

"There will be no reduction of wages in the organized sections of the coal mining industry. The mine workers are now working under a scale of wages fixed by the United States Bituminous Coal Commission, created by the President and which functioned under governmental authority. These wage schedules were written into an agreement between miners and operators, which will not terminate until March 31, 1922. There can be no modification or abrogation of this agreement in any coal producing district without disturbing the integrity of the contract throughout the entire Nation. The United Mine Workers will resist any attempt to disturb the equanimity of its present contractural relations. The present acute depression in the mining industry, with consequent widespread unemployment and distress among the mine workers, is not in any way attributable to the wage schedules now in effect. Production costs at the present time are such as to enable coal to be produced and furnished the consuming public at a price relatively lower than any other basic or essential commodity. Users of coal should not delay purchase upon the theory or with the hope that any reduction of wages will be accepted by the mine workers. Statements to the contrary have no basis in fact."

Those who are fair and liberal-minded must often wonder at the blind persistency of "big business" in its aggressions upon the rights and liberties of the people; its callous attitude and disregard for consequences. But when they realize that "big business" is merely a creature of our commercial system, the apparent anomaly ceases to exist. Looking forward, the dreadful truth intrudes that unless the human race puts an end to the "system," the "system" will destroy the race.

GERMAN SHIPPING GAINS

German shipping is showing evidence of rapid recovery and Brazilian coffee exporters are co-operating with German interests in an effort to restore Hamburg to its former position as a center of the coffee trade.

There is considerable activity in the shipbuilding industry at Hamburg. Twenty-eight ocean steamers are being built in the yards there and orders have been received for fourteen more. Most of these vessels are of medium size, ranging from five thousand to ten thousand tons. The Deutsche Werft yard, the newest of the Hamburg yards, is constructing six steamers for the Hamburg-America Line, two for Dutch concerns, and eight for unnamed purchasers. For the Woermann Line and the German-Australian Line nine steamers are under construction at different yards.

Bremen showed a relatively greater recovery in 1920 than did Hamburg, its shipping activity reaching about half of what it was just prior to the outbreak of the war and treble that of 1915. The extent of this increase in 1920 is shown by the fact that Bremen's arrivals and departures in January, 1920, totaled 58,270 tons. In December they reached 100,568 tons. As a result of the low exchange value of the mark, Bremen has acquired a very considerable portion of the shipping business from the west of Germany which formerly went via Antwerp and Rotterdam. Bremen has proved the cheaper despite the necessity of the railway haul to that port. Bremen is showing activity as a cotton center, 630,000 bales having been imported in 1920. Thus far the importation of wool has been relatively small, due to the fact that production in the German wool-manufacturing industry is about 25 per cent of pre-war capacity.

ACCEPT NO CUTS

St. Louis, Mo., April 30.—The Building Trades Council announces that no affiliated union has accepted wage reductions, despite contrary claims in the public press. Many of the crafts were called upon to lower rates, but in every instance they refused, and were successful in their stand. A few lockouts were started by employers, but the Granite Cutters are the only ones who are still out.

Always demand the Union Label!

LATVIA'S COMMERCIAL FLEET

The Latvian commercial fleet consists of 234 vessels with a total capacity of 24,000 net registered tons, except the tugboats and river vessels. Of the latter, Latvia possesses nineteen steamers and fifty-seven sailing vessels, with a total capacity of 8968 net registered tons. These figures include all ships sailing under the Latvian flag, and also those still lying in Soviet Russian harbors awaiting their guaranteed return by the Soviet Government.

Of the above shipping the Government owns six steamers, with a total capacity of 3949 net registered tons, and forty-one harbor vessels and tugboats. In private possession are three steamers, with a capacity of 1133 net registered tons; forty-five sailing vessels, with 7072 net registered tons; and eighty-four tugboats and river passenger steamers.

Subject to return from Soviet Russia are nine ocean-going steamers, with a capacity of 9370 net registered tons; six sailing vessels, with a total capacity of 1954 net registered tons, and thirty-three tugboats and river vessels. In accordance with the peace treaty, Germany has to return to Latvia one ocean-going vessel and six sailing vessels, the latter with a total capacity of 942 net registered tons.

In addition to the foregoing fleet, twenty-seven sailing vessels are now being built in Latvia.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN URUGUAY

According to a report of the Uruguayan National Bureau of Labor, as a result of the present business depression in that Republic, the electrical industries have decreased their personnel by 15 per cent; soap, hat, cigar and cigarette factories, also tanneries, limekilns, biscuit makers, and sawmills by 20 per cent; spinners, box and can factories, foundries, boilermakers, etc., 30 per cent; other metal works 35 per cent. The rock quarries are working with only 50 per cent of their usual force. Bronze works have declined rapidly and are expected to close soon. Employes of the shoe and alpargata factories are working alternate days to prevent closing down; vermicelli and spaghetti factories are also working periodically. The only alcohol factory in Montevideo and the paper mills have shut down entirely.

NORWAY'S MERCHANT MARINE

According to the Norsks Veritas Ship Register for 1920, the Norwegian mercantile marine now consists in all of 1,854 ships of 100 tons, with a total tonnage of 2,369,426. Of this total there are 1,700 motor and steam vessels of 2,170,819 gross tons. There are 125 whaling and fishing vessels with a total of 73,294 tons. In 1920 there was a net increase of about 123 vessels and 380,000 tons.

After all, the "labor question" is but an arithmetical question. Unfortunately, however, we still lack agreement upon the formula by which to solve it.

The man who cites compulsory arbitration as a remedy for strikes might with equal propriety cite the balloon as a contradiction of the laws of gravity.

Tom Crowley succeeded in securing the valued contract of towing the big log rafts of the Hammond and Benson Lumber Companies down the Coast, according to recent announcement in shipping circles. The Red Stack tugs, "Sea Lion" and "Sea Monarch," will be utilized in the work. Two rafts will be towed from Astoria to San Francisco for the Hammond company and three rafts will be towed to San Diego from the Columbia river ports. Each raft will be comprised of six million feet of logs. Towing will begin about the middle of June.

No effort will be made by the W. R. Grace Company to place the combination freight and passenger steamers "Santa Cruz" and "Colusa" in the San Francisco-South American trade until labor conditions are adjusted. Until they were replaced recently by the "Golden State" and her sister ships in the East India trade, the "Colusa" and "Santa Cruz" were operated in that run by the Pacific Mail. Since then they have been returned to their owners, the W. R. Grace Company.

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

THE GENERAL SITUATION

The month of April has been an anxious period for the maritime interests of the United States and incidentally for the whole maritime world.

Four years ago the military world was craning its neck in tense anxiety to see what the United States intended to do to end the war. Today the maritime world is listening with almost equal anxiety for the outcome of the controversy between the American shipowners and organized seamen.

America is now the leading maritime nation, not because she owns the most tonnage or exports and imports the most merchandise, but because she has liberated her seamen from their ancient condition of serfdom and involuntary servitude.

Formerly the foreign wage scales set the standard of pay for American maritime slavery, except in the coastwise trade.

American and foreign laws were identical insofar as they related to seamen.

In consequence, practically all American over-sea commerce was carried in foreign bottoms, American seamen became extinct and the American flag was a forgotten and unknown emblem in the far-flung ports of the seven seas.

Our Marine Leadership

Now that America has reassumed the maritime leadership, her own nationals are returning to their long neglected sea service and her flag is again unfurled triumphant throughout the maritime world. It is necessary as a free republic to maintain our advanced position as the most forward nation. Foreign shipowners are, therefore, waiting in tense expectancy the result of the industrial struggle.

When the wage scales agreed upon, or disagreed upon between the American Shipowners Association, the United States Shipping Board and the International Seamen's Union of America have been made public the foreign shipowners will know precisely how to act.

If the American seamen can be forced, or persuaded into acceptance of a 25 per cent reduction in wages, the British and Scandinavian shipowners will endeavor to meet it with a lower reduction, which a multitude of famishing coolies will help them enforce.

Wage Cuts Won't Aid

As we have heretofore pointed out repeatedly in THE JOURNAL, it is futile for American shipowners to hope to offset foreign competition by the reduction process.

In lowering wages and living standards Asiatic competitors can beat us to the bare bone and then take the bone away from us. It is too early yet to predict the final outcome of the controversy. At this writing both sides are at loggerheads with the odds in favor of the seamen.

The present struggle is the most impressive on record because it is international in ultimate significance. Both the great sea coast maritime districts and each department of our united crafts are fully awake to the importance of their actions.

Counter Proposals

The shipowners have proposed a general, all around reduction of 25 to 35 per cent in wages to all seamen, elimination of overtime pay, reduction of maintenance allowances, and emasculation of all the principal terms of the existing working rules. The organized seamen, however, have submitted counter proposals relating to the enforcement of sections 13, 14 and 2 of the La Follette Law, the abolition of the superfluous Sea Service Bureau, and other conditions, refusing to discuss wage problems until these subjects have been fairly considered and disposed of by the Shipping Board and American Shipowners' Association.

In reply to these proposals the shipowners vaguely refer the seamen to the Department of Commerce for the enforcement of the law, and to the Shipping Board for the abolition of the Sea Service Bureau.

In seeking to effect an agreement with the Seamen's Unions, which must necessarily effect the wages, living and working conditions of all seamen in equal ratio, the shipowners refuse to recognize the Seamen's Union as a factor in the fight for Americanization of the merchant marine. They refuse to concede preference to American seamen with whom they are dealing on practical partnership lines insofar as operations are concerned, and while complaining of inefficiency among casual send-offs recruited from the Sea Service Bureau and irresponsible sources, they refuse to concede to the Seamen's Unions the right to promote efficiency by excluding from membership and from the service unqualified and incompetent men. That they are seeking to internationalize, rather than Americanize, our own merchant marine is too palpably obvious to invoke contention.

For six years, and more they have stupidly and steadfastly violated and evaded the maritime laws of the United States to further the interests of foreign trade rivals, and international trade bandits; during the same period they have ignored the constant streams of low class and coolie labor being dumped on our shores as "seamen" by foreign ships. They complain bitterly of low wages and cheap labor on foreign ships, while still refusing to invoke legal provisions enacted to obviate such conditions. They inveigh loudly against Chinese labor and cheap foreign labor in general employed on foreign ships while encouraging and promoting the same classes of labor on their own ships, often to the complete exclusion of American seamen.

In short it appears to us that the American shipowners are seeking to pool their interests with foreign shipowners. Their object seems to be to combine with foreign shipping concerns on an international basis, standardize wages on a minimum based on the lowest foreign level and a maximum based on luck, and then let the flag fly where it will.

JAMES H. WILLIAMS.

AN AMERICAN'S VIEWS

At the present time organized labor the world over is facing a crisis, the employers are trying to force an open-shop in order that they will be in a position to dictate terms to employes. Of course this is not the first time that the labor movement has been subjected to aggressions of arrogant employers.

Every idea conceivable is being put into operation to weaken our ranks, and organize one class of workers against another.

One method used against us is the one hundred per cent "American plan," and the reason for that is to try and split our forces in this way. Poison the American's mind against the foreigner, so as they (the corporations) will be in a position to use one force to oppose the other in strikes. To point out the inconsistency of this so-called American idea, the very people that are putting it forward are the largest employers of foreigners.

The contention that the working man got his, and now it is our day (the employers) seems to go well.

They may talk about big wages during the war for democracy, but I fail to see where it has made any one rich that I know of, it has made the rich, richer and the poor, poorer.

The employers frequently point to the homes that a few of the workers have ownership of, but they never tell you that he was forced to buy a home or he would have had no place to maintain his family, and that work is so scarce that he (the worker) is going to be evicted from the home, that he was compelled to purchase, as he will not have the money to meet his payments due to unemployment, and the real estate owner is wealthier than heretofore.

One more method used against you is largely due to your own fault, and that is piece work, and the bonus system. During the war the corporations were calling for more production, more production. And the workingman heeded that call and produced. He is at the present time paying dear for it.

When the bonus system was put into operation the worker accomplished—we will say as an example—an additional half day's work more than previous to its being in force, as he thought he was assisting the boys that were in the trenches. But was the manufacturer thinking of that? No, he was experimenting and testing the ability of you and me.

What is the result? Today the bonus system has been eliminated practically and we are doing a half day's work in addition to our own day's work, without the bonus, and the employer is still considering further reductions of wages. The struggle has reached the point where greedy corporations have decided to starve you out. The steel trust have gone on record as refusing to supply any contractor with steel that employs union labor. Is not that an arbitrary stand to take? Well, where does the Americanism come in there?

Another example of Americanism: The steamship owners desire to have the observance of Washington's birthday or Lincoln's birthday eliminated. Patriotism stops with the employers when it comes to the question of having to pay for deceased patriots' birthdays.

Before the birth of the American Federation of Labor, there was in existence an organization termed the Knights of Labor and its method of combating the unfair employer was, in time of strikes, that all classes of labor working in a particular industry, was to call all branches of said industry out on strike. Well, that system was not satisfactory to the employer, and when the destruction of the Knights of Labor was accomplished, the American Federation of Labor's birth was inaugurated. The employer saw his opportunity and advocated agreements with employes. Why was he so anxious for agreements? To protect his interests. In this way he would sign an agreement with all branches of a trade, but each separate branch agreement expired at a different date. By this system the employer would have a strike in one branch of the trade, while all other branches were working as bound by agreements.

This naturally had a tendency to separate the working forces, instead of uniting them. But as the system is about to see its end, and the system of pioneer days to be again enforced, the concern of one is the concern of all.

At the present time labor is the victim of the unfair employer, through his propaganda known as one hundred per cent Americanism, or in other words the open shop, and a certain class of men who are members of our union and who seem to be working from within for its destruction. Whether one agrees or disagrees with the International or the A. F. of L., it should be remembered that we have to deal with men as they are, not with the way we would like them to be.

While the labor movement, like any other human institution, has its faults, it is the only agency through which the workers can co-operate intelligently and effectively for their benefit.

And it seems strange that it is attacked by parties who are supposed to be deeply opposed to one another. One party, the unfair employer, says it is too radical. On the other hand, the impatient member, who is attacking it from within, says it is not radical enough.

After years of sweat, toil and self-sacrifice, the labor movement has come into existence through the efforts of noble men. It has not by any means been a mushroom growth and if any member will take the time to look into the history of the labor movement, he will find that it has taken years to develop it. It has taken years for labor to get the conditions it had been enjoying up until a few months ago.

The wages, the hours, the working rules, the Seamen's Act, and all other conditions favorable to labor were gained through long, hard effort.

Previous to the publication of this letter the steamship owner and the United States Shipping Board deliberately violated the agreement between the different branches of the sea service.

And when I say they broke that agreement I am not using idle words. In a number of ports they were shipping seamen with wages from $85 down without overtime. And on ships out of commission $75 and less a month. I contend that a ship is a ship whether it is in port or out at sea.

And a sailor is a sailor in port or at sea, and therefore entitled to the same wages and conditions so long as he is a member of the crew.

And it is poor policy, and a bad example to set for the workers when a branch of the Government will violate an agreement. Not so many moons ago that same Government sent the young and healthy manhood of the country to war and many made the supreme sacrifice while thousands of others are today hopeless cripples. They were made cripples while fighting for the same representatives that are today violating one of the most sacred traditions that the United States is founded upon. So we must remember that this great struggle has only commenced, and to combat it will require the united support and co-operation of all the members of organized labor.

Should the employer be successful in his efforts to reduce wages, as he has attempted, it means our destruction and will put us back to even a lower level than previous to the war.

We must remember that Rome was not built in a day, but it was burned down in a night. The three principle points in unionism are, education, agitation and organization. All for one, and one for all. United we stand and divided we fall.

ECONOMICS OF CO-OPERATION

(By Percy Redfern)

The co-operative movement depends equally upon idealists and men of business. It best flourishes where both work together. If it were looked upon simply as a business it would not only cease to be a movement; it would not remain efficient even as a machine. As the democratic hope and purpose died out of it, so would slacken all its energies for the common good. For sheer money-making, and nothing but money-making, let us have capitalism. Co-operation is more than a business; it is a movement. It must travel to its land of promise, or drift back to bondage and perish.

On the other hand, co-operation cannot live by idealism alone. Even a march to a promised land must be undertaken in order. Moses would have lacked much power from God if he had not been a most efficient organizer, skilled in all knowledge of the Egyptians. Pharoah would have put up with the loss of a good many children of Israel if he could have retained Moses. Let us hold in respect that sober knowledge of men and things which equips the business man. And more than this, let us ever beware of any enthusiasm, any idealism, however magnificent, which scorns the cool sense of means and ends. No doubt, it is superb to lift our ideas like rockets, and shower hopes in golden rain; but the persistent fire in a boiler is more valuable, as a persistent light before a shrine is more poetic.

The business of co-operation is an extension of the business of the home. It is a business of mutual interest. It is a business which accumulates the capital that is power, and accumulates it for our common human good. It is an organization for hupplying ourselves, that, properly conducted, can never fail, but always will be sure because we create our own certain market. It is a business which is all the more profitable because, paradoxically, instead of profit, its aim is consumption and use. It is a jolly business, because both social and sure. And so all sorts of people find in it a guide to practical economics, a guide as cheerful as a picture-book, instead of one as dull as a grocer's price-list.

Upon its business side the co-operative movement is a college of commerce, a college whose doors stand always open, a college in which the only fee is service.

We say to the system that is called capitalism: "Under your rule, each is for himself, serving another's turn only by accident. In your world one element alone is master, the element of capital. Labor is crushed and the claims of the community are ignored. While the providence of God, the heritage of civilization, the labors of motherhood, and the life of mankind over the New World and Old are creating the wealth of the world, your system grants the mastery of the wealth only to a few. To you all the world is a mint, and all the fruits are metal, to be coined into capital and so monopolized. But in our system co-operation is our end and purpose. We get on by working more successfully together. Your thoughts are for the spur of competition, but our regard is for the horse, which is the horse of co-operation, harnessed not to the chariots of capital, but to the car of the common good. With us labor is the honored servant, and it is the lifeless thing, capital, which is the drudge for the lowest rate of pay. Organizing skill and special ability we recognize specially, as they serve our societies; but, with us, the body is always more than any one of its members, even though that member be the brain; therefore, whatever surplus arises from the common efforts of all, we divide among all in the manner which has proved itself the fairest. For with us none is the absolute master, but as each is for all so are all for each."

That species of public sympathy with the demands of strikers which flies to the other side at the first sign of a break in the peace is in effect a particularly pernicious form of hostility.

Always demand the Union Label!

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd.)

Against Stacked Decks

Admiral Benson, chairman of the United States Shipping Board, is a gentle and sympathetic executioner. He thinks he is the seamen's best friend, and he will hear no argument about his own knowledge or judgment. They must surrender what they have won from the shipowners during the past twenty years, in order that they may save their organizations. But they must understand that he is totally opposed to the granting of permission to union officials to go aboard ships in port, or to watch the paying-off of crews, and he will not coerce the private shipowners into giving American citizens the preference in going to sea under the American flag. Finally, the men—for their own good—must accept a 15 per cent reduction in wages.

That is the position against which the International Seamen's Union of America, the Radio Telegraphers, and the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association appealed to President Harding.

When Benson and the shipowners' delegates, in a long and stormy session, refused to guarantee to the men the points upon which the existence of union influence depends, and when Benson refused to permit the shipowners to discuss the questions raised by Andrew Furuseth in his final attempt to reach a compromise, Furuseth made his offer to place the whole dispute in the hands of the President of the United States for his decision. The organized seafarers of the United States pledged themselves to abide by that decision, whatever it might be. Would the shipowners accept? Would they trust the President?

But Admiral Benson took the first responsibility of rejecting this offer. He said that it was the duty of all patriotic Americans to aid the President by lightening his burdens, not to increase them. He, for one, would never submit the issue to the President. It was shirking the responsibility which belonged to the men present before him.

Loud applause from the half-hundred shipowners answered his words.

Shipowners Are Hostile

"We are not shirking any responsibility in offering to abide by the award of the President of the United States," Furuseth replied.

"We have little to lose in any event. We have never had anything, we have nothing now, and we don't honestly expect to have anything worth mentioning, for ourselves, in our lifetime. But we do want to build up the sea power of America. We believe that the President will see farther than you men have seen. I would take this course if I had to walk alone, for it is not safe for any man to violate his conscience. You have refused us the right of Americans to preference in sailing. You have refused to write into the agreement the right of our spokesmen to go aboard ships in port. You have failed to agree to the enforcement of the Seamen's Act. Now, in absolute good faith we propose an award by the President."

Thompson, for the three associations of shipowners, arose and said slowly: "On behalf of the owners here represented, I reject Mr. Furuseth's proposition."

Griffin Gives Warning

Griffin, of the Marine Cooks and Stewards, tried to win the shipowners and Admiral Benson over. He pleaded the folly of a break at this point, when all their differences might be adjusted if a little common sense were used. He declared that Benson's proposition of a flat reduction of 15 per cent had been thrown down on the table with a "take it or leave it" finality; that Benson knew nothing of the conditions of merchant seamen, and had heard not a word of their side of the case before drafting his ultimatum.

"If, on the other hand," he concluded, "you wish to go on boldly and attempt to destroy our organizations, why not openly say so, and be done with it? You will find, if you try it, that you will lose money, every one of you, by the attempt. No fair-minded man can reject the offer of arbitration by the President. We can do no more."

A delegate of the Radio Telegraphers—they are all young men, and most of them married—reminded Benson that the radio men work twelve hours on American ships—except those American ships which run into British ports, where a three-watch system is required by British law. He pointed out that Benson proposed a wage of $105 a month for radio operators, and asked how a family could live on that amount.

Benson stood pat on the wage reduction. He refused, moreover, to permit any discussion of a three-watch clause in the agreement until the wage reduction should be accepted by the men. These matters of working rules, American preference, and the rights of union representatives to protect union men's interests, he referred to as "small details," to be taken up by committees and drafted into new rules during the month of May. The reduction in pay and allowances must take effect on May 1.

Furuseth Shows Grit

"We know what we are facing," said Furuseth, at last. "We have made our proposals, and you shipowners and the Admiral have answered them 'no,' or you have failed to make definite answer. We know that we will get only what is written into the agreement, and nothing more. You have left us nothing to talk about. Why should we continue?

"We are going out of here, because we must, and we are going to send our own committee direct to the President, to ask him to arbitrate this matter. We shall place the whole issue in his hands. If he shall refuse it, then we will have only one course left.

"We know what we are facing—the press, controlled by our enemies; public opinion, controlled by our opponents; injunctions, that the shipowners will hasten to bring against us; prison doors"—here the veteran leader of the Seamen threw wide his arms toward a blank wall behind him—"prison doors that wait to receive us.

"We know all these things, for we have experienced much in this struggle. Let me tell you that you cannot give us in prison smaller quarters than we have had aboard ship, nor make us more lonely than some of us have lived. Prisons do not frighten us at all.

"And now, good-day to you, gentlemen."

He walked out, amid the applause of the hundred delegates of the seafaring crafts, who went out after him. Admiral Benson waited a few moments and dismissed the shipowners with a few words of thanks. The conference had failed.

Responsibility Evaded

Would the President of the United States accept the responsibility of settling the dispute, or would he shoulder back the duty to Benson, and so permit the strike to take place when he might have averted it by deciding the terms upon which the shipping industry should continue? How could he refuse that opportunity to keep the ships running?

The day was to answer these questions. The President, who was understood to have selected the head of the United States Steel Corporation—foremost foe of organized seamen on the Lakes—to take control of the Shipping Board in June—could scarcely avoid responsibility for what was to take place.

Engineers Are Firm

W. S. Brown, president of the Marine Engineers' National Union, took part in the conferences of Wednesday and today, but not in the same role as Furuseth. Brown came with the instructions of his convention, and accompanied by his national board, determined to accept no reduction in wages. Benson refused to discuss any change in his own demand that the men take a reduction of 15 per cent. Brown showed that the cost of living had not been reduced to any such degree for people buying their necessaries in small amounts. He showed that the employers had presented a reclassification of engineers' wages to his organization, involving as much as 33 per cent reduction in many cases.

"We do not overlook the seriousness of our decision to reject your offer," said Brown. "If you will give us time, we are willing to submit it to a referendum of our membership, but we know they will not accept it."

Benson Is Vindictive

Benson replied that there was no reason for waiting for a referendum. He added that he would cut the wages of the masters, mates and pilots at this time, also, but for the fact that their agreement runs three more months at the old scale.

One of the striking features of the discussion on Wednesday was the eagerness of the shipowners to break off the conference when Brown first announced that his organization would not accept a 15 per cent reduction. Furuseth and Benson succeeded in putting off the break until another session should be held today. The shipowners, meeting yesterday in New York, where Darragh Delancey, adviser to Benson, was in touch with them, accepted Benson's terms. These terms did not deal with the working rules and conditions, except to provide that new rules and conditions should be later agreed upon.

From the first, the shipowners felt that the wage reduction was not all-important; what they were after was a chance to smash the union by refusing to agree to rules which would permit the union to live.

of yourself and your organization in meeting the situation which confronts us. I am in accord with the program which has been submitted to you in the attached letter and feel sure that we can count upon your hearty co-operation in taking such steps as are necessary to keep more of our ships in operation, and more of our officers and men in the position to earn their livelihood by the practice of their profession.

Very truly yours,

New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen: Your favor of the 25th inst. signed by J. McCarthy, Vice-Chairman of committee on wages and working conditions on board ship, received. After giving your communication the most serious consideration, of which our Joint Grievance Committee is capable, we respectfully submit the following to you:

You are urging a revision "at the earliest practicable date, of American wages and working rules," and you do this for the following reasons:

1. "The general decline in the volume of seaborne commerce."

2. "The intensifying competition of foreign ships operated at lower costs than American ships."

We respectfully beg to submit your first reason seems to us to be of such a nature, that any alterations in wages, overtime or working rules, will not meet the emergency. We are aware that a very large percentage of the tonnage of Norway, Sweden, Italy and Great Britain are at present laid up. We, not knowing the real cause, have to accept as a cause, what seems to be the common understanding, namely, that the poverty of Europe, resulting from the war and peace, has made Europe unable to buy American products, either with gold or any other commodities, and that this has resulted in the stoppage of international commerce.

Your second reason, "intensifying competition of foreign vessels operated at lower costs than American ships," seems to us to have some merit, and we feel that under certain conditions we could induce our membership to accept a revision of existing rules and conditions.

We beg to assure you that we are deeply and earnestly concerned about the development, the profitable operation, and the permanency of an American Merchant Marine and a real sea-power for America. Feeling as we do, that in a large sense our interests are common, we shall be pleased to co-operate with you towards the ends sought, to the utmost of our ability, and in such a way as to retain under the American flag not only all the vessels, but to man them with as sufficiently large number of citizen seamen so as to make the Merchant Marine truly American.

You submit three concrete propositions. The first is immediate elimination of overtime. Second, readjustment of subsistence and room allowance; third, substantial reduction in wages to a basis which will enable American vessels to meet successfully the wage cost of our principal foreign competitors. We assume, that in making these propositions, you are thinking of them as principles which you will be willing to modify upon a closer investigation of the facts as they exist here, in Europe and in Japan. We further assume that you are willng to go into and examine all the facts, and that having thus examined the facts and come to some reasonable understanding that would be constructive and helpful to the building up of an American Merchant Marine, you would be willing to enter into an agreement for another year, based on such facts and understanding.

We beg to assure you that we have from original sources some concrete and late information dealing with wages, subsistence and overtime pay in European countries. We find that there is none of them who do not pay overtime for certain overtime work, and we find further that our own laws and our own decisions here in the United States run in the same direction. If it be your idea to revise the rules under which overtime is being paid, we shall be pleased to co-operate with you. We feel the same way about subsistence and, to some extent, about wages, but all these would have to be based upon a mutual understanding arising out of mutual good-will and mutual and co-operative work for the building up of an American Merchant Marine.

We respectfully suggest that a conference be called at the earliest possible date, to go into the whole subject-matter with a view of such revisions as can be agreed upon and as will then be made the basis for an agreement to carry us through another year.

Again assuring you of our utmost concern and our willingness and desire to co-operate with you on the propositions which we both have in view, and awaiting an early reply, we beg to remain,

Very respectfully yours,

Joint Grievance Committee for the Atlantic District of the International Seamen's Union of America.
New York, January 31, 1921.

Hon. William S. Benson,
Chairman, United States Shipping Board,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Your favor of the 26th inst. received, and same has been submitted to our Joint Grievance Committee, together with the letter which you mentioned in your communication. Enclosed please find copy of letter which we have this day felt it our duty to send to the American Steamship Owners' Association.

In addition to what we have said in the letter to the American Steamship Owners' Association, we respectfully beg to call your attention to the fact that as Chairman of the United States Shipping Board, you are operating about 2000 American vessels, or those vessels are at least operated under regulations insisted upon and issued by you.

Six years ago there was about 5 per cent of American citizens sailing before the mast, in American vessels. The latest census taken, in the only way it could be taken, indicates that 51 per cent are native Americans. We have no means of accurately ascertaining the number of naturalized Americans, but we do know that there is a considerable number of them.

Six years ago, the wages of foreign vessels sailing in competition with American vessels, was in some instances so great, that competition was impossible, and American vessels went under foreign flags.

The changing of the law—of the status—and of general conditions, has brought this large number of native Americans to sea. They are now leaving. We don't know what they are saying when they arrive back home. They are leaving because of lack of work—the disposition of a large number of American shipowners to employ foreigners in preference to Americans, and further because of the strong rumor that wages are to be cut and existing conditions destroyed.

As stated in the letter to the American Steamship Owners' Association, we stand ready—eagerly ready to co-operate for the upbuilding of a real American Merchant Marine and of a real sea-power for America. We hoped and still hope to have the co-operation of the shipowners. We felt sure, and we still feel sure, that we shall be permited to co-operate with you and the American Government, even though we should not be permitted to co-operate with the American shipowners.

The number of vessels which the Shipping Board controls, will determine the wages and conditions for other ships, if the Shipping Board shall so desire. We beg to remind you that the shipowners and seamen of Europe, and it may include Japan, are now meeting at Brussels, Belgium, in an endeavor to arbitrate the hours of labor in maritime commerce and to come to an understanding about such other things as may be possible, and we do not feel that they are seriously considering the interests of the American Merchant Marine. We feel that in the coming year or two, perhaps three, it will take all the co-operation, good-will and strength of all the different factors constituting the American Merchant Marine to defend the interests of the growing Merchant Marine and sea-power of the United States.

In the earnest hope and expectation that such co-operation may be arranged for, and that such meeting will be called for that purpose and that such meeting will be successful, we beg to remain,

Most respectfully yours,
EASTERN & GULF SAILORS' ASSOCIATION,

Labor News

The State Board of Control has announced that the State printing office has gone on a forty-four-hour week basis.

In answer to a demand for reduction in wages, representatives of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Association of the United States and Canada have requested an increase.

Salmon fishermen in the Astoria district of the Columbia river struck last week when the canners refused to pay more than 9 cents per pound for Chinook salmon.

Samuel Gompers compiled a report of legislation affecting Organized Labor, which he submitted to the executive council of the American Federation of Labor at Cincinnati, May 5.

Mines of the Tonopah and Divide districts of Nevada are closed down by a strike of the miners against another 75-cent per day cut in wages. There are slight prospects for recovery of these camps.

An insurance policy of $1,000,000 against loss caused by strikes or other damage to buildings being erected by its members has been taken out with a local insurance agency by the Cleveland Building Trades Employers' Association.

Press feeders and assistants, members of the Philadelphia Press Feeders and Assistants' Union No. 11, are on strike to enforce a demand for a forty-four-hour week. Their officials estimate between six hundred and seven hundred men are out.

Two of Chicago's three May Day strikes have been settled. Livestock Handlers returned to work, after submitting differences to an arbiter. Union Printers returned to work. Their demand for a forty-four-hour week was granted, but they must accept a $4.35 a week wage reduction.

"There is no justification for the 20 per cent reduction in the wages of the employes of the steel trust," Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, declared in a statement commenting on the announcement by the United States Steel Corporation of a cut in wages effective May 16.

During the month of April 166 labor camps, housing 4003 people, were inspected in California by agents of the Commission of Immigration and Housing. Fifty-four camps were found good, eighty-two fair and thirty in bad condition, according to Edward A. Brown, director of camp sanitation for the commission.

The Central Labor Council of Honolulu has conducted a vigorous campaign against a bill known as Senate Bill 111. The declared purpose of the measure, according to its proponents, is curtailment of the Japanese press of the Territory. However, certain un-American provisions of the intended legislation are too dangerous for the workers to willingly accept.

The "Lanny Dutard," last of the big fishing vessels, has left Seattle, Wash., for the Bering sea for the season's fishing off the banks. Full union crews have been signed on the "Dutard" and other codfishers from the Deep Sea Fishermen's Union. Most of the union's membership is now out at sea and meetings will be suspended until September, when the rest of the vessels are expected back.

Domestic and Naval

The Norwegian steamship "Camilla Gilbert," carrying 7195 tons of coal, has cleared Baltimore for Odessa, the first ship to sail for Russia since Soviet Government took control. The vessel was loaded by the Terminal Shipping Company.

Postoffice employes who handle mail pouches, drivers of mail trucks and all mail clerks will carry arms to prevent robbery of the mails, according to instructions received by Postmaster Charles Fay at San Francisco.

Notwithstanding the drive for relief of famine-stricken China, in California several owners of big rice fields are reported to have set their fields afire. They declare the present price of rice does not justify the expense of harvesting the crop.

The Italian steamship "Monte San Michele," which left New York February 2 last with a cargo of grain for Genoa, has been given up for lost and added to the list of "missing ships" posted by Lloyds. The vessel carried a crew of forty-five men.

Military and naval aviators have joined with the cruiser "Baltimore" and fifteen destroyers in the search for the fleet tug "Conestoga," last reported on April 8, battling with a gale some five hundred miles from Honolulu, according to word received here today. It was reported that the plans had covered an area of several hundred miles without finding the missing tug or its tow, a barge. Naval officers reiterated their belief that the "Conestoga" had foundered with its crew of thirty officers and men.

At Hartford, Conn., on April 28, the right of "free speech" was upheld by the Connecticut Supreme Court in the case of McAlister Coleman of New York, charged with using a public square in Meriden for delivery of an oration without first getting a permit from the police. In the Court of Common Pleas in New Haven, Coleman was fined $25 and appealed. The Supreme Court held that the overwhelming weight of authorities is that the statutes and ordinances purporting to give officials absolute control of permission to speak are unconstitutional. The court holds that the ordinance in question violates the bill of rights and the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Plans are now being worked out by D. W. Dickie, marine architect, to perfect a system whereby the control of a ferryboat will be entirely in the hands of the navigator. Specifications for the proposed system will be tried out on the two steamers to be built for the Golden Gate Ferry Company, which will operate in the automobile service from San Francisco to Sausalito. Captain John T. Leale, formerly with the United States Shipping Board and before that in command of ferryboats for the Southern Pacific, after inspecting Dickie's plan, said that there was no reason why the plan would not be a success. It is Dickie's idea to have levers running into the pilot house connect with the engines of the vessel. Inauguration of the plan will give the captain of a ferryboat the same control over his vessel as a motorman of a streetcar has. If successful, it will be the first time in the world that vessels are so equipped.

Domestic and Naval

The U. S. Post Office Department has announced the resumption of a limited mail service with Russia.

The destroyer tender "Dobbin" has been launched at the Philadelphia Navy Yard. The vessel was named in honor of James H. Dobbin, Secretary of the Navy under President Pierce. The "Dobbin" is a ship of ten thousand tons, designed after a survey of the effect of German torpedoes.

Owing to the exodus of Japanese, labor shortage in the Hawaiian Islands has become so serious that the Hawaiian Legislature has authorized the appointment of a commission to go to Washington for the purpose of urging that the ban on Chinese labor be temporarily lifted.

The auixiliary-powered schooner "Venus," a small craft of a few hundred tons on the mail route between Seward and western Alaska, is making her schedule in more satisfactory manner now, according to advices from Seward. Complaints had been received that the little boat had been unable to keep up a monthly schedule to the Aleutian Islands. On her next trip she will deliver mail to Naknek and Nushagak canneries.

During a recent night battle practice off the Coronado Islands, superb shooting featured the short-range practice of the flagship "Charleston," according to results made public. No. 10 six-inch gun scored seven hits in seven shots in forty-eight seconds, and No. 3 three-inch gun duplicated the perfect score by making eight bullseyes with eight shots in seventy-one seconds, at a maximum range of two thousand yards.

Definite warnings have been issued by Lieutenant Commander McCaughey of the U. S. Naval compass control stations along the Pacific Coast, to owners and operators of all steamers, advising them that the eight hundred meter wave lengths were absolutely necessary in the securing of positions off the Coast in thick weather. Many of the steamers are now calling for positions with the six hundred meter wave length, upon which there is too much interference.

Five more mine sweepers and destroyers are to be detached from the force at San Diego and sent to Hawaiian waters this fall, bringing the total number of fast mine layers, mine sweepers, submarines and tenders based at Honolulu to forty-five, the most formidable fighting fleet ever maintained in those waters. Ten new submarines, the most powerful yet constructed for the Navy, are to sail from New London, Conn., next week for Pearl Harbor via San Diego and Mare Island. Twelve destroyers, comprising the twenty-ninth and thirty-first divisions, which have been undergoing extensive repairs at the Bremerton Navy Yard, are scheduled to return to San Diego June 1. They include the "Wells," "Aulick," "Tarbell," "Gilmer," "Dolphin," "McDermutt," "Bailey," "Thornton," "Morris," "Tingey," "Swasey" and "Meade." Division No. 46, composed of destroyers recently commissioned, also is due at the Southern Base from Mare Island June 1. The units of this division include the "Coghlan," "Preston," "Lamson," "Hull" and "McDermott."

INFORMATION WANTED

The United States offered three-fourths of one month's wages to each man in the cases of "Cockaponsett" and "West Inskip." As we considered the offers too small, we started two actions and the Court awarded two months' wages to each man in both cases. The United States Attorney General has since asked for settlement of the case and, I informed him that it could not be settled for less than the fair amount awarded by the Court, entered appeal on same. There is no reason for going back of the Court's decision, and I feel certain the amounts will not be reduced on appeals. We propose to fight it out, if for no other reason than to establish a precedent as to future amounts in Shipping Board cases. H. W. Hutton. 4-11-21

The American steamer "West Arrow" arrived at Bremen last week with 718 cows and 70 calves, given to Germany by farmers in North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa and Wisconsin. This was the second cargo of cows carried to this port by the "West Arrow."

Four persons were killed and twenty-four wounded in a riot at Gualeguaychu, a city in Northeastern Argentine, on May Day. This was the only serious disorder in this country during the day, and occurred when a parade of workers clashed with one formed by the local chapter of the Argentine Patriotic League (100 per cent's). Later the workers in Gualeguaychu declared a general strike.

Serious outbreaks have occurred between Albanians and Greeks at Soritia, a city on the border between Greek Macedonia and Albania. The melee was a result of the attack on the Greek Orthodox Church by Albanian officers and soldiers, who are alleged to have demanded that the service be conducted in the Albanian language. In the confusion the Greek Bishop disappeared and his fate is unknown.

The Harrison Line steamer "Ingoma," on fire, dashed into Falmouth, England, last week, after a race of one hundred miles, to save the lives of her eighty-eight passengers and crew. The "Ingoma" was bound from London for the West Indies. The fire was discovered off Falmouth, while the passengers were asleep. The captain of the vessel kept them in ignorance of their danger, and, having prepared the boats for launching, made for Falmouth under full steam.

Greece and the Sultan's government have been notified by the allied high commission that the neutrality of Constantinople and of the Straits must be observed. The Greeks also were informed that they must not attempt to exercise the right of search or the control of any allied merchant vessels. These steps were taken in order that recurrence of incidents similar to the search of a Japanese vessel recently might be prevented.

C. V. Lomonosoff of the Russian railway mission recently arrived at Riga, accompanied by Leonid Krassin, the Bolshevik minister of trade and commerce, after having placed several railway orders in Germany. Lomonosoff stated that the commission of which he is head has given orders for seven hundred locomotives in Germany and one thousand in Sweden. The first seventeen locomotives from Germany will be delivered this month and the first consignment from Sweden in September. Germany is to complete her entire order in one year, and Sweden hers in four years.

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

ADMIRAL BENSON'S BOMBAST

U. S. Shipping Board Head Aligned With Autocratic Shipowners

Statement made by Admiral W. S. Benson, Chairman United States Shipping Board, before Labor Conference of Marine Organizations, Steamship Men and Shipping Board Representatives, at Cosmos Club Auditorium, April 27, 1921, at 10 o'clock a. m.

Gentlemen:

I have always welcomed any opportunity to meet the men upon whom the permanent success of the American Merchant Marine actually depends.

On the present occasion we find ourselves endeavoring to meet the rapidly changing economic conditions resulting from the world war. It has affected the merchant marine in many ways. The movement of ocean freight has declined to a tremendous extent and this has resulted in the tying up of many ships and in the unemployment of many men. Competition for such cargoes as are available has become extremely keen. In land industry, too, the pressure of reconstruction has brought about wide price revision in most of the items making up the family budget. A general liquidation is taking place in all directions. All of us, whatever our status or connections, must do our parts in assisting in this general liquidation without which we cannot expect a permanent return to prosperity. So far as liquidation of labor is concerned, one can hardly pick up a daily paper without finding reports of substantial reductions in wage scales in various industries. So far, no change in this direction has taken place in the marine industry. How this liquidation might be best accomplished has been the subject of discussion between the committees representing the organizations of the various marine departments and a committee representing the steamship interests.

It may help us all to get a clear picture of the situation if we review some of the conditions of the last few years. During the war the drop in the purchasing value of the dollar became so serious as to necessitate radical readjustment of wages to meet the increasing cost of living. This condition is being overcome and the value of the dollar is definitely returning toward normal. The new economic conditions and the change in living costs call for reductions in wages at least as great as the recent drop in the cost of living, which reflects the return of the dollar toward its normal value. Since 1914 wages aboard American ships have more than kept pace with wage increases in other industries. When the Government became the largest American owner of ships it participated in these wage increases, and it is now a party to the present working agreements which will expire on May 1 and August 1, respectively. You will recall that in February last the Shipping Board, with other shipowners, invited representatives of the seafarers into conference to discuss a voluntary revision of wage scales in order to meet the new economic conditions. The men made no concessions. On the other hand, the Shipping Board has insisted that under these circumstances the terms of the existing agreements be strictly observed. As a result, no change in wages have been made.

Anticipating the expiration of the present marine agreements on May 1, the Shipping Board has throughout the present negotiations sought an orderly readjustment of wages and working rules in line with present conditions. It believed, and still believes, that all concerned would meet in a spirit of simple fairness and realize the absolute necessity of readjustments for the common good. The Shipping Board does not desire arbitrary wage reductions based solely on the present industrial depression, which might except the seafarers from the preserved higher American standards of living. In making readjustments, it proposes to stress the same factor which was so largely considered in making increases—the return of the purchasing value of the dollar toward its normal value as reflected in the percentage drop in the cost of living.

I understand that the recent negotiations have not resulted in the meeting of minds that had been hoped for, and that a break has actually come between the steamship interests and the marine labor organizations. It is in the effort to clear the situation that I have thought it best to ask you gentlemen to meet this morning so that I might put before you my views as to the reasonable basis of readjustment required in the present situation and state to you the course of action which the Shipping Board finds it necessary to take under the present circumstances.

In order that I may be perfectly clear, I understand that the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association desires to continue the present agreements, both as to wage scales and working conditions. I understand that the unlicensed personnel have presented these points on which they ask favorable assurance before they are willing to discuss wage scale and working conditions. These six points, I understand, are as follows:

(1) The abolition of the Sea Service Bureau.
(2) The enforcement of Section 13 of the Seamen's Act, especially the language clause.
(3) The enforcement of Section 14 of the Seamen's Act, covering life-saving equipment, especially on foreign ships.
(4) The enforcement of Section 2 of the Seamen's Act, covering the division of watches.
(5) Preference to be given in employment to union men, which it is contended would develop efficiency.
(6) The union to examine the men and not to admit to membership any not reasonably qualified.

Taking up first the six points above noted, I would say that the Shipping Board cannot consent to the abolition of the Sea Service Bureau, for reasons which have been expressed in recent press statements, nor can it assent as a Government institution to points five and six, involving union preference. The Shipping Board, as a Government institution, must stand for that equality in its relations to the Government which is guaranteed to every citizen by the Constitution of the United States. So far as points two, three and four are concerned, it is by opinion that any Act of Congress, until definitely repealed or modified, so long as it stands upon the Statute books, should be enforced by the department charged with such enforcement.

We now come to the point of determining what is a reasonable basis for readjusting wages and conditions in the merchant marine. I have given much thought to this matter. I want to be fair to the interests of the men and officers who are manning our ships, to the operators and owners who are running them, and to the people of the United States who look to the Shipping Board to protect their interests in the merchant marine. All of us should consider the interests of the private shipowner in foreign trade who is manfully carrying the burden of competition unassisted by the Government. I have weighed this matter carefully and long, have taken advice freely, and have come to a mature and well-considered conclusion. I might come to you with figures in excess of those which I think should really be put into effect in order that we might trade together. This would not only be impossible when you are dealing with the Government, but would also be repugnant to my sense of fairness. I will, therefore, tell you that I am convinced that the economic conditions at the present time fully warrant a reduction in marine wages. I am convinced that the amount of this reduction must be not less than 15 per cent of the present wage scales. I am convinced that the maintenance of overtime, which has been subject to such notorious abuses and which is so foreign to the spirit and customs of the sea, is improper and that it should be virtually eliminated. I am convinced that the continuation of the night deck and engineer officers is not warranted and that there should be also a substantial reduction in the subsistance allowance, and such other modifications of the working rules should be made as will make for efficiency and economy of operation.

These are my views of a reasonable adjustment of this present matter and the basis on which the Shipping Board must and will act.

These matters so vital to the success of our merchant marine should be considered and adjusted on a reasonable basis. What I have stated above represents the Shipping Board's views of what constitute a reasonable basis. The Shipping Board, as trustee of the money of the people of the United States, cannot compromise a vital principle.

It must insist upon equitable readjustment of the present wage scale and working conditions in order to efficiently operate its ships. The United States is determined to have a merchant marine, and the Shipping Board, so far as is possible, is endeavoring to have its ships American manned. I make an earnest appeal to all of you who have the interests of our merchant marine at heart to come with me and the Shipping Board in making the above basis effective and in co-operating to secure a readjustment of these conditions in line with those of other American industries.

Among the organizations represented at the Marine Labor Conference, Cosmos Club, April 27, 1921, are the following: Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, International Seamen's Union, Marine Firemen, Oilers and Watertenders' Union, Marine Cooks and Stewards' Union, National Radio Telegraphers' Association, Masters, Mates and Pilots' Association of America, Neptune Association, American Steamship Owners' Association, U. S. Shipping Board.

That negotiations did not end abruptly at this conference was due mainly to the efforts of representatives of the Marine Unions. Succeeding events, however, proved that the break had merely been postponed, and on April 29 Admiral Benson issued another statement, as follows:

The efforts of the United States Shipping Board and the steamship interests to avert a break with marine labor have come to naught. The refusal of the men to recognize the need for readjustment on a reasonable basis has ended prolonged negotiations. The Shipping Board has endeavored to meet the men in the fairest and most conciliatory spirit. It is, however, deeply conscious of its obligations to the people of the United States to protect their interests in the merchant marine. It is reluctantly compelled to meet with all the resources at its command the situation which confronts it.

Briefly stated the events preceding the present deadlock are as follows: Until May 1, 1921, working agreements are effective with all marine organizations except licensed deck officers, whose agreement expires August 1, 1921. Early this year depressed conditions of the marine industry promoted a request that the marine organizations make a voluntary readjustment of wages and working conditions. These efforts were futile.

Anticipating the expiration of the agreements on May 1, negotiations with the marine organizations were begun about April 12. An orderly readjustment of wages and working conditions in line with the economic situation was sought. This situation clearly foreshadowed a substantial reduction of wages and virtual elimination of overtime and certain other modifications making for economy of operation. The negotiations were conducted by the Steamship interests with the participation of the Shipping Board as owner of four-sevenths of the American tonnage. During these negotiations the engineers declined to consider any reduction of the wage scale. The sailors, firemen and cooks and stewards declined to discuss wage scale or working conditions until they received satisfactory assurance on certain points. Three of these points involved the enforcement of the Seamen's Act. The position of the Board is that any act of Congress until definitely repealed or modified, so long as it stands upon the Statute book, should be enforced by the Department charged with such enforcement. Another point involved the abolition of the Sea Service Bureau which has been doing most valuable service in the Americanization of the merchant marine. The Shipping Board will not abolish the Sea Service Bureau. An additional point involved a demand for union preference. The Shipping Board as a Government institution must stand for that equality in its relations to the Government which is granted to every citizen of the United States.

Having failed to secure satisfactory assurance the sailors, firemen and cooks and stewards, although urged to do so, refused to discuss the wage scale and working conditions. On April 25 these negotiations reached a deadlock, and were terminated.

In the effort to avert a tie-up of the American [illegible] still active the Chairman of the Shipping Board personally called a conference of the participants in the negotiations of the preceding week. At the outset of the conference the Chairman definitely stated the position of the Shipping Board. This involved a [illegible] on the moderate reduction at 12 per cent and certain modifications of the working conditions. After a general discussion the Chairman adjourned the conference until April 27 to permit opportunity for each group to digest more fully the views voiced by the statement of the Shipping Board's position. When the conference reconvened it was stated that the American Steamship Owners' Association, the Pacific American Association and the Shipowners' Association of the Pacific Coast deferred to the judgment of the Chairman of the Shipping Board and accepted the wage scale and working conditions proposed by him. The marine engineers stated that they were unable to accept the proposal of the Shipping Board, nor did the sailors, firemen, cooks and stewards or wireless operators express a willingness to do so. As a final effort to clear the situation and avoid a break Admiral Benson suggested the acceptance by the marine organizations of the reduced wage scale and a further conference to adjust the working rules. This final conciliatory effort failing to meet with favor the conference was adjourned.

As Chairman of the United States Shipping Board I want to state emphatically that I have the keenest sympathy with the men and officers of the merchant marine. I must, however, record my regret at their misguided action which threatens such a serious blow to our new national shipping enterprise. I would point out that the Shipping Board has made urgent efforts in all directions to reduce expenses. I have cut overhead within the organization. I have effected notable saving in repairs. I have forced reductions in cost of supplies and fuel. I should be remiss indeed in my duty as responsible officer of the Government if I permitted the maintenance of the wartime level of wage costs during a period when economic conditions on the one hand are saving money for individuals, while on the other hand the public treasury, through the same conditions, is being seriously depleted. I have told the men and I now reaffirm it that my record of forty-seven years in the service of the United States Navy should be sufficient testimony that I stand for fairness and honor and the full protection of the interests of the American people.

On May 2, Chairman Benson, of the United States Shipping Board, released the following statement:

A review of the developments of the regrettable marine labor controversy which confronts this country will convince all unbiased citizens that the course pursued by the United States Shipping Board is sound.

Existing economic conditions fully justify the readjustment of wage scales and working conditions on the moderate and reasonable basis announced by the Board. It will be unfortunate if the personnel of the merchant marine persists in refusing to do their part in the labor liquidation of the marine industry while still benefiting by the labor liquidation in other industrial fields.

The Shipping Board is continuing its efforts to keep its ships in operation. The reports from its districts on all coasts show that it is meeting with gratifying success. This indicates that the personnel on its ships agrees with the position taken by the Board.

This is a time for all loyal citizens to rally to the support of their flag. Full protection, both now and after the controversy is settled, will be given by the Shipping Board to all those who come to its assistance in keeping the ships in operation.

The Shipping Board will continue to use all the resources at its command in protecting the interests in the merchant marine of the people of the United States.

A DIFFICULT TASK

Another attempt is to be made this summer by the British Admirality to recover the remainder of the bullion lost when the liner "Laurentic" was mined and sunk off the north coast of Ireland in 1917.

The salvage "Racer," together with the Canadian drifter No. 1, will undertake the salvage work for the fourth time.

The "Laurentic" went down in twenty fathoms of water, four miles off the coast of Donegal, carrying gold bars to the value of between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000.

Four years of pounding by Atlantic gales have reduced the wreck to a shapeless mass, and each year the work has been more difficult. Last summer the divers found that about 250 tons of hull and deck plate had settled on the strong room, where the gold was stored, breaking it in. The result was that only about $25,000 was recovered, compared with $1,250,000 the previous year.

The "Racer" is now equipped, in addition to every possible contrivance for aiding divers, with a "recompression chamber." A diver can reach the bottom in half a minute, but after prolonged immersion at twenty fathoms below the surface half an hour has to be allowed for raising him because if brought up too quickly he is likely to collapse. The great pressure at twenty fathoms saturates the system with nitrogen gas, but in the recompression chamber the nitrogen can be eliminated gradually.

PAY DECREASES 6.4 PER CENT

A general survey of the labor field by the Federal Reserve Board shows that the average decrease in pay per employe in leading industrial plants throughout the country during the past year was 6.4 per cent.

Plants which a year ago employed 1,700,000 workers showed a decline in the numbers employed of 25 per cent. The reduction in the weekly payroll was found to be even greater, amounting to 29.8 per cent.

The inquiry covered establishments reporting 1,303,792 employes April 1, with a total weekly payroll of $36,726,380, as compared with 1,737,717 employes and a total payroll of $52,286,463 April 1, 1920.

To some extent reduction in the payroll was attributed to the fact that last year many plants were working longer hours and often overtime. Supplementary information, however, indicated that actual rates paid have been reduced, especially in the case of unskilled labor. In some instances, particularly in the Southeast, unskilled labor has been reduced fully 50 per cent in wages.

In three of the Federal Reserve Districts, however, increases in the average pay of workers was reported.

It is noticeable that in the Southeast, where labor is either unorganized, or poorly organized, the wages of unskilled labor has been cut 50 per cent; while in some districts, including San Francisco, California, an actual increase in compensation was reported. The figures show that the law of supply and demand operates only in restricted form, where organization of the workers is sufficiently strong to afford protection against employers taking advantage of temporary industrial depression.

NEW EUROPE-BRAZIL LINE

Emigration from Europe to Brazil and increased demands for passenger service has resulted in the establishment of new steamer lines in addition to extension of those already operating.

A joint steamship service from Europe to South America, known as the Rotterdam-South America Line, has been organized by the Van Nievelt Goudriaan & Co.'s Steam Navigation Co. and the Holland-American Line. There will be two distinct fortnightly services from Rotterdam, Hamburg, and Antwerp; one to Montevideo, Buenos Aires, and Rosario, and the other to Pernambuco, Bahia, Rio de Janeiro, and Santos. The latter line was inaugurated with the Dutch steamer "Zaandijk," formerly the "German Silesia" of the Hamburg-American Line, of 4,103 gross tons, which has accommodations for about thirty passengers. Other steamers of the line scheduled to call at Bahia are the "Procyon," "Sirrah," "Amsteldijk," and "Mirach," all first-class steamers under the Dutch flag.

This line is running in direct competition with the British, French, and Dutch steamship companies in the South Atlantic Conference, which, by granting deferred rebates, has obtained a strong hold on the freight movement between Europe and South America.

Americanism and Honor

The seamen's strike and the printing trades' strike show how Americanism and honor can be debased by employers.

Vessel owners are attempting to cut wages, and in their greed for profits have cast aside every pretense and regard for an American merchant marine.

They have even refused to agree that they will give preference to Americans in employment and insist on nullifying the Seamen's law that they may compete with the cheapest labor on the seven seas.

The Seamen's law is based on the proven fact that American standards on American vessels force other maritime nations to meet this standard to hold their employes when they arrive at American ports.

This system, the seamen prove by statistics, is attracting the American boy to the sea.

The seamen also show that sea power is not in vessels, but in men—that ships can be easily built, but an American spirit can not be inculcated in non-American seamen working under debasing conditions.

The seamen and marine engineers offered to submit the issue to President Harding, and agreed to abide by his decision, but this was refused.

The public press and statesmen have thundered for an American merchant marine, but these voices are silent on the vessel owners' policy while the stage is set to smash the unions of seafarers, kill the Seamen's law and get hold of the hundreds of merchant vessels owned by the Government, which will then be disposed of at handsome profits by business buccaneers.

This is the "Americanism" that vessel owners, who own stock in foreign steamship companies, their political agents and editorial scribblers believe in.

The "Americanism" of vessel owners is paralleled by the "honor" of printing trades' employers who agreed with their organized workers to install the forty-four-hour week in periodical and commercial printing establishments on May 1, 1921.

This agreement was made two years ago and checked a shorter work week movement at that time, as the printing trades believed they could secure through negotiation what they would have to enforce by costly strike.

The employers are now attempting to capitalize a vicious anti-union propaganda of the past two years.

They have broken their pledge and a nation-wide strike is on.

Peace in industry can not be even approximated by such brand of "Americanism" and "honor."

The Lenines and Trotskys need have no fear that their cause will lose adherents in this land of the free while such employers are immune from public opinion.

Seamen Forced Out

Admiral Benson of the Shipping Board has announced that any company that operates ships owned by the Government that agrees to last year's wage rates to marine engineers and seamen, will have their ships taken from them.

The workers are striking against wage reductions that will total more than 45 per cent because of the re-establishment of the twelve-hour day and the abolishment of overtime. The Shipping Board and vessel owners are a unit in opposing the seafarers.

The workers made every attempt to avoid a strike. They offered to leave the entire question to President Harding and accept any decision he would make. Admiral Benson refused, on the ground that he did not want to "burden the President." The workers asked if American citizens would be given first preference in employment, and second preference to workers who have declared their intention of becoming American citizens. Admiral Benson refused to give this pledge and professional patriots ignore the first statement of its kind made by an American naval officer.

The men forwarded a communication to the President in which they offered to abide by any decision he would make. The President referred the matter to members of his cabinet, who discussed the matter with the interested parties.

Mooney Was "Jobbed"

In an affidavit supporting Thomas J. Mooney's claim for a new trial, Superior Court Judge Griffin declares that Mooney was wrongfully convicted. Judge Griffin presided at the Mooney trial. The jurist reaffirms former declarations by him that the prosecution's evidence has been entirely discredited because of evidence that has been discovered since the trial ended.

"The matter has now become," said the Trial Judge, "one not merely affecting the Mooney case, but it involves a much larger and more important consideration, viz: the entire removal from judicial proceedings of any suspicion of injustice or taint, in order that the courts shall have the respect and confidence of the people."

Calls Seamen Degraded

Changed conditions at sea during two hundred years have brought the seaman down from "the most dignified of laboring men until he is now at the mudsills of society," declared Andrew Furuseth, president of the International Seamen's Union, before a House committee in opposing modification of the application of the Seamen's Act to Great Lakes shipping.

Any reductions of standards in working conditions, he said, would only serve international shipping interests in their attempts to destroy the American merchant marine.

Ship Fruit in Gas Cars

A new plan for shipping fruit wherein an atmosphere of carbon dioxide gas is substituted for the refrigerator car, is announced in Berkeley, California. Experiments show that fresh fruits can be transported by freight cars across the country in carbon dioxide gas at one-tenth the cost of operating refrigerator cars.

World's Workers

School teachers of Edmonton, Canada, have won their strike for recognition of the Teachers' Federation and the principle of collective bargaining. The strike was in operation two weeks.

Two Communists were killed and three wounded at Ascoli Piceno, Tuesday, when extreme Nationalists and Communists engaged in a revolver battle, according to recent Rome dispatches.

Latest news from Europe shows the strikes of engineers and seamen of Sweden and Norway progressing favorably for the Marine workers. Over 50 per cent of the Norwegian merchant vessels are tied up, while those which are running are operating under union wages and conditions.

The port workers of Buenos Aires have been on strike since May 9 against the ("American Plan") open shops. They notified the Government they would not return to work until assurances had been given that the non-union labor which the Labor Protective Association of Employes had announced it intended using would not be permitted to work.

Proving how far they have advanced from the missionary-eating stage, native workers of the Fiji Island are on strike for a six-hour-day and five-day week. The highly civilized employers are astounded at some of the strikers' demands, which would do credit to advanced American ideas. Among other things they demand sanitary housing, medical attendance, etc.

Development of the co-operative movement in Italy is revealed by figures just published by the Instituto Nazionale di Credito per la Co-operazione, which was created to provide the necessary means for financing co-operative organizations. These figures showing the growth in the volume of the business of the society are as follows: 1917, 89,-084,000 lire; 1918, 162,036,000 lire; 1919, 310,079,000 lire; 1920, 885,000,000 lire.

British railway men have placed an embargo on "Black Leg" coal. Executive officers of the union instructed their followers not to handle any coal loaded by non-union labor. The executive order followed independent action by the Firemen's and Enginemen's Union which instructed its men not to handle non-union or foreign coal. The union announced it would use its strength to see that no member was "victimized" for obeying the order. The decision again brought the Nation face to face with the threat of a general strike.

Militarists are always deadly enemies of labor everywhere, and this fact was proved once more in England last week, when Brigadier General Page-Crof, representative of the National party in the Commons declared "the Labor leaders are hand in glove with Nicolai Lenine, head of the Bolshevik Government of Russia." The avowed attitude of the workers to restore a return to "normalcy" is slowly and surely bringing the nation to a state where the people are demanding an end and just settlement. Efforts to force the workers into subjection have failed dismally, and false patriotism, the last resort of scoundrels, is to be used as a means of discrediting the strikers.

Pacific Coast Marine

Laden with a general cargo of merchandise for Williams-Dimond & Co., the freighter Effingham arrived at San Francisco last week from Antwerp via the Panama Canal.

A reduction of from 10 to 20 per cent has been announced by the Pacific Coast North Atlantic westbound conference on certain building materials.

San Diego reports shipping at that port, other than vessels of the Navy, is virtually at a standstill, although passenger and freight service to lower coast points has not been interrupted.

A reduction of 50 cents per ton on sugar and pineapples between Hawaiian ports and San Francisco has been announced by the Matson Navigation Company.

The ten thousand-ton oil tanker "Bohemian Club" was launched last week at the Moore Shipbuilding plant in Oakland. The "Bohemian Club" is the first Government-owned vessel to be named after a social organization.

The steamer "Yale" has resumed her run between San Francisco and San Pedro. The crew has been signed up at the old wage scale. On June 1 the "Harvard," sister ship of the "Yale," will be placed in the San Pedro-San Francisco run. She will sail every five days.

After signing up a year's agreement with the marine unions last week, the China Mail liner "Nanking," Captain T. H. Dobson in command, sailed for Hongkong and way ports. Until Tuesday, when the China Mail signed up the ship's crew at the old wage scale, it was believed in shipping circles that the "Nanking" would be tied up indefinitely.

The Williams Line steamship "Willhilo" was forced to turn down two thousand tons of cargo offered here, her freight capacity having been already filled by merchandise accumulated since the strike. Harry Evans of E. C. Evans & Sons, who returned recently from New York, states that shipping on the Atlantic Coast is showing the effect of the tie-up.

The Portland Public Docks Commission is considering a proposal to supply refrigeration facilities for Idaho and Eastern Washington apple shippers, who have arranged to export their products to Atlantic and European ports by the water route through Portland. F. V. Martin of the Earl Fruit Company predicts that the bulk of the fruit crop of the Northwest will pass through Portland.

A direct freight service between San Francisco and Galveston, Texas, will be established on June 5, when the freighter "Lake Gunni" sails for the Texas port. Officials of the line said that they will maintain the same eastbound rates for Galveston as apply to New Orleans. Arrangements have been made for the "Lake Gunni" to call at Seattle, Portland, Ore., and San Pedro.

The Port of Los Angeles Stevedoring and Ballast Company, of which Captain C. F. Klitgard of San Francisco is the president and Captain A. R. Paulsen the general manager, has opened offices at 629 Beacon street, Los Angeles. They will engage in a general stevedore business at that port. Captain Klitgard is now engaged in a similar business in San Francisco and is well known as a former master of sailing vessels in the lumber fleet. Captain Paulsen has long been known at San Pedro.

In order to preserve California fresh fruits and vegetables on the long voyage between San Francisco and Australian ports, the freighter "West Camargo" of the General Steamship Corporation was taken to the Union Construction Company's plant in Oakland, where a cooling system will be installed. The "West Camargo" arrived in port last week from Sydney. Officers of the vessel said that the demand for California fruit in Australia is increasing with the arrival of every shipment.

Charter of the ten thousand-ton tanker "Swift Scout" for a grain cargo for the United Kingdom was announced at Portland last week by the Northern Grain and Warehouse Company. Terms are private. The tanker was only recently completed in Portland by the Northwest Bridge and Iron Company for the Swift-Sure Oil interests, and because of the lull in the oil trade she has remained tied up with her fleetmates in the local harbor. As she is a privately owned craft, the Swift-Sure will not come under the dictate of the Shipping Board regarding wages.

Twelve Standard Oil tankers are now tied up, leaving two of the oil fleet in operation. The "W. S. Miller" is on the way to Seattle from Baton Rouge, and the company expects to lay her up on arrival. The second ship still in use is the "K. R. Kingsbury," which sailed from San Francisco April 10, and is bound for London, carrying sixty-five thousand barrels of oil, the second of five shipments of California oil scheduled for shipment to Great Brittain this year. No Standard Oil steamships have been laid up before during the last fifteen years, officials of the company say.

So great has increased the volume of sea transportation of perishable fruits and vegetables from California to Atlantic Coast ports that the new freighter "Charles H. Cramp" of the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Steamship Corporation has had installed from stem to stern a complete cooling system. The "Charles H. Cramp," which is now in Baltimore, will ply between that port and San Francisco. The ever increasing demand in the east for California fruits and vegetables is the reason for transforming the "Charles H. Cramp" from a freighter to what might be called a "floating refrigerator."

With contributions of foodstuffs and clothing from the Pacific Coast States for the stricken population of Armenia, the freighter "Esther Dollar" will sail from San Francisco on June 6 for Constantinople. The "Esther Dollar," which is one of the largest freighters plying in the Pacific, will carry fifteen hundred tons of foodstuffs, besides several tons of clothing, for distribution in Armenia. She will be the first vessel to sail from San Francisco since the war with relief supplies. On her port and starboard sides, amidships, will be painted in large white letters the inscription: "Pacific Coast—Near East Relief—Constantinople."

Announcement has been made that on the afternoon of June 3, when the liner "Venezuela" steams out through the Golden Gate en route to Baltimore, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company will have inaugurated a passenger service with sailings every three weeks between San Francisco and Baltimore, via the Panama Canal and way ports. The "Columbia" and "Ecuador," like their sister ship, the "Venezuela," veterans of the San Francisco-India run, also will be placed in the new service. On July 25 the "Empire State," sister ship of the "Creole State" and "Golden State," will make her maiden trip as part of the new fleet when she sails from Baltimore.

Due to the tie-up in various Pacific Coast ports of oil tankers and lumber vessels, a serious shortage in the two products is reported in Hawaii. The tie-up of coastal lumber schooners already has caused Pacific Coast lumber mills to slacken production pending the outcome of the strike. Instead of laying off their clerical forces, as had already been done by various companies on the Atlantic Coast, Pacific Coast shipping circles decided to take advantage of the situation by granting immediate vacations to employes. A serious drop in business is reported by the various launch and towboat companies. Teaming and stevedoring work along the waterfronts also has shown a marked decrease during the past week.

Expansion of the trade between the United States and Mexico during the last year has hastened the establishment of the new coast to coast service of the Pacific Mail, which is scheduled to start next month with the sailing of the steamer "Venezuela." According to figures just issued by the Department of Commerce the exports from the United States have jumped from an average of $50,000,000 a year prior to 1917 to approximately $280,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1921. Despite declines in exports to the Orient and other parts of the world, the trade with Mexico has maintained an average increase. The exports for February, the last month for which figures are available, amounted to $25,000,000 as compared with $12,000,000 for the same month last year. The increase in exports is shown in the fiscal years since 1918. The exports that year were $107,000,000, while in 1919 they had reached $120,000,000, and last year were $144,000,000.

The steamers "Colin H. Livingstone" and the "C. C. Morse," operating under the house flag of the United States Transport Company, has been withdrawn from the services of that company and turned over to the North Atlantic and Western Steamship Company upon orders of Admiral Benson of the Shipping Board. The vessels were taken from the United Transport Company because the company had violated a dictum of Admiral Benson that no operators of Shipping Board vessels sign up with the unions under the old wage and working conditions. According to reports, McCormick & McPherson are supervising the unloading of the steamer "C. C. Morse" at San Pedro. The vessel arrived there from the East coast, where she was seized by the Shipping Board. The "Livingstone" was seized at Seattle. The United States Transport Company has three other vessels subjected to the rules of the Shipping Board. One of the three still retained by the company, the "Clemence C. Morse," is now en route to San Francisco from Baltimore. Whether or not the Shipping Board will seize all of the company's vessels is not known. The company recently established the intercoastal service to this and other ports of the Pacific Coast.

BENSON'S CHANGED ATTITUDE

Towards the close of the year 1920, when sudden and uncontrolled liquidation of inflation was taking place throughout the civilized world, employers and employes everywhere were eagerly and earnestly making endeavors to meet the situation as it confronted them. The employers' efforts were directed towards maintenance of the huge volume of profits which had been enjoyed during the war period, while the workers struggled to maintain their standard of living.

Those interests which had derived the most benefit from war activities felt return to normal conditions in the most pronounced manner; therefore, shipping circles did not escape the effects of a general adjustment.

The United States Shipping Board, which controls approximately four-sevenths of American shipping, was adversely affected, in the same manner as private shipowners, and in the month of January, 1921, Admiral Benson, Chairman of the Board, in directing attention to the external circumstances, issued the following public statement:

> The conditions which now prevail in the ocean-carrying trade have forced the United States Shipping Board as well as private shipowners to lay up a great many vessels, which automatically sets adrift a large number of seafaring men.
> As the representative of the largest shipowning corporation in the world, the chairman of the Shipping Board feels that it is timely to invite the attention of owners and operators to the fact that the largest factors in vessel expense under the conditions which prevail at this time are repairs and fuel.
> While the policy of every prudent owner and operator is rightfully toward reduction in vessel expense, the chairman of the Shipping Board earnestly cautions all shipowners and operators not to be misled at this time into the employment of foreigners merely because it may be possible to obtain them at a lower schedule of pay than is satisfactory to American seamen.
>
> The true goal of American effort is to increase the efficiency of operation. The most certain means to this end is improvement in the efficiency of sea labor. This improvement as now has been brought about by getting the American man afloat, and can best be continued by keeping him afloat.
> The chairman of the Shipping Board appeals in the strongest possible terms to every right-minded and patriotic American citizen who owns, operates or has any interest whatever in American shipping, to seize this opportunity to collect American seamen in American ships rather than to drive him from the sea by yielding to the temptation of minor savings in the wage scale.

At that time, and in full accord with the ideas, as expressed by Admiral Benson, the International Seamen's Union of America was exerting every effort to bring about consummation of the highest standard of efficiency in the American Merchant Marine. Schools in seamanship and efficiency were operated at expense of the union on the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts, and at the annual Convention of the International body ambitious preparations were made for fulfilment of the idea.

Meanwhile private operators of American shipping, in uniformity with the shipowners of Britain and Scandinavia, were preparing a drive upon the seafarers' organizations. They were planning to put into operation conditions reacting over thirty years, and to wipe out every improvement made during that period. They would not even consider a wage based upon equity; but intended to arbitrarily put into effect a cut which approximates from 20 to 50 per cent, according to the particular trade or locality.

In order to assure success of their unfair program, they inveigled the U. S. Shipping Board into their combination. At this present time the heavy work of union wrecking rests in the hands of Admiral Benson, and he "continues to use all the resources" at his command to subjugate and degrade American seamen; the accomplishment of which would inevitably result in once more driving the American away from the sea.

Every recent act and statement of the Shipping Board Chairman has been entirely at variance with his previous policy. In the light of enormous profits obtained by shipping concerns, we are unable to understand how Admiral Benson can consistently exclaim: "All of us should consider the interests of the private shipowner in foreign trade who is manfully carrying the burden of competition unassisted by the Government."

In our sublime innocence we have nursed the belief that amounts appropriated to the Shipping Board were purposed for maintenance and upbuilding of our Government-owned merchant fleet, and that the head of the Shipping Board was a public servant, serving only the interests of the American people.

The fact has always been self-evident that no man can serve two masters. Perhaps an attempt to disprove such evidence is responsible for Admiral Benson's sudden change of front, and his autocratic attitude towards the seafarers of America.

As an example of inconsistency, the Administration of the Shipping Board is perfection.

"To him that hath shall be given, and to him that hath not, shall be taken away," seems to be the text adopted for the sermon to be preached by our representatives at Washington. Propaganda of the commercialized press indicates the direction of "wind." Editorial comment in reactionary papers is instituting the usual campaign of education. This time it attempts to prepare public opinion for acceptance of a sales tax to replace the levies which "big business" desires to evade.

BUREAUCRATIC LAWLESSNESS

Contempt for law leads to chaos; chaos leads to anarchy, therefore the ever-present necessity for observance of and respect for the laws of the country. The state is generally conceived to reflect the distinctive qualities of the population, therefore its faults or virtues are more glaringly apparent.

Since inception of the present lock-out respect for law by a number of vessel operators has ceased to exist and there is every evidence that this condition is not confined to the private operators.

In efforts to "use all the resources at its command," the Shipping Board seems to have suspended the law for the time being. The following press item from Portland, Oregon, is enlightening:

"'The United States Government has fined itself $1000, all because of a row between the Collector of Customs and the Shipping Board authorities. When the steamship 'West Ivan' sailed early today for the Orient she lacked the regulation number of seamen and was fined $500 by Collector of Customs Will Moore. Another $500 fine was assessed because the ship did not have a full complement of officers."

The situation elucidated is a serious one. The navigation laws of the United States intended to safeguard life and property and set at naught by a governmental bureau in order to fulfil the dictum of its executive.

Such action contains far-reaching possibilities, because the example is sure to be followed by other operators, to the confusion of all laws of safety, navigation and nation. The responsibility for loss of life or property which might occur under such circumstances will be placed where it belongs by the American people, but to the average man prevention seems to be preferable to cure or penalty.

RIGHT WILL PREVAIL

It has been conceded that the conscience of the American people is embodied in the Seamen's Act. Therefore, it will be well for that select coterie, who have determined to take advantage of the present tendency of mercenary politicians towards reaction, to go slow in their efforts for destruction of the Seamen's "Bill of Rights." Reintroduction of any form of involuntary servitude will be resented by the whole popluation, and those pigmy politicians responsible for tampering with the expression of an American idea will be relegated to everlasting obscurity.

The ruthless efforts by shipowners to degrade the seamen's calling has brought into effect a solidarity of the seafarers that is surprising in its intensity. When this present little controversy has become but a memory there will remain certain lasting effects, chief of which will be a better understanding and a closer sympathy between the deck and engine room forces aboard ship. Friendlier relations between officers and regular crews will undoubtedly result in greater respect for each other, and maintenance of a higher standard of discipline. The latter will be a natural sequence to the former.

CONCILIATION (?)

As an indication of what was considered the conciliatory (?) mood in which the combined ship operators were willing to meet their employes, the following from "Nauticus" issue of April 9, 1921, is worthy of consideration:

"Not only will sailors, firemen and stewards have to accept a radical cut in wages, but the turn of masters, mates and engineers is to follow, as soon as existing agreements expire. Next will come the turn of longshoremen, who last year were wise enough to accept the same scale without insisting upon an increase. Both sea and shore labor is still remunerated on war basis and this anomaly cannot survive long, considering the trend of the time and freights being almost on peace basis. There is not much encouragement in sight as regards establishing a substantially higher freight basis than the present. But there is a wide margin yet to be traversed in the way of reducing operating costs, and this will have to be done if the American shipping industry is to survive the present crisis. It cannot be expected that the prospective victims will tamely submit to the reduction and big words and threats are sure to be bandied about. But there is no way out of the situation, except paring down and though much bluff may be indulged in on either side, there is no question about the shipowners' side winning in the end, for the Shipping Board is no longer dominated by the fear of offending organized labor."

HUGE SHIPPING PROFITS

Tremendous profits are revealed in the following brief report by economic advisors to the International Seamen's Union on proposed wage reductions in the shipping industry:

"Wage reductions in the shipping industry are not justified either by economic conditions or by decreased living costs. Wage reductions at the present time are not only unjust and inhuman, but unnecessary.

Six Years of Prosperity for Owners

"The financial records of the leading American steamship lines show unparalleled and undiminished prosperity for the past six years. The stockholders of the companies have enjoyed their share of the prosperity in large dividends, while millions of dollars in surplus have been accumulated.

"The four big companies operating on the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts have made net profits in the years 1914 to 1920 inclusive which average a total of $52,180,271 per company, or over 230 per cent of their common stock. Out of these net profits dividends have been declared which made a total average for the six-year period for each company of no less than 108 per cent of the common and 38 per cent of the preferred stock outstanding. And, finally, after all charges have been met and dividends paid these companies have accumulated a surplus during the six years that average $33,060,473 for each company.

"The concerns included by these figures are the Atlantic, Gulf and West Indies Lines, including, as subsidiaries, the Clyde, Mallory, New York and Cuba Mail, and the New York and Porto Rico Steamship Companies; the International Mercantile Marine Company, including the American, Atlantic Transport, Leyland and Red Star Lines; the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and the United Fruit Company.

Last Year Most Prosperous of All

"That this prosperity has continued into the present year is shown by the fact that the average dividends paid by these companies last year were 100 per cent higher than any other year since 1913, and by the additional fact that the average surplus accumulated last year after dividend payments had been made was $1,122,000 greater than the average surplus for the six years 1914-1920 inclusive.

"The United Fruit Company, for instance, declared last year cash dividends amounting to 11½ per cent on its capital stock as well as a stock dividend of 100 per cent, and still had a surplus remaining of $21,599,040. That its prosperity continues is shown by the fact that on April 15, 1921, a further dividend of 6 per cent was declared.

"The Pacific Mail Steamship Company declared dividends last year amounting to 50 per cent. The average dividend payments of this concern for the past six years were 40 per cent. The surplus earned after these disbursements were made has amounted to $5,224,383 or 348 per cent of the common stock.

Prosperity Tabulated

"The records of the several companies follow:

	Net Profit 1914-1920 inc. per cent of Common Stock	Total Dividend payments 1914-1920 per cent on Common	Preferred	Total Surplus
Atlantic Gulf and West Indies S. S. Co.	162.7	46	25	$19,014,944
International Mercantile Marine Co.	124.2	0	72	41,826,877
Pacific Mail S. S. Co.	437.9	240	16	5,224,383
United Fruit Co.	196.7	153.5	—	66,176,490
Average, all companies	230.3	108.5	37.6	$33,060,473

No Prosperity for the Employes

"Figures from the records of the union show a very different picture of the economic condition of the workers in the industry. The workers have had no real share in the prosperity of the past six years. Earnings of firemen and seamen have been and still are entirely inadequate to maintain a living consistent with health and decency, while the decline in prices has not been great enough to appreciably relieve the situation.

"Seamen can earn on the basis of present wage scales $935 a year and firemen but $990. These figures, for the sake of conservatism, represent maximum earnings and not average earnings.

"Unemployment which averages a minimum of a month in normal years, reduces the actual earnings of firemen $90 and of seamen $85 per year.

Workers Receive Less Than Living Wage

"The most conservative official United States estimate shows that a minimum living wage at the present time is $1,114 for a single man and $2,384 for a normal family. This represents the lowest amount necessary during a year to maintain a standard of health and decency.

"These figures show that firemen receive $1,394 and seamen $1,449 less than the

ON THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COASTS

Contributed by the Atlantic and Gulf Seamen's Union

BRITISH SKIPPER'S VAIN TRICK

"For ways that are dark and tricks that are vain, the heathen Chinee is peculiar," but, apparently, there is no monopoly of this peculiarity. Take, for an instance, the "Limejuice" skipper who manipulated himself into receipt of the "short end" of the following court decision:

United States District Court, Southern District of New York.

Victor Mattes and Others Against The Standard Transportation Company.

Libel in personam for seamen's wages.

The respondent is a British corporation and at the time in question was the owner of the "Wabasha," flying the British flag. She sailed from Bombay in the early part of 1920 and reached New York with a Chinese crew in April of that year. This crew deserted while in New York, and the Master was forced to engage another crew, consisting of forty-five or forty-seven men, of whom the libelants, twenty-nine in number, were a part. They were made up of various nationalities, largely Portugese, who were supplied by a boarding-house keeper. The "Wabasha" was a coal-burning steamer, and the men shipped as seamen, firemen, quartermasters, oilers and coal passers. Some of them had prior discharges and all swore at this trial that they had former experience as seamen.

The Master, the chief officer, the second officer, the second engineer and steward were called for the respondent and swore that the crew was incompetent. The quartermasters could not steer a straight course; the cook so cooked the food that the crew were in constant complaint, the seamen were unable to do anything but the simplest duties. The second engineer testified that the coal passers refused to heave up the ashes so that the firemen were unable to work the boilers, and the speed of the ship was reduced from ten and a half to eight or nine knots an hour. The Master swore that the men could not get the ashes out, and that one of them hurt his hand in doing so; that the officers constantly complained that there was no sailor among the crowd; that they were themselves always complaining of their food; that off Gibraltar he threatened to call a British man-of-war, apparently because of their complaint about food. On his cross-examination, however, he testified that their conduct was not bad conduct; that they tried to obey orders, but were incompetent.

The steamer made the port of Algiers on May 10, when the Master called the crew on deck, and according to his statement, asked them whether they would be willing to be sent back to New York. He says that they agreed, and the other officers say so. The crew, of whom many were called, unanimously swore that they performed their duties and were ordered off the ship, on which they were willing to serve out their articles. In any event, they went ashore in small boats and the Master, on the 11th, shipped an Algerian crew at £25 a head to Calcutta, with maintenance ashore and return to Algiers added. (The Master said that they would not serve beyond Calcutta.) At that port this Algerian crew was sent back by passenger steamer, and a Lascar crew shipped at about twenty-four or twenty-six rupees a month, equal to eight dollars or less. This third crew worked the ship back to New York.

The libelant, together with the rest of the New York crew, were sent home via Havre and their wages paid until June 8, when they arrived. As the "Wabasha" reached New York on September 15, they claim for loss of wages between those dates less what each had been able to earn meanwhile.

Silas B. Axtell, for the libelants.

Courtland Palmer, for the respondent.

LEARNED HAND, D. J.—It was apparently the early rule that mere incompetence would not justify a Master in discharging a seaman at a foreign port: Capillo v. Bristol Packing Co., 112 Fed. R. 439; Sherwood v. Mackintosh, Fed. Cas. 12,778 (Crabbe). The Master's powers were only to degrade the seamen to such service as he was capable of performing, and upon eventual payment to deduct from his services whatever was the loss occasioned by his incompetence. In this respect the incompetence was put upon a different basis from insubordination or deliberate shirking of duty: The Fanny, 86 Fed. R. 442, or drunkenness, "The Hayden," 111 Fed. R. 542. I am not prepared to say, however, that incompetence may not be a sufficient ground for discharge even in a foreign port (R. S. Section 4581) at least where the Master provides for the repatriation of the seamen, and especially, as here, where he pays wages until the arrival home. Although the Master has some opportunity upon shipping a crew to ascertain their former experience by their discharge papers, they engage, nevertheless, as competent to perform the duties which they undertake, and it seems to me a harsh rule that would require a Master to continue an incompetent crew, however subordinate and ready, providing he is willing himself to assure their return home. In any event, that case can await its arising, for it is not before me here.

The respondent must, however, prove just grounds for the discharge, and the whole circumstances of this case do not satisfy me that the excuse given by the Master, though corroborated by his officers, was the true reason. It seems to me inherently unlikely that forty-five men, many of whom certainly had had prior service, and all of whom say that they had, should turn out to be wholly incompetent, every man of them, for the comparatively simple duties which devolved upon them. The specifications of their incompetency are vague and contradictory. The engineer says that they refused to heave up the ashes; the Master merely says that, though willing they could not, something which it is very hard to believe. It is, of course, possible that the quartermasters could not steer a straight course, and that the oilers were not expert, but that did not involve the whole crew. No doubt there were complaints of food; there generally are, but such complaints could scarcely justify the threat to call a war vessel. The Master expressly disclaims any insubordination, and their complaints must be put down to sailor's growls. On their face, the charges bear an appearance of being trumped up, nor are they mended by the two letters written to the owners on May 8, which may well have been to lay a foundation to his case. Again, I think it unlikely that the men were willing to go home, and thought they would have a "jolly holiday." Work proved scarce when they got here, and it is fair to assume that they knew it would be so. They swear that they had a good berth, and there is no reason to doubt them, if the abundance of food, which the officers insist they gave, was in fact supplied. Moreover, why did he retain the two cooks, around whom much of the trouble centers. He says that they did not want to leave, but a more likely reason I suspect was that Arab cooking would be worse. Was there an adequate motive for wishing to be rid of them? I think there was.

The "Wabasha" had shipped a Chinese crew at Calcutta or Bombay, and these deserted in New York. Their desertion may be attributed to the recent laws which enable them to ship here at higher wages, and the result was that intended, i. e., to compel the Captain either to raise his wages to the American standard, $85 or $95, or to take on a new crew at those rates. Finding his hand so forced, it was obviously to his advantage, if he could, to get rid of this crew as soon as possible. The alternatives open to him were three: he could discharge them and ship them back to Algiers, as he did; he could take them to Calcutta and there discharge them, or he could carry them back to New York. If he discharged them at Algiers he must get an Algerian crew to work the ship on to Calcutta, and these in turn could be discharged and sent back and a Lascar crew substituted with merely nominal wages.

There were, indeed, serious losses involved in discharging the American crew at Algiers and shipping an Algerian crew to Calcutta. The cost of shipping the American crew back was about $12,600, and the cost of the Algerian crew $13,000, making a total of over $25,000. The cost of the American crew between June 8 and September 15, was about $12,000, making a difference there of $13,600, which the ship lost. This, the respondent answers, is conclusive evidence against the Master's putative motive. I think that this analysis of the situation is not complete. The Master was under engagement to take the American crew back to New York; he would there have had to engage a second American crew, presumably at the same high wages. Had he carried them to Calcutta and discharged them, the expense would have been greater, and by discharging them at Algiers and employing an Algerian crew only to Calcutta, he had his ship free at that place and could then begin with a Lascar crew for a round trip, which would end again in India. Once he got his ship manned with cheap labor, he could continue to work her at Indian wages, and he would make up his loss in five months. If he did not, he was condemned indefinitely to pay American wages. True, in so doing he ran the risk that the Lascar crew in turn would desert at New York just as the Chinese crew had done, but that depended upon his being able to keep his Lascars out of the hands of those who might advise them of their rights, in New York. That risk, it appears to me, he might well have accepted. Moreover, it seems to me very strange that he could not get his Algerians to work on the ship back from Calcutta to Algiers, but must hire them only for the voyage out. That is an unexplained and, indeed, surprising circumstance, which fits much better with the plan which I think he had in mind from the outset to get his wage scale back upon the Indian level.

Thus merely, as between the officers' assertions, which are to me significantly vague, and the crew's denials, I should find it impossible to accept the excuse. There is, however, another circumstance which appears to me to put the case beyond any doubt. The Master was in a port where there was a British consul, whose sanction he professes orally to have obtained to what he insists was a voluntary discharge. Now, Section 188 of the British Merchant Shipping Act of 1894, provides that no master shall discharge a seaman without the "sanction" of the local consul endorsed on the articles, and the consul must examine into the causes of the discharge before he sanctions it. In cases of "leaving behind," he must issue a certificate stating the causes thereof, and if the Master violates this section, he commits a misdemeanor.

So it makes no difference whether this was a case of strict discharge or leaving behind, the Master did not do what the law required of him, and was in any event guilty of a misdemeanor. It is a horn-book law for masters that discharges must be approved by consuls, and the law of the United States is in substance the same. (Revised Statutes, Sections 4580, 4581.) That the Master thus violated the law and did not get the "sanction" endorsed upon the articles, or a "certificate" stating the causes, is to my mind, of the utmost significance. Ship's articles are intended to be the authoritative evidence of the agreement, and the vise of the Consul is expressly to protect seamen (and indeed masters as well), from just the uncertainties which arise from disputes like this. I do not believe that any master with a good case against his crew for "incompetence" (Revised Statutes, Section 4581), or "unfitness" (British Merchant Shipping Act, Section 188), would have discharged the whole body of them without this protection to himself. Least of all would he have omitted this precaution, if, as he says, they were all willing to be discharged; and there could have been no dispute to settle and no doubt of the result.

Therefore, it seems to me as clearly proved as such facts can be, that the discharge was colorable, a cover to avoid the continued payment of American wages. Whether under British law the discharge, which had never the written sanction of the Consul, could under any circumstances be valid, I need not inquire. It follows that there must be a reference to compute the wages of the libelants between June 8 and September 15, 1920, less such earnings as they made, or could have made, during that time. In addition to wages the libelants are entitled to their keep which the parties have agreed upon at the rate of $10 a week.

There will be an interlocutory decree for the usual reference before a commissioner.

April 26, 1921.

In commenting on the foregoing decision, attorney for the plaintiffs, Silas B. Axtell, states: "This case involves the equalization policy of the Seamen's Act. This is one of the most important decisions that has ever been handed down to my knowledge.

"The facts are so well set forth by the Court that there is no need of further explanatory notes."

The honesty and serious effort of the Judge in this decision, where the interests of capital and labor conflict, is worthy of note. Unfortunately, seamen seldom receive the same consideration or quality of justice as meted out by the eminent jurist, Learned Hand, in this case.

The most valuable lessons that trade unionism can learn are the lessons of patience and mobility—the lesson of how to wait for victory and the lesson of how to change a position in a fight.

Arbitration is the alternative of war. It will never be more than an unattainable ideal to those who are unwilling or unable to put up a fight.

MOLDING THE GOVERNMENT

(By Charles M. Kelley)

What actually happens when producers take an active, intelligent interest in politics and what they may expect when they fail to do so are emphasized by the records made by the four outstanding State Legislatures—outstanding because two of them were made up in large part of progressive members and the other two were dominated by "hard-boiled" reactionaries, controlled by selfish business and political interests.

In New York and Pennsylvania scores of progressive laws, secured after years of struggle, have been wiped off the statute books and evil laws substituted. In Iowa and Wisconsin, where the workers and farmers co-operated in political effort and stood guard in defense of popular rights and liberties, reaction was checked and turned back.

The moral is that the people get exactly the kind of government they deserve.

In Wisconsin, where the general assembly is winding up its term, efforts were made to get through some characteristic reactionary proposals, but all failed. Had the result been otherwise, Governor Blaine, fearless and progressive La Follette supporter, would have been ready with the veto ax.

In Iowa the farmers and workers made a brave fight last fall and, while they did not defeat Senator Cummins or elect their candidate for Governor, they did secure a substantial representation in the Legislature, and by their brilliant and aggressive compaign put the fear of God in the hearts of weak-kneed reactionaries and time-servers and persuaded them to be "good" when the lines were being drawn between popular government and special privilege.

One incident strikingly illustrates this point. The Lower House, of which Iowa had approved a public utilities bill, which contained a joker, extending indefinitely the life of public utility franchises. It was caught by Senator Brookhart in the Senate and exposed by the Iowa Homestead, a courageous, progressive farm paper. The members of the House were frightened and requested, by a vote of seventy to twenty-eight, that the bill be returned from the Senate, where it was being considered. The Senate, controlled by reactionaries, refused to comply with this demand and the objectionable bill was passed.

Governor Nate Kendall, who was relied upon to do what the interests wanted, promptly vetoed the measure, which was a hard blow to the reactionaries. He was told that he was digging his political grave, but was disturbed not a bit, calmly remarking that it would be an illustrious grave.

The reverse of this picture, as presented by Pennsylvania and New York, is not so pleasant.

More than a dozen progressive measures have been removed from the law books of Pennsylvania, which has practically reverted to the condition that obtained twenty-five years ago. Every law providing for non-partisan elections has been repealed and the judiciary and municipal offices have returned to the political pie counter. A quarter of a century ago, when legal textbooks charged that the Pennsylvania Railroad "operated the courts of that State as successfully as it operated its own railroad trains," a movement began for the reform of the judiciary, and before it was successful the dominant political machine suffered two crushing defeats. It required more than twenty years to secure reform election laws, and they have disappeared in a session lasting less than a hundred days.

The workers sustained their most serious reverse when the full-crew bill was repealed, depriving nineteen hundred men of employment and removing safeguards for the general public. This leaves this question exactly where it was sixteen years ago, when the first attempt to secure its enactment failed. After one of those spasms of reform for which Pennsylvania is noted, the Legislature of 1911 approved the workers' proposal. Two succeeding Legislatures repealed it, but each time a Governor saved it with a veto.

The New York Legislature did not pay more attention to the demands of labor than it did to those of the advocates of so-called welfare bills. One of the noticeable features of the session, in fact, was that the leaders turned deaf ears to nearly everything laborites had to say, a rather novel situation for organized labor, which for some years has had some influence in New York affairs. This time Governor Miller was in complete control of the situation.

New York's Anti-Labor Measures

Among the bills passed by the Legislature, in spite of the opposition of labor, were the following:

Amendments to the labor law to permit women to be employed at metal polishing; allowing women to work all night in printing plants; authorizing the payment of wages by check; permitting construction of waterworks without regard to the eight-hour and prevailing wage law; removing a great number of employes of the State Labor Commission from civil service rules; the Lusk bills censoring teaching and school studies; halving appropriations for the State Labor Department; removing hotel employes from the day-of-rest law, and restoring boss-controlled nominating conventions for State and judicial officers.

Combination of labor and farmer forces defeated bill proposing to establish State police systems in Ohio, Indiana and Montana. In Michigan the State police law, in operation one year, was defeated by a decisive vote. The Governor of New Jersey vetoed the constabulary bill passed by the Legislature.

In several States unsuccessful attempts were made to pass industrial court bills patterned after Governor Allen's court in Kansas. This proposal was twice defeated by the Iowa House before its advocates would permit a shroud to be draped around the corpse.

Starvation Marks Open Shop's Progress

Employers have more than realized their ambition to make the workers "eat out of their hands." They have brought thousands of people to a state of actual destitution.

The New York Herald has been investigating conditions in manufacturing districts contiguous to the metropolis and recites a heart-breaking story of abject privation and want. It finds in Stratford, Conn., where eight thousand workers have been idle since last fall, "a condition of poverty among her populace without parallel in the industrial history of New England." Women and children are starving, and emergency charity organizations have been formed to give relief before many of them succumb.

It was not realized that conditions were so bad until five children fainted one day in a public school. School officials made an investigation and found that they had been without food for days, and that hundreds of other children were undernourished.

More than half of the pupils in public schools have since been fed at the beginning of the daily session.

Workers Watch Families Starve

The workers, the Herald reports, are industrious and thrifty and saved money during the war, but the protracted period of idleness has exhausted their resources "and they are now sitting and watching their families slowly starve to death."

Families of five subsist on a bottle of milk and a loaf of bread per day. Many families alternate in eating meals. Those who have breakfast fast until supper time, and those what eat luncheon must get along until breakfast next morning.

The charity appropriation of Stratford was exhausted before winter was half over and it is necessary to make appeals to humane citizens if scores of children and infirm adults are to be saved.

A survey of the Waterbury schools disclosed that more than one thousand children are in a dangerous state of undernourishment. The Red Cross has opened food stations in several schools and has been distributing seven hundred quarts of milk a day to children.

Charity Workers Swamped

Fifteen hundred persons have been registered as unemployed in the municipal employment office at New Britain. An almost impossible task has been imposed on the city charity department. Many applicants for aid have been found to be without food or adequate clothing.

Miss Elizabeth Boswell, secretary of organized charities at Meridan, says that in scores of homes small children have lived since Christmas on bread and coffee.

Little children crying for food, their parents and older brothers and sisters unemployed and hungry, is the pathetic problem that charity workers in New Haven, Danbury and industrial towns are endeavoring to meet to the best of their ability.

PRINTING TRADES GAIN

"The reports from subordinate unions are most encouraging," reports the executive council of the International Typographical Union in its first bulletin on the forty-four-hour movement of the printing trades.

"Not near as many members are on strike as was expected. Large numbers of offices in various jurisdictions went on the forty-four-hour week basis on May 1. All indications point to a settlement in most of the jurisdictions in a short time."

The bulletin states that the membership of the I. T. U. agreed to assess themselves by a large vote.

WASHINGTON LETTER

(By Laurence Todd.)

A New Labor Program

John Lewis of the United Mine Workers can, apparently, have the presidency of the American Federation of Labor handed to him at the Denver convention next month, if he will but say the word to the railroad unions, the maritime unions and the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners.

The particular word these organizations desire to get from Lewis is his assent to a program of consolidation of labor's strength within the Federation on the one hand, and of promotion of industrial democracy upon the other.

Industrial democracy will be the keynote of the progressive forces in the labor movement henceforth. This was clearly indicated in the spirited address of Frank Morrison, secretary of the Federation, at the farewell dinner given recently in honor of William H. Johnston of the Machinists, who has sailed for Russia to inquire into the possibilities of trade with Russia to reopen American factories. Morrison declared that only through industrial democracy, combined with Government ownership, could the railroad problem be solved. He called attention to the fact that the last A. F. of L. convention went on record by an overwhelming majority in favor of that program.

Unemployment with its steady using-up of the savings of four million workers and their families, is sharpening the tongues of union officials. They discover the national administration hostile to them in almost every direction. They find Congress ready to suspend this and that labor legislation at the slightest provocation. They receive blow after blow from the courts. Wages are driven downward in trade after trade, locality after locality, with all the persistent and implacable cruelty of a maniac-driven machine. They find the United States Chamber of Commerce and the various "open shop" associations formed by the National Association of Manufacturers and its allies to be far more efficient than the A. F. of L. in getting immediate results. Organized labor is developing a fighting temper. Its expression at Denver is more than likely to be defiant and constructive, demanding immediate steps toward industrial democracy in all the industries.

Bureaucrats Attack Seafarers

One incident of the week has been the arbitrary action of Chairman Benson of the Shipping Board in cutting wages of all crews on Government vessels 15 per cent. When four of the steamship lines running out of New York signed up with the unions at the old rates of pay Benson served notice that he would take their Government ships away from all companies making such agreements with the men. He would impose his own boycott on the fair employers.

President Harding, to whom the men appealed on April 29 to prevent a strike, has not intervened. He has allowed Admiral Benson to do his utmost to break the unions, while he has permitted Secretary of Labor Davis to hold conferences with the Marine Engineers, the Seamen, the private shipowners and Benson. Thus far these conferences have accomplished nothing. The strike is growing, and the chairman of the Shipping Board continues to apply dictatorial rather than conciliatory methods to the problem.

Labor Has Few Friends

In the Senate, Borah of Idaho has checkmated the move of Moses of New Hampshire to start a Senate investigation of "bolshevism" in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. Moses introduced his resolution aimed at the Amalgamated on the day after the heads of the National Association of Clothing Manufacturers and the National Association of Retail Clothing Dealers had visited Washington. These men are bitter toward the union because its sixty thousand members in and around New York City are winning a five-months' strike against the "open-shop" rule declared by the employers. At the same time, they want to divert public attention from charges of profiteering made against the retailers and manufacturers.

Borah's resolution, which has been favorably reported from committee, calls for an inquiry into the development industrial and labor conditions, profits, etc., of the clothing manufacturing business, the woolen cloth manufacturing business and the retail clothing business during the past seven years, to determine why prices have risen and who has been responsible for the disappearance of sweatshops and the contract labor system.

Of course, the manufacturers and retailers do not want that sort of investigation. And because they control the committee of the Senate, indirectly at least, it is unlikely that the Senate will now undertake any investigation.

A Squeal of Big Business

John B. Andrews, secretary of the American Association for Labor Legislation, who has been the power behind the drafting of most of the workmen's compensation laws in this country, is in Washington in behalf of the Fitzgerald bill, which provides a model workmen's compensation law for the District of Columbia. It is almost identical with the model law on the same subject which was adopted two years ago by the Non-partisan League majority in the North Dakota Legislature at Andrews' suggestion. Hardly has he reached the city before his measure is under fire from the business interests.

"This bill is socialistic, bolshevistic, and communistic, both in its source and intent," shouted J. Robertson Jones, employers' lobbyist on insurance, before the insurance committee of the local Board of Trade recently. "It is virtually the same as the law now in force in North Dakota, and it is only a part of the propaganda of the league which has turned the State of North Dakota into chaos."

It appears that the private insurance companies are sore because they would be excluded from competition with Government insurance of employers under this law. Similar laws have dried up the springs of their revenue from California and other States, and now they use the name of North Dakota as a bugaboo.

Attacked from The Lakes

Before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries the shipowners of the Great Lakes, backed by the merchants and bankers and their political agents, are seeking the suspension of the Seamen's Act as applying to the skill and the hours of crews on the Lakes. The International Seamen's Union of America has four men present to resist the proposal. Andrew Furuseth has been on the stand and Conway, O'Brien and others are assisting him in showing that the scheme is simply one to assist in destroying the union. The measure is known as the Scott bill. Chairman Greene of the committee, who was always an opponent of the La Follette Act, is strongly favorable to this counter-move. He will try to get a favorable report, and will rely upon the dead weight of the reactionary majority in the House and Senate to drive the bill through to the President.

Administration Loses Influence

On the other side of the ledger is the news from the Middle West, to the effect that the Harding administration is losing its hold upon the Republican party and upon the people even more rapidly than did the administration of Taft. William Allen White of Kansas, who has been on a political inquiry tour of Wisconsin, finds that the State is more completely with La Follette today than ever, and that "Fighting Bob" will receive a huge popular majority when he runs for the senatorship again next year. Similar news comes from Minnesota, North Dakota and Iowa, where the anti-labor and anti-farmer forces made big gains last November. The railroad situation, the collapse of agriculture and industry, the pinch of want in the households where unemployment is a grim fact, and the impatience of the people with Harding's indifference to the suffering which "more business in Government" has brought upon the wealth-producers of the country—these things have undermined the confidence with which millions of American workers looked, a few months ago, to the new President.

Secretary of the Treasury Mellon has spoken, this week, on taxation. He wants the excess profits tax abolished, and the higher rates of taxes on the largest private incomes removed. He proposes rates which will save himself—Mellon—millions of dollars.

David H. Blair, of Winston-Salem, N. C., whom Harding nominated to be Collector of Internal Revenue, has been virtually beaten in the Senate by the action of Senator Hiram Johnson. Blair was given this job of chief of the Nation's tax-collecting organization because of political services to Harding. He had been instructed by the North Carolina voters to support Johnson in the Republican national convention; he voted on every ballot for Harding. Johnson denounced his appointment, in the Senate, as "the price of perfidy and treachery to the people," and pledged himself to resist the payment of similar obligations by Harding to every other delegate in the Chicago convention who broke faith with the voters.

So many Senators flocked to Johnson's side of the dispute that Penrose's committee advised Harding to withdraw the nomination. It was their political judgment that the deal was a bit too "raw" to be safe for the administration.

Plants with white blossoms have a larger proportion of fragrant species than any others.

NEW BRITISH INSURANCE ACT.

The Unemployment Insurance Act of 1921, effective March 3, 1921, increased the weekly rate of unemployment benefit to 20s. per week for men and 16s. per week for women, with half rates for boys and girls. From July 4, 1921, increased weekly contributions will become payable, viz, 11d. for men (6d. from the employer and 5d. from the worker), and 9d. for the women (5d. from the employer and 4d. from the worker), and corresponding half rates for boys and girls. During each of the periods, March 3, 1921, to November 2, 1921, and November 3, 1921, to July 2, 1922, a maximum of 16 weeks' benefit may be drawn. From July 3, 1922, a maximum of twenty-six weeks' benefit may be drawn in each insurance year.

Workers in the trades covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1920, draw benefit under section 3 of the new Act, provided they were employed in any of those trades in not less than twenty weeks since the beginning of 1920. In the case of ex-service men and women and merchant seamen, covered by the out-of-work donation scheme now in operation, such employment in ten weeks will be sufficient, and in proper cases the requirement may be waived altogether. It is a further condition of benefit under section 3 of the new Act that applicants must be normally in employment in an insured trade, genuinely seeking whole-time employment and unable to obtain it. Applications for benefit under section 3 of the new Act will be subject to scrutiny by the local employment committees, representative of employers and employed. In addition to the requirements set out above, applicants for benefit must satisfy the ordinary rule that they be capable of and available for work and unable to obtain suitable employment. Moreover, any applicant losing his employment through misconduct, or owing to a trade dispute, or leaving it voluntarily without just cause, will be disqualified for benefit. The existing rights of ex-service men and women and merchant seamen to out-of-work donation remain unaffected, although, of course, donation and benefit can not be drawn concurrently.

JUGGLING THE FIGURES

In an effort to appropriate credit for some of the benefits to the country which are direct results of the Seamen's Act, and in order to perpetuate an expensive and useless bureau, the United States Shipping Board recently issued the following:

"The work being done by the Shipping Board's Sea Service Bureau toward the Americanization of crews on American ships is shown in a statement issued by Admiral W. S. Benson, Chairman of the Shipping Board, at Washington. It has been the aim of the Board since its establishment to do all it could toward manning American ships with American men. That work and aims of the Board have not been without results is demonstrated by the increase in the percentage of Americans being placed on ships by the Sea Service Bureau. In 1917 when the Board first started to place men on vessels, at the port of New York for example, the Americans, below the grade of officers, available and placed were less than 10 per cent of the number required. During the month of February, 1921, 76 per cent of the men below the grade of officers placed at New York were American. In order to give a picture of the whole development, I might say that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the Shipping Board's Sea Service Bureau placed on American ships 160,863 men, of which number 65 per cent were Americans. The development during the past few months has been as follows:

December, 1920	67.7% Americans
January, 1921	72.7% Americans
February, 1921	77.2% Americans
March, 1921	80.9% Americans

These figures cover the percentage of Americans placed throughout the United States. The figures show that since 1917 the percentage of Americans placed has been changed from 90 per cent aliens and 10 per cent Americans to 20 per cent aliens and 80 per cent Americans. The Sea Service Bureau is the only agency through which Americans are given prefernce on American vessels. The results accomplished by the Bureau show the necessity for its continuance if the ships which have been built by the Government are to be manned by Americans in order to make them useful as Naval and Military auxiliaries in case of war.

HUGE SHIPPING PROFITS

amount necessary to maintain a family in health and decency, and $179 and $124 respectively less than the amount necessary for a single man.

"The maximum earnings of firemen are actualy $620 less adequate to maintain a family in health and decency now than in 1914. Seamen's earnings are $565 less adequate now than in 1914.

Cost of Living Declines Insignificant

"These calculations include the comparatively slight decline that has taken place in the cost of living. Latest official U. S. Government figures show that these declines have amounted to only from 5 to 8 per cent in the principal seacoast towns.

Baltimore	8.2%
Boston	6.3%
New York	8.1%
Norfolk	5.9%
Philadelphia	5.9%
Savannah	5.1%

"The facts show no reason in justice or necessity for wage reductions in the shipping industry. Such proposals at this time by the shipowners indicate their participation in the present nation-wide attempt by capital to "liquidate labor." The figures prove, however, that "liquidating labor" in this instance at least is merely a euphemism to cover a desire for wartime profiteering during peacetime readjustment."

It will be noted that in summarizing earnings of firemen and seamen for the year allowance is made for only one month of unemployment.

Owing to seasonal, broken and uncertain runs, continuous turnover, and unemployment periods under normal conditions, the figures for total yearly earnings of firemen and seamen in a great number of cases could be based upon eight or nine months' service instead of eleven months, as in the foregoing tables.

The charges of criminal syndicalism against W. Costley and Floyd Ramp, arrested at San Francisco recently, have been dismissed by Judge Lazarus because of lack of evidence.

The salmon fishermen's strike on the lower Columbia River was terminated by agreement, whereby fishermen accepted 10 cents a pound for Chinook salmon of twenty-five pounds weight or larger, and 9 cents a pound for smaller fish.

A reduction of 20 per cent has been anounced in the wages of 11,500 employes of the Oliver Mining Company, a concern owning extensive mining interests on the Meseba and Vermillion ranges in Minnesota and and Marquette and Gogebic ranges in Michigan.

By the 1st of June, approximately two thousand shipyard workers employed in the San Francisco plant of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation will be laid off because of a marked cessation of shipbuilding activity and the failure to receive new contracts.

Last week at St. Paul, Minn., the United States Circuit Court of Appeals set aside the first of the four counts in the indictment on which twenty-five members of the I. W. W. were convicted and sentenced to varying terms in the Leavenworth Federal penitentiary from the Federal District Court of Kansas.

Seven large paper mills in the United States and Canada, employing approximately nine thousand men, shut down May 11, because of failure of workers and owners to sign new agreements to replace those which expired.

The biennial convention of the Brotherhood of Firemen and Oilers at Wheeling, W. Va., adopted a resolution urging that Tom Mooney, now serving a prison term in connection with the San Francisco Preparedness day bomb explosion, be given a new trial.

The Building Trades Council of San Francisco have decided to enter the building material business. This movement became necessary when independent contractors who had signed up with the unions were unable to obtain material for their building purposes. It is alleged that [illegible] are withholding supplies from contractors willing to pay union wages.

Increase in the number of child employes in the United States has been almost exactly proportionate to the increase in total population in the last eight years. Statistics compiled by the Children's Bureau show that 78,164 minors took out permits in twelve representative cities in the country to go to work in 1920. This compares with 67,169 in 1913, an increase of 11 per cent.

Domestic and Naval

It is estimated that it will require an approximate of forty-five thousand men to harvest the 1921 crop in the State of Kansas.

The United States Shipping Board has notified various operators of the approval of Gosgrove Cleverdon, Inc., as average adjusters for Shipping Board vessels. W. T. Cleverdon is well known in coastwise maritime circles, having been in the business since the Alaskan gold rush.

Plans to send at least three divisions of Pacific Fleet destroyers on a summer cruise from the San Diego base are being formulated. Captain W. V. Pratt, force commander, said that a request to send several of the destroyers to Portland, Ore., for the Rose Festival next month had been received. The opinion was expressed unofficially that the request would be complied with, and that one division of destroyers would visit Columbia River points after leaving Portland.

Rear-Admiral Welles, in command at San Diego, has received radio advices from Honolulu that search for the United States fleet tug "Conestoga," which has been missing for more than a month, had been given up. The "Conestoga" steamed from Mare Island on March 27 for Samoa, via Pearl Harbor, having a heavy barge in tow. Several days after that it was reported that the tug had lost its tow in a gale and was trying to recover the barge. That was the last word received from either craft by the Navy Department. The search for the missing tug, on which were thirty officers and men, was carried on for several days by fifteen warships, acting with aircraft, over an area approximately six hundred miles wide and embracing all the steamer lanes as far to the northwest as Midway Island.

Eight sailors, members of the crew of the Japanese steamer "Tokuyo Maru," died from exposure after having been transferred to the United States Army Transport "Buford," from their own ship, which burned off Cape Mears, on the Oregon coast on the night of May 2. Twenty-seven survivors, including a number of Japanese women and children, were transferred to the "Buford." Some of the survivors were transferred to the U. S. S. "Snohomish," of the Coast Guard Service. According to information from the vessels that went to the assistance of the burning vessel, the steamer was transformed into a huge floating furnace within an hour from the time the ship's radio flashed the first S. O. S. at about 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon. The message was picked up by radio stations all along the Oregon and Washington coasts and by half a dozen vessels proceeding coastwise. The Army Transport "Buford" picked up the members of the crew and passengers from the water and from lifeboats, to which they had been driven by the flames. The Japanese women and children on board the "Tokuyo Maru," which is operated by the Toyo Kisen Kaisha line, were passengers who boarded the vessel at South American ports en route to Japan. The "Tokuyo Maru" left Portland, bound for Japan, carrying a cargo of 1,800,000 feet of lumber and a quantity of general freight.

Domestic and Naval

Gold ingots valued at $11,000,000 consigned to various American bankers, arrived at New York last week on the steamship "United States" from Sweden.

The first 150 bales of American cotton donated to the German children's fund by Americans has arrived at Bremen from Galveston. It is reported that more than 2300 bales of cotton already have been collected, and are ready for shipment to Germany.

The British bark "Montauk," which sailed from a Pacific port some time ago, has been sold for 2000 pounds, the ship having gone aground in Manning Straits while on a voyage from Zamboanga to Sydney. She is reported to have still on board 700,000 feet of lumber.

The Los Angeles City Administration has announced that the Federal Government had authorized the establishment of an immigration station at San Pedro, the port of Los Angeles, and that harbor officials had been instructed to start the necessary buildings, which will cost about $70,000.

At Seattle the private steamship lines operating to Alaska were recently notified by R. M. Semmes that if they fail to re-establish service to Alaska this week, he, as district director of the United States Shipping Board, will dispatch one or more government-owned vessels in that trade.

Resolutions of the Hawaiian Legislature requesting legislation by Congress to permit immigration of sufficient persons to remedy an "acute labor shortage" in the islands were presented to the Senate last week and referred to the Territories Committee. They proposed that alien immigrants admitted should not exceed 25 per cent of the total insular population, a restriction designed, it was understood, to exclude Japanese.

Opportunity for young seamen to gain experience leading toward an engineer's license was opened by the announcement of the Navy Department that oilers and wipers are wanted for the new dreadnaught "U. S. S. California." Engine-room experience is desired of applicants. Men enlisted will be rated first and second-class enginemen, with initial pay of $84 and $72 a month. Full particulars may be had at the Navy Recruiting Station, 742 Market street.

The four-masted schooner "King Cyrus," concerning which anxiety was expressed by shippers, dropped anchor off Meiggs Wharf after completing a voyage of 113 days from Suva. The vessel encountered head winds and squalls during the greater part of the trip, it was stated by Captain A. E. Rosendal, in command of the schooner, one gale blowing for fourteen days. Both the fore and mainsail were carried away, and at another time the topsails and jibs.

Shortly after the French schooner "Roi Soleil" had sailed from Papeete for San Francisco, officers of the vessel discovered three Tahitians who had concealed themselves on board in an effort to reach the United States. On the arrival of the schooner they were turned over to the immigration authorities at Angel Island, where they will be kept until the "Roi Soleil" or another French vessel sails for Tahiti. The schooner encountered bad weather on the voyage here, officers stated, a calm having been followed by a severe gale

INFORMATION WANTED

The following seamen who are plaintiffs in a suit brought against the Puako Steamship Company, owner of the Bark "Puako," who were beaten up by Captain Peterson and his son who are now doing their time, should report to this office at once to give their testimony or to Mr. Alden Ames, Mills building, San Francisco.

I have in my possession, all of the knives, loaded clubs and other instruments of brutality which were used by these officers on these men, having subpoened them from the United States District Attorney's office where they have been kept.

No less important is it that seamen and agents of the Union should report to me or Mr. Alden Ames the names and addresses of seamen and others who knew the reputation of Captain Peterson for brutality, inhuman treatment of his crew and his mental peculiarities prior to the employment of the crew of the "Puako" at Seattle, on the twenty-seventh day of April, 1918. Silas B. Axtell, Nine State St., New York City, and Alden Ames, Mills building, San Francisco, Attorneys for seamen. 4-18-21

Thos. A. Jones, 720 N. Lancaster avenue, Dallas, Texas, is anxious to ascertain the whereabouts of his son, Thos. Lenard Jones, a member of the Marine Firemen's Union of the Atlantic. 3-9-21

Mrs. Theresa Moran, 313 Richmond street, Providence, R. I., is anxious to ascertain the whereabouts of her brother, Dan Gillis, a member of the Firemen's Union, last heard of in Ashtabula, Ohio, about four years ago. Any information will be greatly appreciated. 4-27-21

News from Abroad

Feeling over the recent elections at Fiume is still strong, and conflicts resulting in deaths and injuries continue.

Santander reports that the syndicate of metallurgical workers, assembled in national congress, decided to join the Third Internationale of Moscow.

The Jugo Slav Government has ordered that measures be taken to prevent a peasants' convention from being held at Agram for the purpose of proclaiming a Croatian Republic.

A score of persons prominent in Peruvian political life, including General Oscar Benavides, former president of the Republic, were recently deported from Peru on the Peruvian liner "Paita," for alleged complicity in a revolutionary plot.

As many as fifty deaths were reported to have resulted from religious political fighting in Morelia, capital of the State of Michoacan last week. The fighting began when a Catholic demonstration against socialistic propaganda was fired upon by socialist sympathizers and a detachment of police said to have included the chief, Vincente Coyt. Many persons were wounded.

The most violent fluctuations in foreign exchange in many years occurred at Buenos Aires, May 11, throwing the exchange market into something of a state of panic. Telegraphic quotations on the American dollar fell from 1.49 to 1.22, with swift ups and downs, but recovered and closed at 1.40. The disturbance was accompanied by rumors that the Government contemplated releasing gold for export, and also that financial disturbances were going on in New York. Other reports said financial difficulties caused in commerce by the port strike were responsible.

Some two hundred destroyers, twenty-five battleships and fifty light cruisers have disappeared from the British navy list during recent months. The British admiralty has issued an explanatory announcement, saying the vessels were all sold to British firms for breaking up. This statement was the result of reports circulated in America that Great Britain was making extensive sales of warcraft to South American governments for eventual transfer to Japan. "The only ships disposed of to foreign governments since the armistice," the admiralty states, "are the battleship 'Canada' and two other vessels, all of which were sold to the Chilean Government, for which they were originally built; one sloop to Denmark; two sloops to Portugal and one sloop to Belgium."

The French seem to enjoy spy scares as much as we do here in the United States, and hardly a week passes without a sensational plot being discovered, but they invariably end in fiascoes. The latest spy scare has just been blown sky high with the release of Colonel Kostewitz, a Russian, who was arrested in Boulogne a month ago, when it was discovered that he was secretly studying mysterious designs and charts. Colonel Kostewitz was engaged by the British army to explode shells left by the British forces in munition dumps in Northern France. After long inquiries, the French police are satisfied that Colonel Kostewitz's charts, instead of being plans of channel coast fortifications, were really only technical papers used by him in his work.

With the Wits

At a banquet given by a large body of educators, the speaker of the evening rose and began his address with the words, "Long live the teachers!" He was interrupted by a tall, emaciated young man who rose from the rear of the room and in a sepulchral voice queried, "On what?" —Everybody's Magazine.

Howell—Last night was the hottest night in the year.

Powell—Not for me; the hottest night for me was when my wife discovered that my pay had been raised and I hadn't told her.—New York Sun.

Saving Money.—Mrs. Doughless—I saved the money to buy this coat, darling.

Doughless—How did you manage it, precious?

Mrs. D.—I bought it with the money you gave me for a new hat and had the hat charged to your account. — The American Legion Weekly.

Hefty Comeback.—English Tommy (in poker game)—Well, I'll wager a bally pound on this.

American Darky (holding four aces)—Ah dunno too much about yo' ol' English money, but I'll bump you a couple a' tons.—Purple Cow.

Not That Kind of a Bird.—An old dame at a railway station asked a porter where she could get her ticket. The man pointed in the direction of the ticket office.

"You can get it there," he said, "through the pigeon-hole."

"Get away with you, idiot!" she exclaimed. "How can I get through that little hole? I ain't no pigeon!" —Houston Post.

The train was going up a very steep grade, and with unusual difficulty the engineer succeeded in reaching the top. At the station, looking out of his cab, the engineer saw the new brakeman and said with a sigh of relief: "I tell you what, my lad, we had a job to get up there, didn't we?"

"We certainly did," said the brakeman, "and if I hadn't put on the brakes, we'd have slipped back." —Tom Dreier in Forbes Magazine.

Taylor's Nautical Academy

Established 1888

Consular Building, Corner Washington and Battery Streets, Opposite New Custom House, San Francisco, Cal.

THIS OLD AND NOTEWORTHY SCHOOL is under the direct and personal supervision of CAPTAIN HENRY TAYLOR and equipped with all modern appliances to illustrate and teach any branch of Navigation.

The class of teachers of Navigation in the past have been those having simply a knowledge of Navigation, and Navigation only. Conditions have changed, and the American seamen demand a man as a teacher with higher attainments than one who has only the limited ability of a seaman. The Principal of this School, keeping this always in view, studied several years the Maritime Law, and is now, in addition to being a thorough teacher of Navigation and its kindred subjects, a regularly admitted Member of the Bar.

There is no standard of education required of a pupil entering the School, for no matter how ignorant the seaman may be, even in the rudiments of common education, Captain Henry Taylor will teach and raise him from the depths of ignorance to the height of the average well informed man, and in a comparatively short interval of time.

LIVING STANDARDS HELD LOW

Remuneration of Workers Based on Principles of Mere Existence

The business community has its mind set upon wage reductions. "Labor must be liquidated" is the chorus that resounds across the country. Until wages are lowered prosperity will not return, it is argued. Others say that houses cannot be built at present wage levels. The railroads and steamship lines insist that pay decreases are the prime condition of their financial solvency. The clothing industry has urged that a reduction in wage rates was prerequisite to breaking the consumers' strike. A powerful conviction that labor costs must be scaled down is operating througout the nation. So dominant is this feeling that the United States Steel Corporation, which a few weeks ago announced that it would not reduce wages until the cost of living justified a lowering, felt impelled last week to lop 20 per cent from the pay rates. The Steel Corporation is the biggest single business entity in the United States but not even its force was sufficient to withstand this insistent demand which is so wide-spread. Where labor is organized the unions are challenging this demand with varying degrees of success. The textile workers, semi-organized, have experienced severe reductions. The unorganized workers in automobile factories, when they have had work at all, have found employment at greatly lowered rates. The issue in the shipping strike, where the present demand is for a 15 per cent cut is, however, still in the balance. The United States Railroad Labor Board has reached no decision, although both the railroads and the unions have presented a mass of evidence to fortify their respective positions. In the printing industry in different places reductions have been accepted by the unions after arbitration proceedings. The building trades unions, which in many cities are on strike because of the unwillingness to work at lowered rates, announced last week that they would arbitrate the question. The unions too, it can be fairly said, although they have resisted the exact reductions demanded of them, have begun to yield to the belief that a lowered wage level is inevitable. They are in the "trading" state of mind. The economic movement to them also seems to be irresistible. Their effort is to modify it as much as possible.

In such a situation it behooves the public, in whose name so many of the changes are demanded, to consider the facts broadly and to seek to discover any principles which may be used to govern the movement in progress. Are there any principles which may be applied to wages? To answer this question it is necessary to examine the controversies which have been passed upon by arbitrators, for in such proceedings attempts have been made to state wage principles. The principles which have emerged and which have been used in wage arbitraments have not, however, been universally applied. For only the economically strong, that is to say the organized, have been able to obtain arbitration. Workers who were not members of powerful unions have had their wages fixed by their employers. In their cases other principles have been used.

Until 1915, except in the entrenched trades, it is accurate to say that the law of supply and demand governed wages in the United States. How this operated might be illustrated in many ways. A case from Chicago will, however, suffice. Some fifteen years ago teamsters in that city sought a wage increase. The group in question was being paid $2 a day. They made a cost-of-living study which proved that it was impossible at the existing level of prices for them to maintain their families with such incomes. Their employer examined their figures and pronounced them to be correct. "But," he added, "I can hire teamsters for $2 a day and if you can't live on that, others are willing to try." That was the principle which fixed wages generally. Labor was a commodity and labor got no more than the law of supply and demand permitted. The "going rate," the market price, was given and it was given with an utter disregard of the social consequences it entailed. In March, 1915, according to the last report of the New York State Industrial Commission, the average wage paid in the New York factories was $12.65 weekly. Numerous studies, national and State, showed that the great majority of adult male workers had far less than enough to support families in health, not to mention comfort. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Federal inquiries into immigration, into the condition of women and child wage-earners, into the steel industry, added the force of their weight to make clear that one conclusion. Many State reports fortified it. The great majority had too little.

The social consequences of this inadequacy were dire. The studies of the Federal Children's Bureau, for example, manifested the fact that infant mortality bore an inverse ratio to the annual earnings of fathers. In a given town among those families where the earnings of men were above $1,000 the death rate of children during the first twelve months of life was about eighty out of every thousand; where the earnings were less than $10 weekly the death rate was over two hundred and fifty in every thousand. In the South the relation between pellagra and insufficient earnings was laid bare. Tuberculosis was also found to be a disease of poverty. Studies of school children manifested the probability that many millions, a third to a fifth of all the children in the nation, it was reckoned, were suffering from underfeeding. Public opinion reached no general conclusion as a result of these demonstrations, although such men as the late General W. C. Gorgas stated boldly that an increase in income offered the greatest possible hope of improving public health.

An increase in income came with the war. For the first time women who had previously from necessity left children in order to supplement the earnings of their husbands were able to find their place in the home. Tuberculosis was reduced to a low level. The condition of the people improved and that despite the acute housing shortage which almost everywhere was suffered. Wages, curiously, went relatively much less high in the organized industries than in the unorganized. The Bureau of Labor Statistics showed, on the basis of an index number of one hundred representing full-time union earnings in 1913, that wages had risen to 189 in 1920. This was an increase in wages hardly proportionate to the change in the value of money.

In the unorganized industries, such for instance as rubber, the wage increases were relatively greater. The skilled trades, with such exceptions as those involved in shipbuilding, did on the whole scarcely more than maintain their position. This position, however, was privileged, in that in 1914 a skilled artisan could in most unionized trades support his family while the unorganized worker could not do so without assistance from his wife and children.

Such roughly is the situation which calls for the application of some guiding principle. In this country, during the period of the war, one rule began to obtain a wide approval. It was the principle of the living wage. Industry, it was held, ought to pay not merely the market rate, but a living wage. The National War Labor Board applied this principle. Congress wrote it into the Transportation Act, in spite of the fact that most railroad employes got less than a living wage at the time the law was passed. Can it now be utilized? It clearly is not being applied. The wage of a common laborer under the new rate announced by the United States Steel Corporation is $4.05 a day for ten hours' work. Judge Gary stated that the twelve-hour day would be eliminated within a year. Previously he had said that the seven-day week had been abolished. A ten-hour day for three hundred and thirteen days a year would net a steel worker $1,267.65. This is not sufficient to support a man, his wife and three children according to any estimate of the cost of living under present conditions. The wages proposed by Admiral W. S. Benson for the shipping industry also disregard the cost of living. The new rate for a fireman on Class C steamers is $75 monthly. Even with free board on ship this will not maintain a family. The average weekly wage paid in New York factories during March was $26.97 which also was less than is called for by a minimum budget.

The questions then arise: Can American industry afford to pay living wages? Is the cost of living a sufficient principle to determine the payment of workers? Is it needful for the great majority of workers to work for wages which will not enable them to maintain families? Is this the price which prosperity inexorably exacts? Is there a remorseless law of supply and demand which overrides the rule of the cost of living? In Australia an approach toward a solution of these questions has been made. Justice Higgins has referred to the living wage as a sacrosanct principle. Australian industrial courts have ruled that industries which could not pay living wages had no right themselves to live. In this country apparently we are not ready for such a doctrine. We hold rather that industry is not sufficiently productive to warrant the payment of rates computed on the basis of the cost of living. In doing this our practice controverts our conscience. Every American insists that the cost of living measures a level below which none should sink, but few Americans are persuaded that it is practicable to apply such a creed. Yet it must in time be applied. Mere subsistence is not of course the summit of the aspiration of workers. When men are strong enough they demand a share in prosperity, a share in the good things of life. The railroad brotherhoods have reached that place in the economic ascent. But for the masses of toilers the cost of living is still the goal. They seek not comfort but security. Is the American genius capable of satisfying this demand? The present trend of wage discussion gives small reason for hope.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION

The following opinion, rendered by Judge Neterer, in the Southern Division of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, is of great importance to seamen.

The ruling sustains the right of a crew to first and prior charge against the vessel and fully interprets the provisions of Section 4529, Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, Compiled Statutes 8320, which provides that

"Every master or owner who refuses or neglects to make payment in the manner hereinbefore mentioned without sufficient cause, shall pay to the seamen a sum equal to two days' pay for each and every day, during which time his delay beyond the respective periods, which sum shall be recoverable as wages in any claim made before the court."

"The fact that a receiver was appointed for the Claimant (Intervening Libelant) cannot shift the burden for non-payment from the ship to the wage-earner, especially where the ship was already in the custody of the Admiralty Court."

The Opinion follows:

IN THE SOUTHERN DIVISION OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

FIRST DIVISION IN ADMIRALTY

Richard J. Spencer, C. V. Miller, R. H. Councill, Tim Harrigan, Franklin Adrean, Jr., Frank Garlock, Birger Johansen, Fritz Shilling, Axel Johnsson, John Lahtimen, William H. Crawford, J. B. Hughes, Walter S. Austin, Leon A. Carter, Campbell A. Hobson, W. Owens, W. C. Ward, N. E. Austin, Charles V. Smith, H. D. Wright, Robert Dougle, John Lopez, William Ovid, S. J. Ryan, G. Garfield, and D. W. Davis, Libelants, vs. The American Motorship "Benowa," her engines, boilers, tackle, machinery, apparel and furniture, Respondent. Pacific Motorship Company, a corporation, Claimant. The Commonwealth of Australia and William Morris Hughes, Attorney General of said The Commonwealth of Australia, for said The Commonwealth of Australia, Intervening Libelant. (W. E. Gerber, Jr., Substituted Intervening Libelant.)

No. 17132. Supplemental Decision. Filed May 17, 1921.

Ira S. Lillick, Proctor for Libelants.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, Proctors for Respondent and substituted Intervening Libelant, W. E. Gerber, Jr.

Neterer, District Judge.

The libelants, on January 21, 1921, signed articles with the master of the steamship "Benowa," at the Port of Baltimore, to ship on a voyage from the Port of Baltimore to via one or more coastwise ports to one or more ports on west coast of the United States, and final port of discharge on west coast of the United States, for a period not exceeding three calendar months, "and if crew is discharged on the west coast, transportation will be paid back to Port of Baltimore, Maryland."

The vessel arrived in San Francisco February 28, and was discharged March 17 at the Port of San Francisco.

On March 8 an action was commenced by the Commonwealth of Australia and others, plaintiffs, vs. Pacific Motorship Company, a corporation, and others, defendants, owners of the "Benowa," praying the appointment of a receiver. The receiver was appointed on the 26th day of March for eleven motorships, including the "Benowa," and for the interests of the defendants in thirteen other ships. The receiver qualified on the 28th of March.

This libel was filed on March 15. On arrival of the vessel in the Port of San Francisco, there was a scarcity of provisions on the steamship "Benowa" the claimant being unable, apparently, to supply the same; but the master and crew remained on the ship. The receiver did nothing for the physical care of the ship, or for supplying the same, or for the supplying of any provisions, the ship being in the custody of the United States Marshal.

Demand was made upon the master for 50 per cent of the wages earned on the voyage upon arrival at the Port of San Francisco. Payment was refused by the master, it then not being determined whether discharge would be made at this port, and he being unable to pay because of the financial condition of the company. The master and crew, except two or three members of the crew, remained on the vessel and discharged the routine duties of the vessel, which was lying at anchor. No provisions being furnished, the men not being paid, and being without means of support on the 10th of March, 1921, the following agreement was entered into by the officers and members of the crew with J. R. Wilson, Inc.:

> "We the undersigned officers and members of the crew of the M/S 'Benowa,' do hereby agree to pay from our subsistence money or wages, a pro rata share of accounts, for stores supplied by the firm of J. & R. Wilson, Inc. to us, on presentation of accounts by said firm, mentioned above, upon payment to us of above subsistence or wages by our attorney, as will be due us from above named vessel.
> "We will authorize Mr. Spencer, first mate, and Mr. Crawford, chief engineer, to check all accounts for us, though in case of necessity, accounts will be open for inspection by members of the crew."

This being signed by all of the libelants, was endorsed as follows:

> "J. R. Wilson, Inc.: On the above order, I agree to withhold from any payment that may be made me for subsistence of crew and to pay you on approved bills (by Mr. Spencer and Mr. Crawford) the amount that may be due you for provisions so furnished. Ira S. Lillick, Attorney for above named crew."

The receiver, in his testimony as to what he did with relation to the "Benowa" states:

"The only action that was taken was to address a letter to the master of the ship, enclosing a notice to the crew advising them that the 'Benowa' was in my hands as Receiver, and notifying them that their services were no longer required, and they were ordered to get off the ship."

The notice was dictated and sent out on April 1, 1921. No payment was made or tendered to the officers or crew, nor any arrangement made for their subsistence.

On the 27th day of April the following tender in writing was filed in this proceeding:

> "Now comes William E. Gerber, Jr., and hereby offers to pay to libelants herein the sum of fifty-six hundred and nine and 20/100 Dollars ($5609.20), being wages due to libelants in accordance with the shipping articles mentioned in the libel herein, up to and including the 17th day of March, 1921, which said sum is herewith deposited with the clerk of this court.
>
> "Said Willian E. Gerber, Jr., likewise offers to pay to libelants their costs heretofore incurred herein.
> "Said William E. Gerber, Jr, likewise offers to furnish to such of libelants as may desire the same, transportation in accordance with said shipping articles."

On or about May 5, 1921, the "Benowa" was released from the receivership. On May 10 Gerber was substituted as intervenor in place and stead of the Commonwealth of Australia.

On the 27th of April, 1921, the parties hereto and Messrs. Thacher & Wright, appearing for McIntosh-Seymons Corporation, Henry C. Peterson, Inc. and E. C. Genereux, appeared before the Court, and such proceedings were had that an order was entered referring this cause to Francis Krull, United States Commissioner, to take the testimony and report findings and conclusions. Testimony was thereafter taken and returned into this Court.

On the 14th of May, 1921, a decision was filed. On the 16th of May, upon the suggestion of Thacher & Wright, the matter was reassigned for argument on the 17th of May, at which time appeared Ira S. Lillick, Esq., and Arthur Olson, Esq., appearing for Libelants, and Felix Smith, Esq., representing Messrs. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, for Respondent and Substituted Intervening Libelant, W. E. Gerber, Jr., and Messrs. Thacher & Wright appearing for McIntosh-Seymons Corporation, Henry C. Peterson, Inc., and E. C. Genereux.

It is the contention of the Libelants that they are entitled to wages earned under the shipping articles, less amounts paid, either cash, or from the "slop-chest," together with penalty provided by Section 4529, Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, Compiled Statutes 8320, while the Intervenors and Claimant contend that the only liability that should obtain is the amount of wages due on March 17, that because the financial condition of the Claimant "is sufficient cause" to avoid the penalty thus provided.

The contention that the Libelants are not entitled to their wages at the time of the discharge of the cargo on March 17 and the statutory penalty thereafter is not well founded. There is no ground for controversy with respect to the wages which were earned and which were due. The provision of the section invoked is:

> "Every master or owner who refuses or neglects to make payment in the manner hereinbefore mentioned without sufficient cause, shall pay to the seamen a sum equal to two days' pay for each and every day during which time his delay beyond the respective periods, which sum shall be recoverable as wages in any claim made before the court."

The contention that the penalty is a personam liability and may not be impressed as a preferred lien with the wages is likewise out of harmony with the plain sense of the statute, which provides that pay for delay of payment shall be recoverable as wages in any claim made before the court. It is, in effect, an increase of wages on the failure of the master to promptly pay.

> Covert v. British Brig "Wexford," 3 Fed. 577; The "Charles L. Baylis," 25 Fed. 862.

And when wages are earned and are due, there is no ground for controversy as to the right to receive payment, the only contention being that the inability of the Claimant to pay because of lack of funds is "sufficient cause" to avoid the penalty, clearly the intent of the statute is not to hold the wage earner responsible for the financial inability of the ship to meet its wage obligations. Wages are a first and prior charge against the vessel. It would be manifestly unjust, in some instances inhuman, to discharge a seaman without payment of wages, without means of support, excusing a ship from the plain provisions of the statute fixing a penalty for default which in no sense was caused by the seaman. The seaman is a ward of the Court of Admiralty, and he may not be discharged many miles from his home port without wages and without means of sustenance, and bear the penalty which the statute places upon the ship. The purpose of the statute plainly is that the seaman shall be protected against enforced idleness and non-subsistence by being required to wait for payment of his wages when he is without fault and no sufficient cause exists other than the financial inability of the ship.

> The "Amazon," 144 Fed. 153.

And, likewise, the Libelants are entitled to transportation, together with subsistence en route, for all such as desire to return to their home port.

The fact that a Receiver was appointed for the Claimant cannot shift the burden for non-payment from the ship to the wage earner, especially where the ship was already in the custody of the Admiralty Court. I know of no case, and none has been called to my attention, where a contrary rule has been announced in this or any other District upon a like state of facts.

A decree may be presented in accordance with this opinion, the vessel sold, the proceeds applied to the payment of the claims of the Libelants, and the balance to remain in the registry of the Court, subject to further disposition with relation to any claims which may be decreed against the same.

This decision is to supersede that filed on May 14, 1921, which is hereby expunged from the record.

Judge.

Dated: May 17, 1921.

ADDITIONAL PACIFIC COAST MARINE

Work has begun on the installation of a refrigerating system in the steamer "West Camargo," now at the Union Construction Company's yard. The installation is expected to be completed late in June.

With the arrival in port of the Admiral Line steamer "Senator," the Pacific Steamship Company completes its withdrawal from the East Coast trade of Central America and Mexico. Previously the company took off the steamer "Admiral Farragut" so as to fill in the coastwise passenger service in making up the schedule when the steamer "Governor" foundered in Puget Sound.

The Government has some extensive plans in view to be worked out in favor of the Coquille river bar this season, and work will be started at once with a capable line of dredges and tenders, including a twelve-inch suction dredge, a rock dredge and the Government tug "Wilson." The suction dredge is a new machine just being finished at the Kruse & Banks shipyard at North Bend, and its purpose is to dredge from the bar at Bandon between four and six feet of sand which covers rock which is to be removed to provide a greater depth of water and safe conduct for ships entering and departing. This sand must be taken out before the rock is available for work by the rock dredge, which uses a blasting outfit. The suction dredge will carry a large yardage of sand and this will be taken to sea in tow of the "Wilson" and dumped. The Government will also complete an annual survey of the lower Coquille river, between Bandon and Coquille, and probably as far as Myrtle Point.

Would Give Away Alaska

A bill introduced in the House would create the Alaskan Development Board, which would have power to give away the natural resources of that immense country. This board would have control over the national forests, water powers, bird reservations, agricultural experiment stations, fisheries, game and fur-bearing animals and the unreserved public lands of a territory more than one-sixth of the total area of the United States. The bill would evict from Alaska the various departments of government and set up a form of administration wholly different from anything that exists in any State or territory. Even the President could not disturb the board except for neglect of duty and malfeasance in office, and the only control Congress would have would be to withhold appropriations or repeal the law creating the board.

In opposing the bill Secretary of Agriculture Wallace shows that if the board refused to grant or renew any application, entry, patent, lease, permit, license of privilege in Alaska, the applicant could appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, but if, on the other hand, the board should grant the application, that would end the matter.

As an indication of the untold wealth that would be at the disposal of this board, responsible only to itself, Secretary Wallace shows that there are 20,000,000 acres of national forests in Alaska, created between 1902 and 1908.

"We have in Alaska," says the Federal official, "the opportunity to create a second Norway."

Reason for Opposition

The reason big business wants the excess profits tax removed was shown in a decision by the United States Supreme Court, which has rejected the claim of the La Belle Iron Works that increased valuation should be considered as invested capital and is therefore not taxable.

In 1904 the company bought iron ore lands in Minnesota for $190,000. In 1917 this property increased in value to $10,000,000, which the company covered by a stock issue and carried it under invested capital.

The company resisted the Government's attempt to collect taxes on this increased value of $52 for every dollar originally invested, on the ground that the $10,000,000 stock issue represented invested capital.

In denying this claim the court said that every line of the law "shows evidence of a legislative purpose to confine the account to such items as were paid for in stock or shares specifically issued for it and to their value 'at time of such payment.'"

Hundreds of millions of dollars in taxes are involved in the decision, as there are few partnerships or corporations which do not carry on their books an item showing substantial sums resulting from increased value of capital assets. According to the Supreme Court's decision, these valuations are not exempt from taxation.

While the decision shows the real reason why big business wants the excess profits law repealed, it also illustrates a major reason for high prices which business places on its products to pay dividends issued on increased valuation that is generally a matter of bookkeeping.

Railroads Seek to Degrade

Would some railroad managers be satisfied if they were permitted to employ Chinese?

Testifying before the Senate committee that is investigating the railroads, Julius Kruttschnitt, official of the Southern Pacific Railroad, said private corporations are employing unskilled labor for $1.80 and $2.50 for a ten-hour day and the railroads want the same right.

In his plea for lower wages the official was forced to shatter several high-wage illusions. He showed that the latest Interstate Commerce Commission report gives the information that in the last three months of last year the railroads employed 276,829 track laborers, who were paid $3.78 for an eight-hour day.

Mr. Kruttschnitt did not inform the committee how he would like to support a family in these times on $22.68 a week, but he did plead for a ten-hour day and a wage rate of $1.80. He said this would save the railroads $550,000 to $600,000 a day—and, incidentally, go a long way toward guaranteeing a 6 per cent return to railroad stockholders.

Will Resist Reaction

At a conference of trade unionists and farmers in Lincoln, Nebraska, it was agreed to circulate petitions for a referendum on three reactionary laws passed by the last Legislature. The obnoxious statutes are:

Anti-picketing.

Prohibiting the establishment of a bank in any community unless it can be "conclusively shown" that there is a public necessity for such bank. This law makes a dead letter of the co-operative bank law because of the power that banks wield in their respective communities.

Providing that every country voter must register with the county clerk and make oath as to his party affiliation. The clerk is directed to refuse to register a voter who fails to give a satisfactory reason why he wishes to affiliate with another party.

Shipowners Camouflage

In an effort to create hostile public opinion against striking seamen and marine engineers, shipowners at Baltimore, Md., are printing advertisements in the daily press that "foreign agitators are using the strike to destroy the American merchant marine."

These same shipowners, together with Admiral Benson of the United States Shipping Board, refused the request of seamen and marine engineers, before the strike, that Americans be given first preference in employment and that second preference be given workers who have declared their intention of becoming American citizens.

World's Workers

A shortage of beer is reported throughout the United Kingdom generally as one of the consequences of the lack of coal, due to the miners' strike. This has led "Punch" to remark that it feared something serious would eventually happen.

It is reported that the coal workers of Antwerp, who struck in sympathy with the British coal miners, resumed work on May 17, and have again gone out on strike. The previous return was due to a misunderstanding.

The workers of Argentine believe in 100 per cent organization. Recently the Claqueurs, boys and men whose vocation is to create applause in the Buenos Aires theaters, have demanded the right to be unionized as a regular part of the theatrical profession.

A general strike in Norway has been called for May 26. The Central Labor Department has called out members of all unions in support of the Seafarers' Councils and Maritime workers; 126,000 will cease work. Government workers, railroad men, hospital attaches, and Fire Department are excluded from the order.

The general industrial situation in Belgium is steadily growing more complicated. Whereas the mechanical construction and the cement industry continue comparatively prosperous, the condition of other staple lines, especially metallurgy, glass, and textiles, remains unimproved—unemployment and shutdowns becoming more frequent. Labor difficulties, while not widely extended, have occurred with increasing frequency in connection with projected wage decreases or with diminished working hours.

The average wages of skilled workmen in Hungary are from 400 to 600 crowns weekly, representing average yearly earnings of 20,800 to 31,200 crowns. In contrast to this, the average yearly income of 6900 teachers in Budapest is 13,000 crowns and that of 5700 employes of the City Administration, 12,000 crowns. The average weekly wages of an unskilled workman are 300 crowns. The fact that wages have risen from fifteen to twenty times as great as in 1914 means nothing to the worker, due to the correspondingly rise in cost of living, which has risen about fifty times as great. Conditions under which teachers in Budapest find themselves are intolerable.

Australian trade unionists are resisting the general movement to cut wages. Advantage is being taken of the unemployed army, and the public press assures the workers that "it is the consensus of opinion" that rates should be reduced. "There is not the slightest justification for the specious argument that wages are too high," says the Australian Worker. "If there is any charge upon industry that has to be lopped off, let the process be confined to the extravagant profits taken out of the pockets of the Australian public. It has been shown that during the war, under the thin guise of patriotism, the very capitalists who today howl for wage reductions plundered the workers unmercifully. There never was a decent standard of comfort for the basic wage workers of this country. They have never been able to live under conditions to which, as creators of the wealth of the commonwealth they are entitled."
